ALEXANDER DOWIE DIES SAYING, "I'LL RETURN IN THOUSAND YEARS."

"Millennium Is Here," Declares the Noted Religious Leader as He Closes His Eyes for Last Time—End of Man Who Called Himself "Elijah the Restorer" Characterized by Utterances in Keeping With His Life.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, March 9.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] "The millennium has come. I will return in a thousand years."

With these words on his lips—the last he ever spoke—John Alexander Dowie, holding in death to his belief that he was the reincarnation of the prophet, Elijah, and divinely appointed, breathed his last at Zion City this morning at 7:40 o'clock. He died of a broken heart, his friends say. The official statement gave Bright's disease as the cause.

Dowie's death was sudden. He had been ill for years and said to be at the point of dissolution many times, but his unconquerable will and tremendous vitality had enabled him to laugh in the face of the destroying angel time and time again. When he retired to his bed in Shiloh House at the usual hour Friday night, there was no intimation that the end was nearer than it had seemed many times before.

As the morning hours brought with them the gray light of dawn, he sat up in bed and called to his side the faithful watchers who have attended him night after night. He told them his belief that he had not long to live.

"It is nearly over," he said to Freeman Haehmel, his personal attendant, as the clock in the big reception room below tolled on in musical tones the quarter hour before 4 o'clock.

The word that the great leader had nearly reached the termination of his remarkable career went forth quickly. Soon, early as was the hour, everybody in the city that he had built up with such labored care and loving tenderness knew his end was near.

FRIENDS WITH HIM.

Judge Barnes, his long-time friend and faithful adherent to the last; Sina Hanson, his librarian and secretary; Deacon Schad, one of his loyal advisers, and Frank Hartsfield, an attendant, were called in, and this little group comprised all the persons present when he expired.

Dowie had often been seized by attacks before, but he now admitted that death was close. Overseer Wilbur Voliva, the man whom he had most to blame for his dethronement, was notified that Dowie was dying, and requested to hasten to the bedside, but he did not come. He sent word that he was ill, but today there was much criticism, even among his own people, because he failed to receive the last message which his former commander is believed to have had for him.

As the moments went, byt the dying apostle sang in a clear, strong voice his favorite hymns. "Joy Cometh in the Morning," "Joy to the World, the Lord Has Come," and "Am I a Soldier of the Cross?" were the anthems that passed his lips, while his attendants wept and vainly tried to bring him back to a realization of things temporal.

At times he was delirious, and imagined himself once more a leader among his people, clothed with the power that at one time was almost kingly, and he admonished them to righteousness in the old way and with the old fervor.

His strength was almost past belief, and the watchers were for a long time reluctant to believe his own declaration that he was at the grave's verge.

He did not once mention the name of his son, Gladstone, or that of his wife, nor did he enter into any reproaches of his enemies.

Even Voliva's name went unpronounced, but when Judge Barnes asked him if he would like to see his chief accuser and avowed enemy, he shook his head eagerly in an affirmative manner and the new general overseer was summoned.

VOLIVA NOT PRESENT.

"My husband is ill. He has tonsolitis," said Mrs. Voliva, when the emissaries from the death chamber arrived. "He cannot go."

"But Dr. Dowie is dying. There is no mistake this time. Tell your husband to come quickly, or he will be too late."

Mrs. Voliva returned with a repetition of her former message.

"He will be there tomorrow," she said. "He cannot come now."

At 6 o'clock Dr. Dowie had grown weaker. His voice no longer possessed any strength, and sank into a whisper.

Finally he sank back on the pillow and for a long time only his labored breathing broke the silence of the sick room. Then, about ten minutes before he died, he sat up in bed and made the statement that has caused all Zion to discuss it in awe-struck whispers:

"I will return in a thousand years."

He was not delirious when he said this, according to the tired watchers. His old vivacity had again returned, and his eyes had gained their old luster as he spoke. Ten minutes later he was dead.

There was no more sleep for Zion City. Groups of citizens gathered about the residence which had for so many years been his home and gazed at the open windows of the bedroom in the second floor, where he had breathed out his life.

Many tried to gain admittance, but all were refused. Mrs. Dowie and Gladstone, at Ben MacDhui, the home that he had given his wife, as a love offering, were notified, and over the long distance telephone the pair who had deserted him in his extremity, and whom he had forgotten on his deathbed, were told of the demise of the husband and father.

"Bury me at Lake Mound Cemetery, when I die, by the side of my daughter, Esther," he had told his attendants early in the evening before the crisis came upon him. "I want to rest by her side."

ONE WAS LOYAL.

She, at least, had been loyal to him until her untimely death by fire, and perhaps she would have remained so even after the accusations of his enemies. At any rate, he liked to think so.

No doctor was present when the "apostle" died, but during his last illness many doctors had called upon him and had been allowed to question him about his condition.

It was strenuously denied at Zion City yesterday that he had ever taken any medical treatment.

Emil Wetten, his attorney, said: "Many a time he has come to me with the tears streaming down his cheeks and has declared that he could stand all his financial troubles and other worries of administration, but that the way his friends had treated him when he was absent in Mexico on a vacation, absolutely necessary for his health, was more than he could bear. I am convinced that he suffered more [illegible] spirit than from any bodily ailment.

Most of the men who sat at his council table were men who owed everything they had on earth to him. He was absolutely crushed to find that [illegible] been accepting his generosity and bounty, should in a recreant moment prove unfaithful to their trusts.

Dowie's remains will lie in state for several days. The funeral arrangemenst will be made tomorrow. That

Los Angeles Limited Is Not Discontinued Permanently, Says Railroad Official.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, March 9.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A story was sent out from Omaha today that the "Los Angeles Limited" trains operated by the Northwestern, Union Pacific and San Pedro railroads would be discontinued next Monday because the Nebraska Legislature passed a 2-cent-maximum passenger rate law.

According to an executive officer of the Northwestern Railroad the truth is that the "Los Angeles Limited" train was discontinued temporarily because of a serious washout of the San Pedro tracks at Caliente, Cal.

Severe washouts that had caused a stoppage of through passenger service on that road for several weeks had just been repaired when the latest washout occurred.

KENTUCKY SOIL HAS DIAMONDS.

EXPERT FINDS RICH FIELD IN BLUE GRASS REGION.

Authorities Believe Mineral Lands Will Yield Gems of Variety and Value Rivaling South African Production, and Estimated Property Is Worth Fifty Millions.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHARLESTON (W. Va.) March 9.—"We will be washing out diamonds equal to any of the South African product within thirty days. In sixty days this will be the most talked-of place in the world."

So spoke City Engineer John Sanborn today, as he described a tract of ground thirty-five miles from Huntington that, he says, will develop the richest diamond field in the world. The new diamond bearing outcrop of mineral and earthy formation lies in Elliott county, Ky., only a short distance across the line. Here is the crater, apparently, of an extinct volcano. The mineral, Kimberlite, found in what is called a pipe, is identical with that found in the Transvaal.

Already on the surface have been found the following gems: Garnets of the variety known as pyerope; ilmhits, jet black in color, and usually found in two-carat size; olivine, rich green in color, which takes a fine polish and is used for jewelry.

Besides these there have been found diopside, being emerald in color, and mica, besides a number of other kinds of lesser gems.

Gen. Samuel Pearson, who lately arrived from South Africa, after looking over the ground, stated that he was certain diamonds would be found in the crater of the extinct volcano. The deposit is exactly the same.

David Draper, geologist from Johannesburg, Transvaal, has examined the ground and makes the statement that he never saw such geological formation outside of South Africa, and that judicious working will make the property worth $50,000,000.

STEAL MILLION BUYING UP INK.

SUCH IS CHARGE AGAINST ENGRAVING BUREAU EXPERT.

Federal Attorney Is Now Considering Prosecution—Printing Fluid Worth Twelve Cents Is Bought by Government at Forty-five Cents and Sixty-six Cents Per Pound.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, March 9.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] United States District Attorney Baker is now determining whether a prosecution will lie against any individual or individuals as the result of the discovery in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, from 1898 to 1905, ink was bought at from 45 to 66 cents a pound, while since then it has been secured for only 12 cents a pound.

After an investigation by the Keep Commission and the secret-service men, the facts have been turned over to Baker, who has not yet submitted his opinion on the matter. Charges were preferred by certain manufacturers in connection with the matter last year, when the new contracts were to be let. At about this time the ink expert of the bureau resigned his position.

It has been estimated that the high prices paid for the ink resulted in a waste of the government money amounting to $1,000,000.

LANDFIELD WEDDING NOTABLE.

Marriage Knot of Californian to Princess Rostovsky Tied by Three Ceremonies.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CANNES (France) March 9.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The wedding this week of Princess Luika Lobanoff Rostovsky, lady of honor to the Czarina and dowager Czarina, and Jerome Baker Landfield of California, was a notable one. Three ceremonies of marriage were performed—first, the couple were bound by the French civil formula, then by an American clergyman. The religious ceremony in the Russian church next day, with its setting of wonderful frescoes, its crown bearers in glittering uniforms, with the flickering light of the torches dancing on jewel-incrusted robes, more resembled an ancient Byzantine rite than a modern wedding.

The Czar's family and the court of St. Petersburg were well represented in the church.

NICARAGUA INSULTS AMERICAN MINISTER.

Soldiers Drive Envoy Merry from Legation and Seize His Papers.

Diplomat and President Zelaya Use Their Fists in Dispute Over Claim and Local Guards Interfere. Holds Platoon at Bay With His Drawn Revolver. He Goes to Costa Rica.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW ORLEANS, March 9.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] United States Minister Merry has been driven out of Managua, the capital of Nicaragua, by soldiers, his cablegrams and mail seized, and the United States flag insulted by President Zelaya.

Merry, at last accounts, had closed the legation and was in Costa Rica.

These advices were brought here by passengers on several ships from Central American ports. The news is confirmed by a prominent resident of New Orleans, just back from the tropics.

Minister Merry and President Zelaya had a stormy interview following charges that Mr. Merry's official papers and dispatches had been tampered with, and Merry intimated that Zelaya was to blame.

THEY HAVE FISTICUFFS.

A fist fight was the result and guards in the Zelaya mansion had to interfere.

When Merry attempted to close the legation in response to instructions from Washington, and board his vessel for Costa Rica, Zelaya sent a file of soldiers to the landing under command of the Nicaraguan Minister of War.

The troops pursued Merry on board the ship and attempted to secure his papers. When the Minister of War and his men started up the vessel's ladder Merry with drawn revolver, warned them to desist, or he would kill the first man who came on deck.

HOIST AMERICAN FLAG.

Merry hoisted the American flag and declared the vessel, a foreign ship, to be under the protection of the United States.

The vessel proceeded to San José, and that is believed to be the present headquarters of Merry. It is learned that Merry was prosecuting a claim for $30,000 against Nicaragua at the instance of Samuel Weil, of New Orleans, and that Zelaya decided to seize all documents bearing on this matter in order to thwart payment.

MRS. EDDY'S LETTERS INDICATE INSANITY.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BOSTON, March 9.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Former Senator William E. Chandler and his legal assistants in the suit to rescue the venerable and decrepit founder of Christian Science from her jailers at Pleasant View, are in possession of amazing evidence.

The evidence is in the form of letters bearing the familiar signature of Mrs. Eddy, real or forged, as the sequel will show. These letters are all addressed to the aged writer's only son, George W. Glover. They show the writer to be of either weak or senile mentality.

These Eddy letters, now carefully guarded in a safe deposit vault at Washington, are confidently expected to invalidate every transaction made by Mrs. Eddy in the last fifteen years. Some of the letters follow, in part:

PLEASANT VIEW,
Concord (N. H.) Jan. 11, 1907.

My Dear Son: The enemy to Christian Science is led by the wickedest powers of hypnotism and is trying to do me all the harm possible by acting on the minds of people to make them lie about me and my family. In view of all this, I herein and hereby ask this favor of you. I have done for you what I could and never to my recollection have I asked but once before as a favor of my only child. Will you send to me by express all the letters of mine that I have written to you? This will be a great comfort to your mother if you do it. Send all, ALL of them. If you will do this for me, I will make you and Mary some presents of value, I assure you. Let no one but Mary and your lawyer, Mr. Wilson, know what I herein write to Mary and you.

With love, mother,
M. B. G. EDDY.

BOSTON (Mass.) Oct. 31, 1887.

Dear George: Yours received. I am surprised that you think of coming to visit me when I live in a schoolhouse and have no room that I can let even a boarder into. Besides this I have all I can meet without receiving company. I must have quiet in my house and it will not be pleasant for you in Boston. The Choates are doing all they can by falsehood and public shames, such as advertising a college of her own within a few doors of mine when she is a disgraceful woman and known to be and I am going to give up my lease when this class is over and cannot pay your board nor give you a single dollar now. I am alone and you never would come to me when I called for you and now I cannot have you come.

I asked you to come to me when my husband died and I so much needed some one to help me. You refused to come then in my great need and I then gave up ever thinking of you in that line. Now I have a clerk who is a pure-minded Christian, and two girls to assist me in the college. These are all that I can have under this [illegible].

When I retire from business and into private life then I can receive you if you are reformed, but not otherwise. As ever sincerely,

M. B. G. EDDY.

PLEASANT VIEW.
Concord (N. H.) March 27, 1893.

My Dear Son: I was delighted to hear from you, but sorry to hear you must take your bed after the work you performed. I shall give you little peace or release from teasing you over your daughters until I hear you have put them under the instructions of a good music teacher and they will be able to play the piano finely when they come to see grandma.

Now, darling, just remember that if you do not care to be teased well nigh to death by me, then you must do this at once. Give much love to all your family. With love for you.

YOUR MOTHER.

IMPROVEMENT CONTINUES.

Condition of Archie Roosevelt Grows More Encouraging and Doctors Are Optimistic.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

WASHINGTON, March 9.—The improvement noted in the condition of Archie Roosevelt today over that of yesterday when for a time much apprehension was felt, has been maintained tonight. It is officially announced that the patient is in excellent condition and that there are no unfavorable conditions.

MUCH MONEY INVOLVED.

DETROIT (Mich.) March 9.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Something like a quarter billion dollars were represented in the assembly room of the Hotel Cadillac today when Gov. Warner listened to the argument for and against the bill recently rushed through the Legislature for the immediate purpose of preventing the Calumet and Hecla Company from securing control of the Osceola. The bill as framed prevents any mining company from voting shares it has acquired in a competing company. The Bigelow Syndicate is contesting the Calumet and Hecla's effort to secure a voting control in Osceola.

WATERLOO IN THROES OF UNION-LABOR RIOT.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WATERLOO (Iowa) March 9.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The wildest rioting that Iowa has seen since the street-car riots in Dubuque, in June, 1903, characterizes the situation now prevailing here.

Violent assaults by the mob upon C. M. Cheney, general freight and passenger agent of the road; threats of violence against, and attempts to break into the residence of C. D. Cass, the general manager; the hold-up of a car between Waterloo and Cedar Falls, and a pitched battle with revolvers—these were a few of the incidents of the past twenty-four hours.

The arrest of a mob member named Feigner; the assault by members of the mob upon Mayor Rector; the stoning of a waiting-room; the dispersal of the mob single-handed by Cecil Parks, a company recruit from Nashua; the turning of a fire hose on the mob from the roof of the waiting-room—these were other events of the wildest night and day in the history of Waterloo.

A thousand strike sympathizers wearing badges, "I'm walking," and singing "Everybody walks, even father," are parading the main business streets tonight.

All cars are guarded by police and no one is riding. The police were called to the house of C. D. Cass, general manager of the company, where hundreds of men were gathered and were hurling stones, rattling doors and peering into windows.

Mrs. Cass is prostrated. Several arrests are ordered. In front of the down-town waiting-room hundreds of people are assembled. When a car appears they surround it and jeer, catcall and cry "scabs."

Missiles are hurled at cars and the rumble of exploding torpedoes reminds one of a Fourth of July celebration. All saloons will be closed, and the police are now apparently so powerless to quell the disturbers that the State militia may be called out.

SACRAMENTO.

WILD SCENE IN SENATE.

Lieut.-Gov. Porter Causes Row in Upper House.

Effort to Table Report Is Not Successful.

Sunday Sessions to Be Held. Anderson Snubbed.

BY B. FRANK GREAVES.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SACRAMENTO, March 9.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Wild disorder reigned for a few minutes in the Senate chamber tonight as the result of an arbitrary ruling by President Porter during the consideration of reports on the conduct of the jute-bag industry at San Quentin Prison. Loudly protesting against the ruling by the chair that the reports be laid on the table, several Senators dashed madly up the aisles, waiving their arms and crying "roll call." On a viva voce vote the "noes" clearly were in the majority, they demanded a roll call, but it was denied. Then the storm broke.

Quickly Senator Boynton, who, with Senator Bell and a few others, has led in the fight for clean legislation, moved that the reports be taken from the table. The roll was demanded on this and a majority voted with Boynton and Bell. Senator McCartney of Los Angeles, who has a habit of getting off wrong, voted against the motion.

Many complaints have been made that jute bags manufactured by prisoners at San Quentin are bought up immediately by speculators, and that farmers are denied an opportunity to obtain them at first hand and at the lowest price.

A committee was appointed to investigate the complaint. A majority report was submitted, finding that irregularities have existed and suggesting a remedy to be applied next year. Senator Boynton handed in a minority report, urging that the speculators be cut out at once.

He declared the sale of bags had not been advertised properly by the prison directors. Senator Belshaw, one of the directors, said Boynton was right. The Senate, with a few exceptions, was ready to sustain him.

On the urgent request of Senator Curtin, however, Boynton agreed to permit the matter to go over one day, and the storm was at an end.

Still another row broke on adjournment, when a motion was made for a Sunday session and declared carried before a protest could be entered.

Senator Anderson is opposed to sessions on Sunday. He rose to debate the motion. The chair would not recognize him. Anderson said it was a "hanged shame," the way he was treated.

THE BEGINNING OF THE END.

LEGISLATURE IS PREPARING FOR FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Senate Considering Only Assembly Bills and Assembly Only Senate Bills and That Plan Will Be Followed Until End of Session—Many Bills Die on Files.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SACRAMENTO, March 9.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Under joint rules adopted by both houses, the Senate at 5 o'clock this evening stopped the further consideration of Senate bills, and the Assembly acted likewise with respect to Assembly measures. This marked the real beginning of the end. Until the close of the session at noon on Tuesday, nothing but Assembly bills will be considered in the upper house, while the Assembly will do what it can toward clearing up the accumulation of Senate measures. Hundreds of bills of various sorts have been left on the files of each house.

The last Assembly bill passed by that house was the one introduced by Assemblyman Hammon of Los Angeles, providing for a survey of a highway from the northern to the southern boundary o the State—the Camino Real Bill—which already has passed the Senate under Carter's name.

Before it got through this afternoon the Assembly took a parting shot at two measures introduced by Davis, a Democrat, of San Benito county.

One provided for abolition of the party circle on ballots and for the adoption of the group system in arranging the names of candidates. The other was a constitutional amendment, submitting to the people the question as to whether or not the initiative and referendum should become a part of the political machinery of the State. Both were voted down.

The Senate was more courteous to one of its Democratic members, Cartwright, of Fresno. It passed his anti-trust bill, which is modeled on the Ohio statute, under which the Standard Oil and other monopolies have been brought to book. What may happen to this bill when it reaches the Assembly on Monday is a matter only of conjecture.

A hybrid production, supported by one or two Republicans, and the same number of Democrats, also was defeated in the Senate. It proposed to do away entirely with the politax. It met a quick fate.

Among the Assembly bills which died on file, greatly to the relief of automobilists of the State, is that which called for a road tax of from $5 to $25 on every machine. Another is the Joan bill, requiring "hand holds" on every auto.

RUBBED BACK SPLITS HOME.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BELLINGHAM (Wash.) March 9.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Alleging that her husband practiced osteopathy on her sister against her wishes, Mrs. Rose Wellman is seeking to secure a divorce from H. M. Wellman in the Whatcomb county Superior Court. The application for a divorce is bitterly contested by the husband.

The defendant maintains that he gave the osteopathic treatments to his wife's sister because she was an invalid. Mrs. Wellman testified that on several occasions her husband took her sister in one of the rooms with the announced purpose of giving her osteopathic treatments.

The husband told his wife not to be selfish, and claimed he was rubbing the sister's back to cure her of illness.

BOW THE KNEE TO LABORITES.

LAWMAKERS DRIVEN LIKE SHEEP BY TOTEM GANG.

Crowning Effort Was to Perpetuate Eight-hour Day by Making It Part of Constitution and Forty-seven Assemblymen Vote for It—Measure Lacks Few Votes.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SACRAMENTO, March 9.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Out of fifty-six Assemblymen voting today on the question, just nine had the backbone to stand firmly against the threats of the union labor lobby and to vote against a constitutional amendment fixing eight hours as the limit of a day's work by any person employed for wages in California.

The amendment was lost, but it was not the fault of forty-seven legislators who voted for it. Seven more such votes and the matter would have been up to the Senate.

The nine who had the courage of their convictions are Thompson, Cogswell and Case of Los Angeles county, Chandler and Drew of Fresno, Strobridge of Alameda, Percival of Lodi, Costar of Butte, and Sackett of Ventura.

Fratessa, a labor-union agitator of San Francisco, introduced the measure, and it was urged on the floor by Coghlan of the same city. No arguments were presented in its favor, the totem club was sufficient to swing many weaklings into line for it.

The amendment, which was introduced only a few days ago, provided that no person should be compelled to work for more than eight hours in one calendar day, except in cases of emergency, and that the Legislature should provide for the speedy and efficient enforcement of such a law in the event that the amendment was adopted at the polls.

Introduction of the amendment was encouraged by the complacency with which the present Legislature has bowed its neck to the union-labor yoke. It has passed a number of eight-hour laws that are declared to be wholly unconstitutional, among them being the one fixing an eight-hour day for employés of street railroad companies. Already the street car men of San Francisco are preparing to demand the eight-hour day.

Realizing that they could not sustain many of these laws in court, and that free men and women would continue to work just as many hours a day as they pleased, for the increased compensation that would accrue to them, the laborites slipped in the constitutional amendment, hoping thus to fix the eight-hour day for all time. Had seven of the nine opposing Assemblyman voted with the majority today the amendment would have been adopted by the Assembly, and would have taken its chances in the Senate.

BUCKET SHOPS BEWARE.

DEALS IN MARGINS MAY STOP.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SACRAMENTO, March 9.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Assembly today adopted the constitutional amendment sent to it by the Senate, prohibiting the fictitious buying and selling of shares of the capital stock of corporations on any stock board, stock exchange or stock market and involving all contracts for the purchase or sale of such stocks without an intention to deliver or to receive. Should the people vote for the amendment at the next election, deals in margins would end in California.

LICENSE FOR HUNTERS?

IF GOVERNOR SIGNS BILL.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SACRAMENTO, March 9.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Hunters may have to pay a license, after all. The Assembly today reconsidered the vote by which it defeated the Willis bill yesterday and reversed the decision then recorded. Should the Governor sign the bill, every local hunter will have to pay a dollar a year for his sport, those from other States must pay $10 and foreigners $25. A metal tag will be the sign of authority to slay game. Objection has been raised to the terms of the bill, on the ground that each hunter will have to journey to his county seat to obtain a tag. The proceeds of the license, it is provided, shall be used by the Fish and Game Commission in the performance of its duties. It was asserted on the floor of the Assembly that this organization will not enforce the license law.

PROTECT POLICY HOLDERS.

INSURANCE STANDARD FIXED.

[BY DIREC. WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SACRAMENTO, March 9.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] After worrying its way back and forth in committee and through Senate and Assembly, the standard form insurance policy got back into the upper house tonight for its final "go." Some slight objections were made to concurrence in the Assembly amendments, but they went through, with only one dissenting vote. Riders are permitted on the standard form, but when they diminish the liability of the company, it is provided that they be printed in red ink, in type larger than that used in other conditions of the policy, and that, when such riders are attached, the fact shall be set forth in words in red ink at the head of the policy, announcing that the policy contains provisions that are not found in the California standard form. It is provided further that all such riders shall be signed by persons accepting policies.

FINDS SERIOUS BLUNDER.

MATHEWS IMPORTANT WORK.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SACRAMENTO, March 9.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Through the watchfulness of Attorney W. B. Mathews, of the Los Angeles Aqueduct Commission, a serious and possibly fatal defect was remedied in the bond law, under which the Owens River bonds are to be sold. A mistake of the printer was not discovered until the bill had passed enrollment and was in the hands of the Governor. The quick eye of the lawyer caught the significance of the error, a correcttion was made and the bill in proper form probably will be signed early next week.

INVESTIGATE SHANNON.

STATE PRINTER MUST EXPLAIN.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SACRAMENTO, March 9.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The office of State Printer Shannon is to be investigated. The Assembly today adopted a resolution called upon the Speaker to name a committee of five to inquire into the conduct of the office and to report at the next session of the Legislature. Assemblyman Jury, who is a printer, and who has been foremost in advocacy of an investigation will be one of the members. Defects of a serious nature are charged to the management of the State Printing Office.

NO DIVORCE REFORM.

SENATE VOTES IT DOWN.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

SACRAMENTO, March 9.—All divorce reform legislation was killed today when the Senate defeated the bills prepared by the International Divorce Congress, which were introduced by Senator Anderson and had for their purpose the effecting of reforms in the divorce laws of this State.

The bills were the uniform divorce laws recommended by the National Divorce Congress which convened in Washington last year and to which every State sent delegates.

The proposed laws required personal service on the defendant, residence of one year in the county and requires the District Attorney to be present in all divorce proceedings. It also provided severe penalties for collusion and fraud.

NO STRAW VOTE.

"CANDIDATE'S BALLOT" KILLED.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

SACRAMENTO, March 9.—Stetson's direct primary bill, which provided for a "candidate's ballot" at primary elections and for an expression of the people as to their choice for United States Senator, was killed in the Senate this afternoon by a vote of 21 noes to 11 ayes. The bill differs from the Held constitutional amendment providing for a direct primary law, in that it does not eliminate conventions, but seeks to bind delegates to the choice of the voters.

For three hours the Senate chamber resounded to political oratory. Party spirit broke loose and the speakers delved into political history from Washington's time to the history of the election of United States Senator in the extra session of the Legislature in 1900. Willis, Wright, Wolfe and Leavitt led the opposition, and the principal point of attack was the provision for the expression of the voters for United States Senator, which was designated as merely a "straw vote." The bill was introduced by a Republican in the Assembly, where it passed, but in the Senate its supporters were the seven Democrats and five Republicans headed by Belshaw. Sanford and Caminetti made a strong fight for the measure.

REMOVES THE "BUG."

HARBOR BILL AMENDED.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SACRAMENTO, March 9.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Savage's bill confirming leases to tidelands throughout the State was amended in the Assembly today in such manner, it is believed, as to remove its objectionable features. Jere Burke dropped in opportunely when the matter came up. He ventured no protest. Assemblyman Cutten of Humboldt county, who feared that his rights in the Eureka Harbor might be affected, drafted the amendment, which provides that the State shall confirm only such leases as may have been made between the years 1903 and 1907. The original bill contained no time limit.

Assemblyman Leeds of Los Angeles, who introduced the companion measure in the lower house, suggested that the prior date may be made 1901. Cutten assented and the amendment was so adopted. The bill will come up for final passage on Monday. Its form is believed to be satisfactory to the Miner syndicate at San Pedro.

NOT TO HIS LIKING.

VROOMAN AMENDMENT VETOED.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SACRAMENTO, March 9.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Gov. Gillett has vetoed the amendment to the Vrooman Act, under which the levying of an assessment is fixed as conclusive evidence of the regularity of all prior proceedings. The change was desired by contractors, but the argument was made that it would redound to the benefit of the public, in that an additional charge of approximately 20 per cent. is made on all contracts in order to cover losses sustained under the present system. The Governor explained his veto by stating that no opportunity for relief would be allowed in the event that work was not satisfactory.

Another Slap at the Press.

SACRAMENTO, March 9.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Assembly today passed the Wright bill, previously passed by the Senate, prohibiting newspapers from influencing or attempting to influence jurors in reaching a verdict in any civil or criminal trial. The bill now goes to the Governor.

ASK SHARE OF HIS ESTATE.

YERKES'S BUSINESS ASSOCIATES DEMAND $1,789,670.72.

Suit Is One of the Largest Ever Filed in Cook County Probate Court—Claims Are in Connection With Magnate's Holdings in London Underground Railroad.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, March 9.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Claims aggregating $1,789,670.72 were filed against the estate of the late Charles T. Yarkes in the Probate Court today. The amount is one of the largest ever filed as a claim against an estate in the Probate Court of this county. There are four claims which make up the amount, two of them being filed by a company in London, England, and one by New York corporations.

The claims are: Speyer Brothers, London, $379,619; Speyer Brothers, London, $253,079; Speyer & Co., New York; $367,302; Underground Electric Company, London, $789,669.

The claims are filed in connection with Yerkes's holdings in London of the Underground Railway Company enterprise.

The foreign claims were prepared in London and forwarded to Chicago in connection with the New York claims, and all four documents were filed by Attorney John P. Wilson in the Probate Court today.

The troops in garrison at Spanish provincial centers have been confined to barracks in anticipation of trouble during the elections today.

Mrs. H. C. McCulley, the dressmaker, is now located at Hotel Milton, 539½ S. Broadway, room 19.

RADICALS IN LONDON CRUSHED IN DEFEAT.

Overwhelming Victory of Unionists Almost Astounding—Political Situation Fast Changing—Conservatism Now Molding England's History.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, March 9.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A great change has come over the political situation. In the London County Council elections, which include nearly the whole of the metropolitan area, the Unionists gained a victory so complete as to be absolutely astounding.

Alarm was caused by Socialism which has received a staggering, sobering blow, but the defeat of the London Radicals, or "Progressives," as they are fond of designating themselves, is something more than a local event. It is recognized all over the country as a political disaster to the Imperial government, and it is believed that the aggressive policy which Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman intended to pursue against the House of Lords will now be very materially modified, if not entirely abandoned, at all events for the time to come.

It is only a little over twelve months since the Radicals come into power with a thumping majority, chiefly on the battle cry against Chinese labor on the Rand, but bi-elections in Briggs, and South Aberdeen, and municipal elections in London indicate that what the Unionists call "national disillusionment" is working more rapidly than the most far-seeing of the political opponents of Campbell-Bannerman could have anticipated.

There are signs on many sides of a revival of powerful Unionist forces and of discomfort and disarray in the battalion enlisted under the Radical banners. In South Aberdeen, and the municipal elections—the rally of conservative and Unionist forces—is more powerful than anything that has happened since the time when the Unionists came into power after the introduction of Gladstone's Home Rule Bill.

In the London County Council elections, no fewer than forty-eight seats were won from "Progressives" or Radicals.

The general result is, roughly, that whereas the municipal reformers, or Unionists, constituted only one-third of the last Council, they number two-thirds in the new.

The great victory of the same party at the Borough Council elections last November furnished the first positive evidence that modern radicalism, with its submission to the pressure of extreme views, had not obtained an exclusive hold upon public favor.

Municipal reformers, who are mainly conservatives, or Unionists, have won a great victory twice over since the general parliamentary elections when the Radicals were returned.

The County Council elections were regarded as something more than a big municipal fight. It was a trial of political strength, and, according to rumors in the parliamentary lobbies, is likely to bring about a change in the tactics of the Radical government. It is believed that Campbell-Bannerman will not rush to an early doom by challenging the Unionist country on home rule for Ireland, or, as to the statutes of the House of Lords.

Unionists fear that there is now no prospect of dissolution during the next two years, since the best chances for the Radicals now is to hang on as long as they can.

But what about the Irish Nationalists. They have to be reckoned with, and they are lying low at Westminster. This is what Campbell Bannerman desires, but it is like holding a wolf by the ears.

It is equally dangerous to hold on or to let go. In the meantime the Nationalists intend to conduct a vigorous campaign on Irish soil. There are to be innumerable political meetings and processions.

Ulster protestants, too, are preparing for a strenuous fight. They believe that any powers which the Irish Parliament might enjoy would be used to worry and injure them; that their trade and manufacture would so far as possible be diverted to Dublin and the Catholic provinces; that their philanthropic and educational institutions would be interfered with; that every device to insult and harass them would be resorted to, and that a thriving and industrious population whose sympathies are entirely with England and Scotland, whence it came, would be made to suffer in mind and estate, if not also in body, for its loyalty to the British connection.

Passionate protests are coming thick and fast from Ulster against any serious proposals to hand them over to the tender mercies of an Irish Parliament.

"Here," they said, "lies the difficulty which England cannot evade without dishonor or neglect, and without risk of civil war."

The battle will rage anyway, hither and thither, between the two Irish forces, even while matters seem peaceful at Westminster.

The Prime Minister must sooner or later introduce home rule, and then will come a scattering of his forces, because the moderate liberals in his party believe that attempt to realize home rule leads up to a towering and unscalable wall of impossibility.

The divisions in the Irish ranks have weaned many men from his belief in the all-sufficiency of more political activity, and have made Irish people more amenable to projects of other kinds. They begin to see that their salvation must be worked out and that the millennium cannot be "taken in."

BELLINGHAM (Wash.) March 9.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Mrs. Henry Oertili, of this city, has risen from what her physicians pronounced her death-bed to confront a tombstone ordered for her by her husband.

A Bellingham doctor told Oertili that his wife would surely die of cancer within a few days. Straightway the sorrowing husband repaired to a tombstone factory and ordered a handsome monument. It was completed with names and dates about the time Mrs. Oertili rose from her couch, strangely strengthened and far from the brink of the grave.

Now Oertili is wondering what to do with the tombstone, and the whole family is wondering with him. They do not know whether to offer it to the manufacturer at reduced rates or hold until it can be used for the purpose intended.

The Oertilis are well known in Bellingham society, and the eldest daughter is a respected member of Spokane society.

Bonaparte Says Opinion on State Aided Immigration Is Clear Enough.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

BALTIMORE (Md.) March 9.—Atty.-Gen. C. H. Bonaparte was tonight seen at his residence by a representative of the Associated Press and asked for some elucidation of his opinion recently submitted to the President relative to the assistance of immigrants by States prior to July 1, when the new immigration law goes into effect. The Attorney General said he could read the published opinion sufficiently clear to make further elucidation unnecessary. It was pointed out to Bonaparte that some lawyers who have examined the opinion have expressed doubts on the points and he was asked for a yes or no answer to the question, whether a State may induce immigration otherwise than by advertising. The Attorney General declined to give a specific answer either way, again referring to the ample clearness of the opinion submitted by him to the President.

MAYOR GIVES HIS VERSION.

Schmitz Explains Exclusion Conference.

Denies Concessions or Back Down by Board.

Claims Big Share of Credit for Compromise.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

SAN FRANCISCO, March 9.—Mayor Schmitz today issued a statement, addressed to the people of San Francisco, in which, after stating that "as a matter of course," he had not expected fair treatment by the newspapers, he relates at length the conference on the Japanese question held at Washington between the President, the school board of this city and himself.

The Mayor asserts that, without surrendering any of he rights of the people, he and the school board succeeded in opening the way for the immediate exclusion of Japanese laborers, as well as for a stronger treaty, and an absolute exclusion law at the next session of Congress.

In his statement, Mayor Schmitz said:

"The President, Secretary Root, the Board of Education and myself held six conferences at which we thoroughly considered every phase of the public school question relative to the Japanese, as well as the probabilities of enacting Japanese exclusion legislation before the adjournment of Congress. We were informed by California's representatives in Congress that they had done everything possible to obtain legislation by any treaty, or otherwise, providing for the exclusion of Japanese laborers, skilled and unskilled.

"They had not succeded, and they corroborated the statement of the President that no exclusion law could be passed at this session, but that the steps had been taken toward the enactment of the desired law at the next session of Congress.

PRESENT VIEWS.

"During our various conferences with the President we presented at great length the views of the people of this State upon Japanese exclusion, and submitted the many reasons why, from the standpoint of organized labor, the enactment of a law positively excluding Japanese laborers was most desirable. We were informed that, although the President was willing to give his aid in obtaining these desired results, it was too late in the session to pass an exclusion law, and that he was estopped from obtaining exclusion by treaty for various diplomatic resolutions, chief among which was the very earnest objection by Japan to the phraseology of the resolution of the Board of Education whereby the Japanese pupils had been segregated.

"The resolution of the Board of Education under date of October 11, 1906, to which objection was made by the Japanese, provided, in terms, that Japanese pupils should be segregated with Chinese and Korean children in the Oriental school. The offense of this solution was not so much in the segregation itself as in the placing of the Japanese on the same level with the Chinese and the Koreans.

CORRECTION SIMPLE.

"It became apparent, after a very complete discussion of the subject, that if the intent of the resolution were couched in different language, all possibility of objection would be removed by the elimination of the objectionable terms. Such a change, while not altering the policy of the Board of Education of regulating by resolution the admittance of Japanese children into the public schools would also assure the immediate passage of a law placing in the hands of the President the power to exclude Japanese laborers, skilled and unskilled. We had received the personal assurance of the President that he would exercise this power in the interests of the Pacific Coast, and in the particular interest of our workingmen.

"Under these conditions, and with this direct understanding, and with the help of the Representatives and Senators of California and the other Pacific Coast States, an amendment to the Immigration Bill (S. B. No. 4403,) was drawn, submitted to a conference committee of the House and the Senate, and passed by Congress.

"This amendment empowers the President to deny admittance to the United States of Japanese laborers, skilled or unskilled, seeking entrance by way of Mexico, Canada, Honolulu, the Philippines, the Canal Zone or any other part of the world. The amendment is now the law of the land.

"Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, who is fully conversant with everything that took place at Washington, has stated that in securing the passage of the act of February 18 last, we who went to Washington did more for the people of the country in one measure and in less time than anything else that had been accomplished since the Civil War.

NO RIGHTS SURRENDERED.

"To achieve the great results brought about, what rights were surrendered by the Board of Education and myself? None were surrendered. The October resolution of segregation was based upon the law of the State. That law we upheld; the rights of the Board of Education arising from it we maintained; that the action of the Board of Education was in violation of any treaty rights of Japan we denied and do still deny.

"In return for the present exclusion law and for a solemn promise of the great aid of the President for a more extensive exclusion law at the next session of Congress, we have simply agreed to change the wording of the October resolution, but without changing its effect.

"Those Japanese who are barred by age or other limitations in the new resolution from the primary grades, will be required to attend separate schools provided in such manner as may seem best to the Board of Education.

"The effect of the new resolution, therefore, is practically the same as was the effect of the October resolution. The main difference is that while the latter referred in terms to Japanese, the former includes Japanese among other alien races."

The Mayor's statement is followed by a memorandum setting forth more in detail the terms upon which the agreement was reached.

AS TO FLAVOR

Found Her Favorite Again.

A bright young lady of the Buckeye State tells how she came to be acutely sensitive as to the taste of coffee:

"My health had been very poor for several years," she says. "I loved coffee and drank it for breakfast, but only learned by accident, as it were, that it was the cause of the constant, dreadful headaches from which I suffered every day, and of the nervousness that drove sleep from my pillow and so deranged my stomach that everything I ate gave me acute pain.

"My condition finally got so serious that I was advised by my doctor to go to a hospital. I went to one of the largest in Detroit. There they gave me what I supposed was coffee, and I thought it was the best I ever drank, but I have since learned it was Postum. I gained rapidly and came home in four weeks.

"Somehow the coffee we used at home didn't taste right when I got back. I tried various kinds, but none tasted as good as that I drank in the hospital, and all brought back the dreadful headaches and the 'sick-all-over' feeling. At last one day I got a package of Postum Food Coffee, and the first taste of it I took I said 'that's the good coffee we had in the hospital!' I have drunk it ever since, 3 times a day, and eat Grape-Nuts for my breakfast. I have no more headaches, and feel better than I have for years. Name given by the Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. "There's a reason."

ANN ARBOR IS IN CONFERENCE.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ANN ARBOR (Mich.) March 9.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The board of control has taken final action on the situation which the board of regents put up to them. The substance of the verdict is that Michigan will remain in the conference for the present but will not countenance the big four idea that Michigan will observe the conference rules with conference colleges but retroactive features do not apply to non-conference colleges and that Michigan can schedule more games than five, but not more than five with members of the conference.

GREAT BILLIARD WORK.

Cal Demarest of Chicago Surprises New York by Fine Playing at Balk-line Game.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEW YORK, March 9.—Contestants in the national amateur billiard tournament championship twice broke the average record at 14.2 balk line yesterday. Calvin Demarest more than upheld the reputation that had preceded him from Chicago when he not only outplayed his opponent, Dr. L. L. Mial, one of New York's best amateur players, but established a new mark both in speed and execution.

In the afternoon game J. Ferdinand Poggenburg of the Liederkranz Club broke Wilson P. Foss's record for average by scoring 300 in fourteen innings. But in the evening game Demarest outclassed this mark by running out the necessary 300 in eleven innings. The great performance called forth great applause.

THREATEN RANGE WAR.

SHERIDAN (Wyo.) March 9.—Northern Wyoming is again threatened with a range war between the cattle and sheep men. Closely following on the attack on the Wisner camp last week in which 400 head of sheep were killed and the camp burned, comes the report of a greater outrage in Owl Creek country. The Hugh Dickey sheep camp was attacked by a band of twelve masked men, supposed to be in the employ of the cattlemen. The raiders drove off the sheep herders with threats of shooting, fired the camp outfit and then began shooting sheep. Out of a total of 8000 sheep in the band, 4000 have disappeared and are supposed to have all been killed.

FORGED NOTES, DRANK DEATH.

Widow's Counsel Tells of Preston's Crimes.

Left Letter Proclaiming His Religious Faith.

Declared He Had Been Insane for Some Time.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

NEW YORK, March 9.—That Leonidas M. Preston, secretary and manager of the Timkin Roller Company, had forged the name of E. R. Hewitt, one of the members of that company, to notes aggregating $57,000 to $100,000, was the substance of a statement made to the coroner today by James Shea, counsel for Mrs. Preston.

Preston died very suddenly last Thursday after drinking prussic acid, while three members of the company were awaiting to question him about the affairs of the company.

It was discovered that Preston left a note saying he had been insane for some time.

The statement by Shea was made at the Coroner's inquest into the cause of Preston's death. One of the alleged forged notes was for $5000, and was due upon the date of his death. Another for $50,000 was due April 1. In a card case found in the deceased man's clothing, Shea found the following message written on a business card:

"In case of death or serious accident to me notify my wife, Mrs. L. M. Preston, care Hotel Cumberland, New York; my mother, Mrs. C. C. Preston, Tyler, Tex.; Mrs. J. O. Matthews, St. Louis; E. W. R. Timkin, Canton, O. My wife's wishes to be considered first in all things.

"I realize that I am and have been for some time insane. I have lost my mind, my power to grasp things, my memory. I have lost everything except my firm faith in God and His Son, Jesus Christ. I am in His hands, and I leave it all to Him. He has been my refuge and strength and will never forsake me.—L. M. P."

Preston also directed that in the event of his death the full amount of a life insurance policy be paid to his wife.

Mrs. Anna C. Preston, the widow, testified that Preston was betting upon the horse races througtout his recent visit to New Orleans.

She had supposed him to be wealthy, until two days before his death, when he asked her to loan him $200. She declared he was destitute.

The Coroner said he was of the opinion that the man committed suicide and that there was no occasion to continue the inquiry upon a theory that murder had been committed.

Preston came to New York from Dallas, Tex., several years ago, and was reported to own much property near Dallas, and to be heir to an estate in New Orleans reported to be valued at $2,000,000. Investigation has not located any of his property, and Preston's associates now believe that he had lately suffered personal losses and had involved the affairs of the Timkin company.

As secretary and manager of the Timkin Roller Company, Preston received a salary of $12,000 a year. Last Thursday three members of the Timken Company called at the hotel. Preston sent for them to come to his room and then excused himself to his wife, went to the bathroom and on returning, expired suddenly before his associates arrived. It was at first stated that he died of natural causes, but an autopsy showed the pressence of poison.

NEGRO COOK ALSO IS SHOT.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

This terminated all criminal action against Davis on account of the fire.

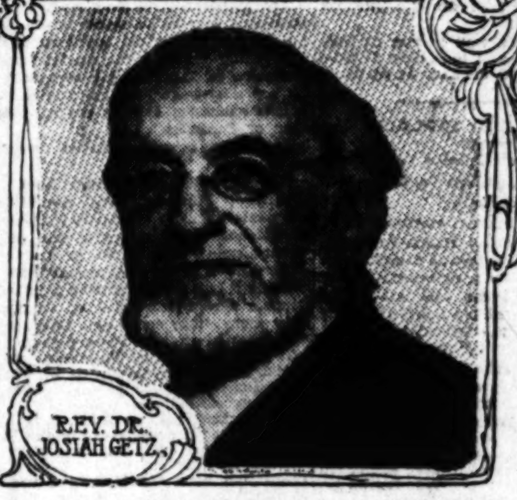
BISHOP L.H.HOLSEY



Relieved by Pe-ru-na After Three Years Suffering With Chronic Catarrh.

Rev. P. E. Swanstrom, Swedish Babtist Pastor, box 228, Grantsburg, Wis., writes:

"I feel that it is my duty as well as pleasure to let you know that I am perfectly well, entirely cured of chronic diarrhoea and catarrh. I thank you for your directions how to use Peruna, and for your kindness to me.

"I have used Peruna according to your personal directions and I am very glad that I found a medicine which would cure me after three years of suffering."

Jacob D. Ramsey, D. D., Bishop Union A. M. E. Connection, writes from 1934 Annin St., Philadelphia, Pa., as follows:

"Having heard much of the great curative power of your Peruna, we concluded to try it. For colds and dyspepsia, we have found it to be an excellent remedy."

THE vocation of preaching is a very trying one, especially to the throat and lungs. The preacher must stand before large audiences, frequently in illy ventilated rooms, sometimes over heated and other times filled with dangerous drafts. The preacher is frequently called upon to stand in such places and preside at a service an hour or more in length.

This is the most trying test that can possibly be put to the vocal organs. The liability to catarrh is very great. This is so universally true that the majority of preachers have catarrh in more or less pronounced form.

Many preachers have found Peruna of use to them, to prevent as well as to relieve the catarrhal ailments to which the preacher is constantly subjected.

Follicular pharyngitis has come to be a very common expression. It is sometimes called a preachers' sore throat. In reality this affection is catarrhal pharyngitis. Hoarseness is generally due to catarrhal laryngitis. Chronic cough is generally due to catarrhal bronchitis. All these conditions beset the preacher, and are his constant liability the whole year round.

Notwithstanding the diffidence of the clergy to give public testimony to any remedy, yet a large number of them, impelled by gratitude, have expressed their high appreciation of Peruna as a remedy for this class of ailments.

COLD SETTLED ON LUNGS

H. M. Turner, D. D., L. L. D., 30 Young St., Atlanta, Ga., writes:

"I contracted a dreadful cold which settled on my lungs. I tried several remedies recommended by the doctors, but my condition grew worse until I was alarmed.

"I finally resorted to Peruna, and I find myself well again."

Bishop Holsey's Strong Tribute to Peruna.

L. H. Holsey, Bishop, C. M. E. Church, Atlanta, Ga., writes:

"I have found Peruna to be a great remedy for catarrh. I have suffered with this terrible disease for more than twenty years, until since I have been using Peruna which has relieved me of the trouble.

"I have tried many remedies and spent a great deal of hard earned money for them, but I found nothing so effectual in the cure of catarrh as the great medicine, Peruna.

"I feel sure that Peruna is not only a triumph of medical science, but it is a blessing to suffering humanity.

"Every individual who suffers with respiratory disease will find Peruna to be a magnificent and sovereign remedy."

Convinced of the Merits of Peruna

Rev. Dr. Josiah Getz, 47 Park Ave., Albany, N. Y., for years a Rabbi of the Hebrew Synagogue, but now retired, writes:

"I am fully convinced of the merits of Peruna in cases of colds and catarrh, and as a general tonic.

"I have taken it off and on now for several years and always find that it is very effective in restoring lost strength and appetite, and very effective in ridding the system of cold. I gladly endorse it."

Rev. J. D. Dukes, Pastor of the Unitarian Church of Pinetown, N.C., writes:

"My wife has been in a very bad state of health for several years, and nothing seemed to do her any good until she began to use Peruna one month ago. Since then the color has returned to her face, and she is gaining in flesh every day, and I believe she is a well woman today."

Throat Affected by Catarrh.

Rev. H. W. Tate, 920 Lincoln Ave., Walnut Hills, Cincinnati, Ohio, writes:

"For several years I have been troubled with a peculiar spasmodic affection of the throat. It would seize me suddenly and for a few minutes I would be unable to speak audibly, and my breath would be greatly interfered with. I would be obliged to gasp for breath.

"I finally concluded that it was some catarrhal affection which probably excited the spasm. It interfered with my vocation as a preacher, attacking me occasionally in the pulpit.

"I had heard so much about Peruna as a catarrh remedy that I determined to try it. After taking two bottles my trouble had disappeared. I feel sure that Peruna has greatly benefitted me."

For catarrh of the respiratory organs, no remedy has ever been found to equal Peruna.

Alexander Dowie Dies.

the funeral will be a large one is certain, and the form that was almost neglected when it had ceased its active life, will probably be followed to the grave by weeping thousands.

DOWIE'S LAST WILL.

John Alexander Dowie's "$21,000,000" will, as the document, which left that amount to Zion City corporations, was known, has been supplanted by a newer will, drawn up for the former leader of the Christian Catholic Church by Emil C. Wetten, within the last few weeks.

Startling provisions, it is said, fill the new document, and the secrecy maintained as to its contents has proved exceedingly irritating to officials of the church.

It was openly stated by Wetten that the new will would prove a "great surprise," and that there would be a general "holding of the breath" in Zion City until it was filed for probate.

The old will provided that 95 per cent. of the estate should go to Zion City corporations, 2½ per cent. to educational settlements and city improvements, and 2½ per cent. to Mrs. Jane Dowie and Gladstone Dowie.

It was provided that all debts against Zion City and against Dowie personally should be paid. A successor as leader of the church was also designated.

DOWIE'S CONVICTIONS.

HIS "SECOND BIRTH" HERE.

"Elijah" Dowie, under oath in Judge Landis's court, affirmed in a dramatic manner that he was, indeed, "Elijah, the Restorer."

The questions and answers during the Zion City receivership proceedings follow:

Attorney Jacob Newman asked: "Are you Elijah, the Restorer?"

"I have always been," answered Dowie.

"When did you first become conscious of that fact?"

"It gradually grew—I resented the revelation, as it were, and for years I was grieved and angry at any one suggesting that I was Elijah. I am not a visionary man, I am just as practical as Jacob Newman.

"The first time I became conscious of it was when I was in Melbourne, or Sydney, Australia, while at the head of the Bible Society Committee.

"One of my deacons, McClean, told me I had a message from God. I laughed and said I wished I were away. I said: 'You go away and let me alone.'

"I went to the hall and spoke. What I said, I cannot tell. I was in the spirit of Elijah, the Baptist. I pointed out that John the Baptist was the embodiment of Elijah. Then I pointed out that the Lord Jesus Christ said that Elijah must come again before the Lord came the second time. My last idea was that I was Elijah."

DOWIE AND ZION.

THEIR GREAT STORY.

BY GEORGE W. BURTON.

The history of Alexander Dowie and his Zion makes one of the most extraordinary chapters in modern history. Here close to Chicago, the incarnation of modern materialism, we have had this city of 10,000 human beings held in subjugation under the wonderful audacity of this man, of whom twenty years ago the world in general knew absolutely nothing. Zion City is established upon some 5000 or 6000 acres of land along the borders of Lake Michigan, and here this great industrial army, held in practical slavery, has been toiling for some five years past to erect this industrial Tower of Babel.

Alexander Dowie first arrived in America in 1888. There is a bit of local coloring about his story in that Los Angeles was one of the first spots upon which, like Noah's dove, he tried to find a resting place. His reception here was not cordial and his stay was short.

This extraordinary man was born in Edinburgh in 1847 and went with his parents to Adelaide, Australia, in 1860. Here he was employed in a business house for several years. He showed very remarkable aptitude for business and threw the whole of his intense being into his work, with his only recreation a fantastic devotion to religion. He says himself, "From the age of 6 years the Savior was for me an intimate friend and since my infancy we have continued to hold these relations one with another and to discuss between ourselves all sorts of things." In 1867, being then 20 years old, Dowie returned to his native city, Edinburgh, and there for six years he studied theology at the university. His studies were so fruitful that he left there with a title of doctor of theology, returning to Adelaide in 1872. Here on his arrival he was ordained to preach, and immediately began his lifelong struggle in religious polemics. The minister of New South Wales, one Sir Henry Parks, about this time is reported to have offered Dowie the position of Superintendent of Public Instruction.

As a preacher he kept himself fairly well within bounds for half a dozen years, when in 1878 he developed his peculiar views, giving himself out as Elijah the Reformer. Little by little he developed his cult, called the first Elijah the Destroyer, John the Baptist the second Elijah, the precursor of the Messiah, and himself Elijah III, the Restorer. This last declaration was made in the Auditorium at Chicago in 1901. He immediately gave himself out as being endowed with all the miraculous powers promised in the gospel to those who believed. He claimed the ability to cast out devils, to speak with new tongues, to banish poisonous reptiles from the world, and to cure the sick by the imposition of hands.

His success in New Zealand was in no respect remarkable. He visited England and met with quite as little success. As he passed through America, he thought he found here a people fitted to understand the "new word." Returning to America in 1889, he visited San Francisco in company with his wife and two children. San Francisco seemed unfruitful soil in which to plant the seeds of his new religion, and so the prophet betook himself successively to Oakland, Los Angeles, San Diego and Portland. The west Coast was not propitious, and so in 1890 he selected Chicago as the site of the new Zion.

The world exposition at Chicago gave Dowie an admirable opportunity of spreading abroad his new doctrines over the world. The newspapers gave him a great deal of publicity and as much of this was in the shape of abuse, it afforded an opportunity to the prophet to hurl at the newspaper reporters all his exceedingly picturesque invectives and abuse. He says himself in reference to these things, "It pays to advertise."

Dowie's creed was exceedingly simple, composed of four articles:

(1.) We recognize as the rule of our faith and of our practice the infallible and sufficient inspiration of the holy Scriptures;

(2.) No person can become a member of our church without repentance and a belief in the redemption of Christ;

(3.) Each one must be able to declare from the bottom of his heart that he has repented in all sincerity, that he believes truly in God, and that he possesses in some manner the witness of the Holy Spirit;

(4.) That all other questions are nothing more than a matter of opinion which matter is nothing to the unity of the church.

The discipline of Dowie's church forbade the frequenting of theaters, the patronizing of breweries or drug stores, the use of tobacco, the employment of doctors or surgeons, the frequenting of places of bad report, concerts and dances, and the raising of pigs or the sale of their flesh or the eating of it. These latter were declared positively to be the direct cause of cancer, scrofula, cholera, tuberculosis and rheumatism. Furthermore, every member of the church was required to pay to the church a tenth part of all his earnings and income of every kind and description.

The church was governed by an administrator-general, Dowie, assisted by four subadministrators, forty-six elders under two presidents, eighteen evangelists, thirty-nine deacons, twelve deaconesses, and a company of seventy, who two by two were charged with going from house to house preaching the new religion and recruiting disciples. By 1895 he had gathered around him at Chicago 5000 disciples. The church published journals and reviews, and established colleges and charitable institutions. Missions were established at London and in Australia, and Zion also had a bank. Step by step the industrial adventures of Zion were set on foot in the shape of factories, hotels, a company to furnish water to the city, and another to furnish light. A public library was established, and all these enterprises were under the direct care and administration of Dowie, with the other members of the hierarchy to act under his immediate orders.

During these years Dowie traveled, preaching his doctrine, all the way across the continent, across the ocean to Tokio, Shanghai and Melbourne, throughout different points in China, Japan, Korea and Hindustan. He sent his immediate representatives through Africa from Cairo to the Transvaal, Natal and the Orange Free State. Every part of Europe was evangelized.

He was persecuted in Chicago, abused by the newspapers and otherwise, stoned by mobs, and arrested. In this year, 1895, which the church regards as the year of the great persecution, he was arrested 100 times. It was at this time that the prophet began to gather money for the founding of Zion proper. He bought 7628 acres about thirty-five miles from Chicago, paying for it $1,400,000. Imagine such an achievement! He had not one million cents nor anything like it seven years before this, when he first landed on American soil. Here he laid out his city as regular as geometrical squares could make it, with streets varying from fifty-five to 100 feet, and boulevards 270 feet wide, all centering around the temple. These streets ran straight from east to west and from north to south, the former designated by numbers and the latter by Biblical names. There was Aaron street, Zebulun street, Abraham street, Isaac street, Jacob street, and Moses street, and all the rest of the prophets of the Old Testament found their names reproduced in this nineteenth-century city. The gates of Zion proper were thrown open in July, 1901, and in March of the following year the city was incorporated under the laws of the State of Illinois.

Dowie's wife came from Nottingham, England. She was well acquainted with the machinery and its management by which Nottingham lace is made. This undoubtedly suggested to Dowie the first leading industry of his new city. Following this came candy factories, jewelry shops and all the different industries that made Zion the busy hive it was. One of the first institutions erected in Zion was the hospital of Elijah. It was capable of accommodating 1000 individuals, and here morning by morning Dowie gathered together every person suffering with any malady in the city and proceeded to heal them by prayers and laying on of hands.

The religious services carried on at Zion were of the most imposing character. They were led by a choir of from 500 to 700 children, dressed in wide white robes. They formed in the vestibule of the auditorium and went in processional, accompanied by the organ, to the sanctuary. Then came the deacons, clad in the same way in long white robes, and bringing up the rear was the prophet with slow steps, his bald head shining in the sunlight and his long beard hanging far down his breast. Those who saw him described his air as inspired, his eye as magnetic, and as making an impression difficult even for sane people to resist. After singing the Te Deum as in Christian churches, he proceeded to his sermon. The religious part of his discourse was flat and tame, but when he came to discuss business, it was all changed. He became absolutely eloquent and of an intelligence that was very remarkable. After discussing business, his persecutors came in for a due amount of attention and his invective was couched in the grossest terms, employing the slang of the street more copiously than the words of the English dictionary. It was no unusual thing to hear Dowie hurl his thunders against the press and the officials, calling them "stinking porkeaters." His jests were of the most vigorous style, unstudied, and indicating clearly a mind anything but well-balanced.

The journey of Dowie to convert New York in 1903 has by no means yet passed from the public mind. He was accompanied by 3000 Dowieists, carried in ten special trains. For fifteen days they held meetings in Madison Square Garden and at Carnegie Hall. But the whole attempt fell utterly flat. It seems to have been an attempt of Dowie to bolster up his failing venture. In the fall of this same year, 1903, the Chicago newspapers began to prophesy the approaching ruin of Zion. The population began to leave the city, several of the factories were closed, the creditors of the institution began to clamor for their money, and the disciples simultaneously fell from grace. This was followed by Dowie's trip to Australia, in which he has been reported to have carried away several millions of the church's money. Of course Dowie was the church and with everything under his own immediate control there was no legal way of calling him to account or making him show what disposition he made of any of the funds. Returning, he visited Mexico in search of health, and then came his successor Voliva's desertion of Dowie, rebellion against his authority, and the foisting of himself upon the remnant of the faithful left in Zion. Dowie's wife joined with this rebellious faction. Dowie proclaimed his intention of returning to Zion and blasting the rebellious with the breath of his mouth in the style of the ancient prophets, or calling down fire from heaven to consume them, or, like Moses in the wilderness, ordering the ground to open and swallow up the modern rebels against the church of God. Dowie returned, but the fire did not materialize, neither did the pit swallow up Voliva. And the breath of the old prophet's nostrils was as harmless as a morning zephyr.

It is no wonder that the whole system is falling to pieces by its own dead weight, that the dupes of this impostor open their eyes slowly and realize how they have been misled. The wonder is that all this ever came to pass or that the operation of disillusioning them did not take place years ago. There was nothing particularly new about Dowie's plan of operating industries and governing the city. It is one of those sporadic outbreaks of religious fervor impossible to account for.

EXPLOSION RELIEF.

Donation from Vancouver—Big Football Benefit Today—Redondo Will Turn Out.

From far-away Vancouver, B. C., comes an expression of sympathy and a donation of $10 from a subscriber to The Times, W. B. Stewart, to the victims of the explosion in the Rawson building in which six people were killed and a score or more injured, some of whom will be maimed for life.

Through the Explosion Relief Committee $65 more has been subscribed to the general fund; it comes from J. W. Robinson, $50; H. M. Sale, $10; Anna S. Averill Class, $5. Yesterday The Times received $42.25 for the fund, as follows: Los Angeles Coffee Club, $30.25; W. B. Stewart, Jr., Vancouver, B. C., $10; T. S., $1; a friend, $1. Friday morning Secretary Wesley Clark, representing the committee, gave $50 to J. M. Furrie of No. 715 Wall street. Furrie has a leg broken and is otherwise injured.

This afternoon at 3 o'clock in Fiesta Park will be held the big football benefit between the Victoria and Caledonian teams in a soccer game, and a lively contest is promised. The entrance fee is 25 cents and all receipts go to the relief fund.

The condition of brave little Mae Anderson, who still lies ill at the hospital and who will have to face life as a cripple when she comes out, has appealed to the good people of Redondo, and they have arranged for a splendid benefit performance in her behalf to be given at the Auditorium next Saturday evening at 8 o'clock.

Prominent people are heartily in sympathy with the movement and are according it their support in every way. The use of the Auditorium and the lights for the evening have been gladly contributed, and it is hoped that every dollar that comes in may be clear of expenses so that a considerable sum may be realized for Miss Anderson.

The newly-elected president of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of Redondo, Mrs. Sanderson, is in charge of the entertainment. The programme to be given, subject to slight changes, is as follows:

Music by the Willing Mandolin and Guitar Quartette; selection by the Choral Union; solo, Ted Sanderson; reading by Mrs. R. C. Hinman; violin and piano duet, Mr. and Mrs. Andres; solo, Mrs. Johnson; selection by the Choral Union; operatic sketch, "The Rehearsal," by the Misses Seifke and Harris and Mr. Morey; reading, Mrs. Sanderson; solo, Miss Hauxhurst; monologue in costume, "Mrs. Maloney on the Chinese Question," by Harry Whichelo; violin and piano duet, Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, and solo, Mrs. Mosgrove.

It is a large book substantially bound, and contains hundreds of original artistic designs of letters, scrolls, and illuminations for sign painters, show-card writers, letterers and designers. It is exquisitely printed on fine plate paper, in the original colors, and fully explains the technique of producing the designs as well as showing them in their exquisite perfectness. The book sells at $5.

TELLS OF BEING ROBBED.

Lying unconscious and bleeding in the mud at the western end of the Pico-street trolley line, Frank Rayce of No. 834 San Julian street was found by a car crew early this morning. When Rayce was conducted to the Receiving Hospital by an officer he said that he had been robbed by two men who had induced him to accompany them to Pico and Arlington streets. Rayce lost $30 he says, but the robbers overlooked a pocketbook containing nearly as much money.

BOYS WITH SKELETON KEYS.

With a set of skeleton keys and with candles in their pockets, Richard Thomas, a 16-year-old boy, living at No. 660 Wall street, and James Franklin, who is 15 years old and who lives at No. 301 East Fifth street, were arrested last night. They were about to ascend a ladder to a bridge connecting Barker Bros.' Spring-street store with the Main-street store. The police make no allegations against the boys, but say that they will investigate the case. Both are sons of railroad men.

PLAYHOUSE ON SHORE.

Plans Announced for New Theater to Be Built on Strand at Long Beach.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

LONG BEACH, March 9.—Plans of the new mordern theater to be erected at the water's edge, west of the pier, of which mention was made yesterday, were made public today by the architects. The building is to be cement and plaster, with asphalt floors. There will be a ground deck with an asphalt and sand floor, and above this two floors occupied by the theater proper, with main floor, gallery and stage, a big café and dining hall, and above this will be a roof garden offering a sweeping view of the ocean. The main entrance will be on the north side from the strand.

The structure is to be Egyptian in architecture, and around it a colonade of columns engraved in fantastic style. Protection from fire is provided by a system of pipes which will flood the building outside and inside at a moment's notice. The auditorium will seat 1600. There will be one gallery, six large boxes and smaller boxes around the edge of the gallery. The stage will be 41x78 feet, and equipped with fire proof curtains and settings. Around the theater will be twenty-four booths, to be rented.

The café to be located back of the theater proper, will occupy a space sixty-nine feet square with a sixteen-foot lobby opening off the balcony, which surrounds the structure. The banquet hall 67x80 feet, and the roof garden will be elegantly fitted. The building will cost $60,000. At the head of the company promoting it are A. M. Goodhue, president of the State Bank, and M. L. Kenyon, a real estate operator and capitalist.

The engineers all expressed themselves as delighted with the day and warm in praise of Capt. Fries for his very complete explanations of the work that is going on for the improvement of the harbor that is of such vital interest to Southern California and the future of Los Angeles county.

AT SAN PEDRO.

SAN PEDRO, March 8.—The party came direct from Los Angeles to San Pedro and proceeded to Point Firmin. The cars were switched to the Crescent-avenue line and the visitors went through the South Coast Yacht Club's new quarters, recently completed at a cost of $20,000. The architects praised it. The tug Warrior carried the party to the government breakwater. This immense engineering structure was especially interesting to them all. Then they went on to Long Beach.

SEASHORE BRIEFS.

In addition to the Chinese fire whistle, the department has made arrangements whereby the big 2500 pound bell of the First National Bank clock will be used as the fire alarm bell, operated by the Gamewell system, instead of the cracked excuse now doing duty for that purpose, and which cannot be heard 600 feet away.

Esther Adaberto, the soprano soloist, will again assist the Royal Italian band at their Sunday afternoon concerts in the auditorium, appearing in three numbers on the programme.

The Bank of Commerce building at First and Locust streets was sold today to the Long Beach Mutual Trust Company for $50,000. It is a three-story brick structure.

March, the Most Trying Month

After the tedious strain of winter which thins the blood and lowers the vitality, March, with its raw, rough winds and weather, is a most trying month, especially to those who have allowed their blood to become thin and their systems run down.

Invigorate the body and brain with the world's greatest tonic-stimulant, DUFFY'S PURE MALT WHISKEY, which enriches the blood and makes it course more quickly through the veins. It builds new tissue, quickens the heart's action, prevents decay and fortifies the system against disease germs.

Always Cures Grip

"For thirty years DUFFY'S MALT WHISKEY has been my one medicine. I have always used it as prescribed and it has proved a valuable aid, as it has not only cured several attacks of grip but has prevented any bad after-effects. I cannot speak too highly of what DUFFY'S PURE MALT WHISKEY has done for me, and will always keep it to stimulate and tone up my system and as a sure cure for colds and grip. Although 73 years old, I am hale and hearty, due to the judicious use of DUFFY'S MALT WHISKEY."—W. A. STAGG, 1063 Pacific street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Spring Tonic and Appetizer

"I wish to tell you that last winter I had a very severe time. I have bronchial asthma of long standing, and as a result a very weak heart. I had also a very severe attack of the grip in January; it left me in very poor condition. My stomach and bowels were badly out of order. I could not eat—my stomach would not retain the food. The doctor tried to relieve me, but did not seem to succeed. I commenced to take DUFFY'S PURE MALT WWHISKEY in April and am now very much better. I can eat all that I need and it does not hurt me. I have been gaining ever since I commenced taking it, and I shall continue to take it as long as I seem to receive benefit from its use."—Capt. J. H. WARREN, Wolfeborough Falls, N. H., July 30, 1906.

Night Sweats and Chills

"I have taken DUFFY'S PURE MALT WHISKEY for three months for lung troubles. When I first commenced I was bedfast, and now I am able to work. Now, the doctor of our town said that nothing would help me, but DUFFY'S MALT WHISKEY did what the doctors could not do. I had night sweats and chills and weighed 86 pounds. I weigh 100 pounds now, the chills have left me, and the sweats are also gone. I am looking for great results."—Mr. JOHN BENTLY, Grand Rapids, Mich., Nov. 15, 1906.

Weak and Nervous

"I can certainly say your tonic-stimulant DUFFY'S PURE MALT WHISKEY has been a great benefit to me. I was weak, nervous and could not sleep and was troubled with loss of appetite.

"I was recommended to take DUFFY'S PURE MALT WHISKEY, which I did, and the result is that I am stronger and better in every way, can sleep nights and my appetite is much improved.

"I write you this, as I thought it was my duty to let you know what your great medicinal Malt Whiskey has done for me."—Yours very truly, Mrs. P. R. SOUTHARD, Woodmere, L. I., Jan. 3, 1907.

A Temperance Doctor

"I indorse DUFFY'S PURE MALT WHISKEY as a medicine and for medicinal use and for nothing else. I oppose intemperance and favor all laws that tend toward the suppression of drunkenness."—T. P. PALMER, M. D., Rives, Tenn., Aug. 3, 1906.

Strong at 94

"It is true I have used your whiskey and like it the best of all I have ever used. I was 94 on June 27th. Among my other presents was some of your Malt Whiskey from my nephew. . . I know that I would not be alive today did I not take it regularly in moderate quantities, as I do not have much appetite."—MARSHALL PIERCE, Putney, Vt., Aug. 7, 1906.

Best of Spring Appetizers

"I am a veteran of the Civil War, served three years, and am 64 years of age.

"I take DUFFY'S PURE MALT WHISKEY before each meal and find it the best of spring appetizers. I think that there is nothing better for a man getting on in years. I am a temperate man and only use your product as a medicine and only at such times as I need it."—C. H. CADY, 281 Park ave., Worcester, Mass., Sept. 1, 1906.

Tonic for the Old

"I have been using your DUFFY'S PURE MALT WHISKEY as a tonic-stimulant for the past two years and feel that I have derived marked benefit from the same.

"I am now over eighty years of age and since I have taken DUFFY'S MALT WHISKEY I have taken no other medicine."—ISAAC P. LADD, Albany, N. Y., Aug. 8, 1906.

A Spring Medicine

"Last April I took a sudden cold, and I was laid up with neuralgia in my shoulder, which brought on fever and took away my appetite, but by using DUFFY'S PURE MALT WHISKEY I came out all right, and on Memorial Day I was leading my band and playing, as well. I think your MALT WHISKEY is just the medicine to tone up and keep up the strength of old people.

"Hoping your medicine will prove beneficial to others, I can truly recommend it as a valuable help."—G. I. PARTRIDGE, Franklin, Mass., Sept. 1, 1906.

"As I am a member of the Hull House Women's Club, I was called out many times when the weather was very bad, and so caught a very bad cough, and doctors claimed that my lungs were affected; in fact, the left lung was almost gone, but since I have taken your valuable DUFFY'S PURE MALT WHISKEY, I feel better, and would not do without it. I have not been taking it very long, but I am sure of good results; I have good color in my face and feel that I can work with a great deal more ambition. I cannot praise it too much. I have recommended it to several of my friends, and they, too, are thankful for the benefit they have already derived from it."—Mrs. VICTOR A. BEAUGAIRE, 356 Ogden ave., Chicago, Ill.

Supremacy of "The Owl"

The Owl Drug Co. is supreme in the State of California. Nothing, perhaps, illustrates this so thoroughly as the history of our business in San Francisco and Oakland, during the past year. At the time of the disaster "The Owl" was completely wiped out in San Francisco—five large stores and a warehouse were destroyed. A store was immediately established in the center of the burned district, miles away from the nearest residence, but people came all the way to trade at "The Owl." "The Owl" was the first house that all thought of when the need of drugs became apparent. "The Owl" has now established three new stores in San Francisco. All the old business has come back, and a lot more with it. "The Owl" is doing a bigger business in San Francisco than ever before. In Oakland the volume of business is tremendous—more than three times what it was before our loss in San Francisco.

Here in Los Angeles a similar increase is being shown. "The Owl" has the prestige. The public knows it can depend upon the quality of "Owl" goods—knows that "Owl" prices are right, that "The Owl" makes the price. The Public knows that the money back method of doing business is "Owl" policy. For pure drugs, lowest prices, and accurate, courteous service you turn naturally to The Owl Drug Co. These things are here for you at both "Owl" stores.

TWO OPERAS WELL GIVEN.

BIG DAY FOR MUSIC AT THE AUDITORIUM.

"Faust" in Afternoon and "Carmen" at Night Satisfy Demand for the Favorites—Superb Ensemble and Splendid Settings Mark Productions. Fely Dareyne Interesting Artist.

Two beautiful performances at the Auditorium yesterday marked the close of the opera's first week.

The first was "Faust," in the afternoon, which was followed in the evening by Bizet's "Carmen."

The baritone, Galperni, completed his astounding record yesterday by singing at both of these, making a total of six principal parts in five days—which can scarcely be duplicated by any other opera singer in this country. In justice to Galperni, it must be said that his voice showed much weariness at the evening performance. Fornari is still indisposed, although it is hoped that he will be able to sing soon. Telegrams were sent north last night for Angelo Antola, the popular little baritone of the Lambardi aggregation, and it is probable that he will be in Tuesday or Wednesday. If he comes, he will surely be heard in "Pagliacci."

Yielding to a very apparent popular demand, Mr. Russell said yesterday that he would try to arrange a single performance in which Mme. Adaberto will be the principal soprano, if such a matter can be settled satisfactorily to Nordica, who is, of course, first soprano of the entire aggregation.

"Faust" was the best performance of the day. It was given before an audience that filled the entire Auditorium, and was received with manifestations of intense interest.

Probably no opera company ever in this part of the country has presented so complete and satisfying a performance of Gounod's great masterwork. The production seemed absolutely perfect in technical detail. The orchestra, under Conti's baton, offered a superb interpretation of all the score, the elusive, subtle little bits of accompaniment and instrumental description being brought out with splendid fidelity to the composer's thought.

Mme. Nordica sang better than at any time during the season here. Mme. Monti-Baldini, whose dramatic work has been far more satisfactory than her vocal accomplishments, offered a Siebel exquisitely picturesque and artistic, and at the same time satisfactory in voice. Galperni, who has come to be a regular expectation, sang Valentine with quiet art and gained some very fine effects.

The masterpiece of the production, however, was the Mephisto of Segurola. It is to be pre-supposed that the devil was a gentleman—not a buffoon—and this to a high degree is the picture of yesterday's artist, "un bel cavaliere." Segurola has attained a mastery of costume in the part, and his refined appurtenances aided greatly in the impersonation. His dramatic conception of the character is strong and original; his "business" is constant but never gesticular, and embraces some astonishingly novel bits of action. In vocal realization he was at all times sufficient, though at occasional moments the smoothness of his tone suffered slightly.

The piece introduced the second tenor of the company, Richard Martin, an American boy of French parentage. Martin has a smooth, even tenor of delightful quality, easily delivered and of rich, ringing timbre as high as A. Above this his notes are forced. He suffers slightly from the typical French defect, a suggestion of nasal taint, but his best moments yesterday were fortunately free from the blemish. His "Salut Demeure" was uttered with thrilling beauty, marred only by a very visible effort after the high note in the finale.

The evening performance featured Fely Dereyne as Carmen.

In the whole range of opera there is probably no part so difficult of proper interpretation. Carmen is either wonderfully effective or hideous. There is no half-way step. One cannot sing Carmen "acceptably."

Mlle. Dereyne's version is distinguished by spontaneity, a vast amount of life, genuine dramatic intensity and astonishing variety and originality. It may safely be said that she is one of the best Carmens who has ever been seen upon the local stage, for with her vigor and vivacity she never loses sight of the vocal demands of the role. At all times she sings. Her stage work and by-play are constantly assertive.

She was well supported by Martin, though his voice was very weary in the first act. He brightened momentarily for a clear and beautiful delivery of the great flower song, however, and won hearty and deserved applause.

As in "Faust," the principals sang French, though Mlle. Tanquini, who sang Micaela, used her native Italian. Mlle. Tarquini, like Angelini Fornari, seems at present suffering from a heavy cold, but through this bar a sweet, rich voice expressed itself last night.

Both scenic and choral effects in "Faust" and "Carmen" were worthy any operahouse in the land. In "Faust" the ballet, used admirably in the second act, imparted the genuine and necessary action to the flowing waltz chorus—usually intoned with all the stage people standing still.

A delightful feature of "Carmen" was the quintette in the second act, usually left out on account of its difficulty, and not heard here previous to last night's production since the visit of the company under Maurice Grau.

As this is Sunday there will be no operatic performance of any sort at the Auditorium.

Tomorrow the last week will commence with a fine revival of "Il Trovatore." Meanwhile it is to be hoped that Mr. Russell secures another baritone—if possible, Antola.

TWO DAYLIGHT BURGLARIES.

Daylight burglaries worked with success yesterday afternoon, and caused the police a considerable annoyance. The home of J. Lundholm, at Eighth and Hemlock streets, was broken into and ransacked. Several articles of jewelry, among which is a gold watch, a ring and a bracelet, are missing. The burglar entered the house through a side window, and in his haste to secure valuable loot, overlooked several articles. Alex Matuszewitz of No. 1003 El Molino street, reported to the police last night that a burglar had entered his barn and stolen a bay mare. The mare was left in a box stall, and the thief had led it out by the front driveway. Although there were several neighbors about their respective homes at the time the theft is supposed to have occurred, they did not see any person leading a horse from the Matuszewitz place.

FALLS FROM CAR.

Lying in a half conscious state near the railway tracks at Gates street and Mission road last night, Louis Braum was found by the crew of Maple avenue car No. 332, and taken to the Receiving Hospital. It was found that he had been slightly injured by falling from the car. Later, he was sent to [illegible] today.

OTHER FIELDS TO CONQUER.

SPIRIT OF BETHLEHEM SEEKS NEW CENTER.

Dana Bartlett Gives Notice That He Is Hunting for the "Sinews of War." One Neighborhood Regenerated by His Work One Sought Is Susceptable of Same Improvement.

Demands follow close one upon the other, to meet the requirements of the ever-broadening work of the Bethlehem Institution.

While the $10,000 has not yet been actually secured for the purchase of the Grace Methodist Church property on Hewitt street, Dana W. Bartlett, superintendent of Bethlehem, is close on its trail. With the likelihood of an early consummation of this purchase, comes the inspiration for a still greater work at the corner of Third and Hewitt streets, and he has secured an option on the corner adjoining the church property for $27,500, increasing the total of the intial investment to $37,500.

To make these purchases and to fully equip and clear up small obligations on the properties now in his charge, aggregating close to $100,000 in value, Mr. Bartlett wants $50,000.

He not only wants it, but has the courage to say that he will get it, and will this week send out notices to well-known investors in the Bethlehem projects, as well as to the general benevolent public, that he intends to inaugurate a push campaign to secure it on April 1.

After carefully looking over the location at Third and Hewitt streets, Mr. Bartlett has concluded that it is the natural vantage point for his remarkable work. When he began at Vignes and Ducommun streets, there was an immense floating and improvident population surrounding that point in every direction, but a wonderful change has taken place there, and everybody concedes that the miracle has been wrought through the influence of Bethlehem Institution.

The improvident population has disappeared into other parts of the city and has established itself among the frugal and industrious people of the community, until with but one or two exceptions, all the American families formerly associated with the institution have disappeared from the neighborhood.

Where eight or ten years ago there was a dilapidated-cottage section, without the least pretension at adornment, there are now rows of better homes, occupied principally by foreign-born residents, and while at that time nobody ever thought of attempting to do business in the neighborhood, there are now stores on almost every corner, and it is a thriving business section, in a small way. The Bethlehem Institution has itself become a business, social, educational and religious center, established on a paying basis, with hotel, coffee club, schools, baths and church.

The location now sought, at Third and Hewitt streets, is farther advanced than Vignes street was ten years ago, but it is in a manner susceptible of the same improvement, and property holders in the neighborhood should welcome Dana Bartlett and lend him a helping hand.

He is a man who does things, and that is why he has been successful at the mother institution, and has been able to secure property and establish branches on New High street, East Main and Railroad streets, and at Dolgeville. If he sought to "feather his nest," and live at well-deserved ease as superintendent of the establishment already in successful operation, there is no reason why he could not do so. He has more than one man can do in that direction, but he prefers to push on, for the uplift of those in whom few people take any interest, and of whose existence many people seem to be entirely oblivious. With the aid of his splendid wife, he has reared a family of girls, who are as tactful and efficient, as refined and educated, as their parents, and they can

ON HIGH BRIDGE LIVES SAVED.

ENGINEER'S COOLNESS AVERTS TERRIBLE ACCIDENT.

Arroyo Seco Trestle Near Ostrich Farm Scene of Thrilling Incident—Fast Train Stopped Just in Time to Prevent Hurling Women Into Deep Ravine Below.

Caught by a train on the high bridge which spans the Arroyo Seco between Lincoln Park and Garvanza, two young women were saved from a horrible death yesterday afternoon by the coolness and prompt action of Engineer Baldwin of the Santa Fé.

The president of one of the great railroads in the East has said that every man who pulls a locomotive throttle is a hero, and only awaits and hopes for an opportunity to show it. Engineer Baldwin's opportunity came yesterday afternoon and he was quick to do just the right thing at the right instant, and thereby two human lives were saved.

Train No. 43, from San Bernardino to Los Angeles, had left Pasadena a few minutes late and was bowling along down the heavy grade at high speed. There were no more stops to make and Engineer Baldwin took advantage of the nine-mile run to try to make up a little of the lost time. Past the Raymond Hotel, through South Pasadena and Lincoln Park the train dashed, always under complete control of the engineer, else another story might be written of what followed.

[illegible] west of the South Pasadena Ostrich Farm the railroad crosses the Arroyo Seco on a high bridge and for a short distance before this bridge is reached there is a stretch of straight track. As the train rounded a curve and ran onto the track approaching the bridge, Engineer Baldwin was horrified to see, half way across the structure, two women standing in the middle of the track, waving their arms in terror and probably screaming, but the noise of the train drowned the sound of their voices.

The women were not much more than the length of the train ahead of the locomotive, but the train had not reached the bridge. The train was running at a rate of thirty miles per hour and Baldwin said afterward that he did not expect to succeed in his efforts to stop in time.

Shutting off the steam with one hand, Baldwin clapped on the emergency brakes with the other, and so tightly were they applied that the wheels were gripped and stopped turning, but the momentum sent the heavy train skidding along the rails. Within thirty feet of the terrified women the locomotive gave a convulsive shudder and stopped.

One of the women was on her knees on the ties and the other had covered her face with her cloak, for both had, seemingly, given up hope. They did not dare to jump off the bridge for the structure is nearly seventy-five feet high and a leap to the stony bed of the arroyo would have meant instant death.

It was impossible to take the women aboard the engine there on the bridge because there was not room for them to walk around it and climb into the cab. Before Baldwin could call to them what to do, one of the women crept out on a twelve-inch plank attached to one of the bridge timbers and the other, letting herself over the end of the ties, stretched lengthwise at the extreme ends of the timbers. Closing their eyes they hung on and Baldwin started his train. At snail's pace he sent the locomotive past where the women were lying. There was barely six inches between them and the big driving wheels, but that was sufficient. Baldwin watched them while he pulled the train slowly across the bridge and finally saw them creep back between the rails and sit up. They waved their hands to the man who had saved their lives and he answered with a blast of the locomotive whistle.

Who the women were Baldwin, of course, does not know, but he would like to know. After the train had reached Los Angeles and the matter was reported to the Santa Fé officials, Baldwin was warmly praised by them.

"Oh, that was nothing," he said modestly, "any man would have done that. I do not deserve any particular credit for it."

But there are those who do not agree with him.

YOUNG MAN MISSING.

Harvey Butner of No. 606½ East Fourth street is reported missing. According to relatives, Butner came to Los Angeles from Deadwood, S. D., two days ago, and went to their home on East Fourth street. The last seen of him was by a clerk of the Bartlett Music Company. Butner is 25 years old, about 5 feet 4 inches tall, hair dark, and was dressed in dark clothes. He is near sighted.

STABBED IN THE BACK.

Wert Jepsen was arrested at No. 2006 South Main street last night on a charge of assault with deadly weapons upon Earl Lester of No. 2901 Pasadena avenue. According to witnesses, the two young men became involved in a fight over wages at the South Main-street tin shop, and Jepson threw a pair of tinner's snips at Lester, inflicting an ugly wound in his back.

DARING WORK OF TWO THUGS.

CASHIER AND NIGHT WATCHMAN THEIR VICTIMS.

Masked Robber and Unmasked Pal Loot Safe in a Laundry Office Before the Eyes of Employees Who Are Kept Covered With a Pistol. Small Sum Secured.

Separated from scores of men and women employés by a thin board partition, Cashier F. M. Couch and Night Watchman H. R. Trader were held up by a masked robber in the office of the Sanitary Laundry at Third and San Pedro streets last night, while another thief looted the safe. Not without a struggle with the cashier did the robbers accomplish their end. They secured only a small sum of money, but the robbery was one of the most daring thefts committed in Los Angeles in some time.

As Couch was preparing to close his office for the night about 6:45 o'clock and repair to his home at No. 1142 West Forty-first street, a masked man opened the office door and entered from the street. Couch leaped from his chair and at the same moment the robber made a rush for him. Couch endeavored to secure a weapon, but the intruder was too quick for him. The robber covered him with an automatic pistol. At that instant Couch grasped the gun.

Wrenching the weapon from Couch, the crook cried: "You fool, do you want me to kill you?" And with that he struck the cashier a stunning blow with the weapon

[illegible] Purposes to Sue for [illegible] and Union Pacific [illegible] That They and Sell [illegible] All Competing

[illegible] WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

[illegible] March 9.—[Exclusive [illegible]] statement made last [illegible] by a member of [illegible] Commerce Commission [illegible] going to bring suit [illegible] Union Pacific to divest [illegible] the Southern Pa[cific] [illegible] to have been [illegible] certain Wall-street [illegible] as meaning [illegible] would make no [illegible] the two properties [illegible] however, it is un[illegible] beyond the mark. [illegible] no one who understood the situation ever said that the Interstate Commerce Commission itself was going to bring such a suit, as every one at all conversant with that body of powers knows that it has no authority to bring an action for the purpose specified. That, however, does not alter the situation in which the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific companies are placed. The Interstate Commerce Commission will present the evidence taken during the Union Pacific investigation to the Department of Justice and the Attorney-General of the United States will be the one to bring the proceedings.

It is known that the Interstate Commerce Commission will urge the institution of an action of the nature mentioned, and its recommendations will doubtless have a good deal of weight with the Department of Justice, though it is believed that the Attorney-General will find that the evidence taken affords ground for the beginning of proceedings irrespective of the Commerce Commission's recommendation.

The action of the government will be based on the contention that the Southern Pacific and Union Pacific are parallel and competing lines in certain sections and in consequence their operation under the same control is contrary to the interstate commerce law. April 4 has been set as the date for hearing the arguments on the testimony taken during the investigation, when, it is said, the Harriman counsel will appear to defend the railroad systems. So many intricate questions and matters of such far-reaching importance are involved, that it is not likely that the Interstate Commerce Commission will be prepared to make its full report and recommendations for some months after the conclusion of the argument in the case.

Meanwhile, however, it is understood that the testimony will be submitted to Atty.-Gen. Bonaparte for his perusal with a view of instituting proceedings of the nature indicated above. No hasty action on the part of the Attorney-General is anticipated, so that the beginning of such proceedings is likely to be deferred for a considerable period, unless he has a case well made out, which, in his opinion, will stand the test of trial. As stated yesterday, the government contentions will be opposed vigorously by the Union Pacific.

SHE LEAPS OFF TRAIN.

Woman Jumps Out of Car Window to Death, Leaving Her Little Child.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

AMSTERDAM (N. Y.) March 9.—Maria Becker, apparently crazed by the tedium of a journey across the continent, leaped through a car window from a New Central express train near Yosts, fifteen miles west of Amsterdam late last night. Her body was found upon the ice of the Mohawk River, where it had rolled down a steep embankment. The woman, who was about 25 years old, was accompanied by a 2-year-old baby girl, supposed to be her daughter.

LOAN GOES SLOW.

LONDON, March 9.—In the opinion of the morning papers, the Japanese conversion loan of $115,000,000, the prospectus of which was issued yesterday, is not likely to get such an enthusiastic reception as the previous issues. The Morning Post voices the disappointment of the market that the new loan is merely a charge on the general revenue and is not secured by the customs, as is the case with the previous Japanese loans.

SOLONS STRIKE AT HASH TRADE.

MONTANA LAWMAKERS FORBID FOOD ADULTERATION.

Measure Passes Both Houses and Is Signed by Governor on Same Day—Requires Hotels and Public Eating Houses to Warn Customers of Impurities in Victuals.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

HELENA (Mont.) March 9.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Both houses of the Legislature passed O'Connor's so-called "hash" law and Gov. Toole today attached his signature thereto, and it was filed with the Secretary of State, thus becoming operative immediately.

The bill is patterned after the old national oleomargarine law, in that it requires hotels, restaurants, cafés and boarding-houses to post notices and otherwise warn customers if any of the ingredients used in the preparation of their meals have been adulterated. The bill provides a heavy fine for violation of its provisions.

This is the nearest to any "freak" legislation enacted by the present Legislature, but its author declares it was introduced in absolute good faith and proposes preventing the adulteration of any and all foods sold to patrons of such institutions, and that it, in connection with the pure food law, will result in giving Montana caterers reputations the world over for the excellence of their cuisine.

DEFEATS CHURCHILL.

Duchess of Marlborough Triumphs Over Duke Objections and Will Bring Sons to America.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, March 9.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] That the Duchess of Marlborough and her sons will visit New York soon, proves the influence of her mother, Mrs. Oliver H. Belmont, and of the Vanderbilts has triumphed over that of the Churchills.

When the Duchess and her two children left here for the South of France it was understood that she had definitely abandoned for a year her intention of going to New York. To this purpose the Duke and his mother, Lady Blandford, had strongly objected, for the Duchess insisted that she would take her sons with her.

The Duke's friends say he feared that the boys' education would be neglected, or possibly conducted along lines which he does not approve. He holds that they should begin without delay to prepare to enter Eton. During their absence in America, the Duke loses all control of his sons. He has long protested against their being taken out of England's jurisdiction, even to France.

Now the Duchess commands the situation. Although her intimates declare that she will not remain out of England long, the fact that she takes the young lords where she pleases must greatly distress the Churchills and all their connections.

NEWS REPORTS FROM CORRESPONDENTS OF THE TIMES.

THROWS OUT A BURNING STOVE.

YOUNG GIRL HEROINE OF A PASADENA FIRE.

Fights Flames With Flour While She Keeps Papers and Other Burnable Things at Safe Distance. Rushes Younger Sister to a Place of Comparative Safety.

Office of The Times, No. 26 S. Raymond Ave.

PASADENA, March 10.—A gasoline stove in a blaze and a brave little girl figured in an exciting half hour yesterday morning at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Hayward on the corner of Kirkwood avenue and Dakota street.

Miss Clara Hayward, the dainty little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hayward, proved herself a heroine and without doubt averted a sad catastrophe. With a gasoline stove on fire the little maid wasted no time to call for help, but hurrying her smaller sister to a safe corner she snatched the blazing tank from its place and threw it from an open window.

The tank fell into the back yard, a story below, as the large apartment occupied by the family is over Mr. Hayward's grocery store.

Without waiting ,though to see what became of the tank the girl ran to the flour bin and gathering up all the flour she could she soon extinguished the flames, which licked about the stove and floor. All this time the young woman was throwing, as best she could, any papers, cloths, rugs or other inflammable articles as far as possible from the place of danger, and saw to it that her sister kept at a safe distance.

When the excitement was over little sister Frances was sent downstairs for Mrs. Hayward, who came accompanied by some of the clerks in the store.

It was only when the danger was past that Miss Clara yielded to "nerves," and in her mother's arms shed a few tears. After being comforted though she was ready to go on with her housekeeping for which she is famous among her friends.

The damage to property was little beyond the injury to the stove and woodwork. That the young heroine's long hair did not catch fire seemed almost a miracle to those who came on the scene afterward.

WOMAN DISTURBER JAILED.

Mrs. Carrie Margart appeared yesterday morning before Judge McDonald, charged with disturbing the peace. Mrs. Margart resisted all efforts of the police and her landlord when they separately and combined attempted to eject her from her rented residence on Colorado street. Mrs. Margart's landlord accuses his renter of drunkenness, and says that she disturbs other renters.

She pleaded guilty to the charge of disturbance, and was sentenced to thirty days in jail.

SYMPATHY FOR KURANAGA.

Much surprise is expressed in Pasadena over the arrest, in San Francisco, of Frank Kuranaga, the well-known Japanese merchant of Colorado street. Mr. Kuranaga, it is said, has been arrested for obtaining money on worthless securities. His claim to have $70,000 worth of assets is declared by his friends here not to be an unreasonable one. His property in Pasadena doubtless amounts to a considerable portion of that sum. Mr. Kuranaga lost heavily in San Francisco at the time of the earthquake. He and his wife were the victims of trying conditions at that time.

WINS IN DEBATE.

The representative of Los Angeles High School, Charles H. Mills, won the gold medal Friday evening in the interscholastic oratorical contest held at Throop Polytechnic Institute. The second medal of silver was won by Eugene Tincher of Long Beach, while Ross Nichols of Throop took third. The handsome championship banner awarded to Los Angeles, will be held for one year when it will be fought for again. The prize winner is a son of B. Fay Mills. Others taking part in the contest were Berwyn Roberts, San Fernando High School; Dudley Pack of Compton High School; Wilbur Smith of Pasadena High School; Tincher and Nichols, the other prize winners.

WEEK'S SOCIAL REVIEW.

With the exception of a few dinners given in connection with the horse show the society people of Pasadena have been unusually quiet the past week. The two largest functions were given at Hotel Green, the progressive euchre party of which Mrs. George H. Lincoln of New York was the hostess Tuesday evening, having been one of the most elegant and extravagantly appointed affairs of the year. This was given in the Moorish room of the hotel where tables were arranged for seventy players and after the game an elaborate supper was served in the café. Prizes, accessories and decorations were all on the most magnificent scale. Mrs. Lincoln was assisted by her sister, Mrs. F. A. Holcomb, and Mrs. Robert Carr, Miss Gibbs and Miss Broadhurst.

The largest function of the week was also given at Hotel Green and this was a musical given Wednesday evening by Mrs. Artemus Lamb of Clinton, Iowa. She was assisted by her daughter, Mrs. Gates. The Romanesque room was required for this affair, for there were 160 guests present. Chairs and divans were arranged in groups and an admirable programme was given, including numbers by the Apollo Quartette, Tom Karl, and readings by Miss Mary Phelps. In the café, which was decorated with ropes of smilax dotted with carnations, potted palms and other greenery, small tables were provided and after the programme supper was served.

Mrs. Flora Goodall Bland and Mrs. Ernest B. Hoag gave an attractive luncheon Tuesday in honor of Mrs. Bland's sister, Mrs. Hugo D. Knell, of Menlo Park. After the luncheon the guests were entertained with bridge and five hundred. Assisting were Mrs. Charles Green, Misses Florence Bland and Avis Booth. There were seventy women present.

Mrs. Bangs Stewart of Chicago gave a luncheon in honor of George Ade, the author and playwright, at Hotel Maryland. The accessories were unusually attractive and the color scheme pink. At the table were Mr. and Mrs. Marsh Stewart, Mrs. Carter, Misses Cora Auten, Hobert, McCollough, Messrs. McDonald and Horace Irwin.

Miss Julia Holmes and Miss Ethel Love entertained with bridge at the home of the former on Congress Place Tuesday afternoon. Those present were: Mrs. Frederick Grable, Misses Vera Rockwell, Jessamine Rockwell, Louise Derby, Marjorie Derby, Daisy Dake, Mabel Love, Cordelia Stimson, Gladys Gardner, Gladys Palmer, Louise Austin, Marguerite Austin, Beth Stebman, Laura Shields, Constance McClintock, Louise Lockwood and Elizabeth Speer.

Mr. and Mrs. R. O. Kendall gave a dance Wednesday evening in honor of Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Norcroff of Worcester, Mass., at their home on South Los Robles avenue. There were forty present and the decorations were arranged in Japanese fashion.

One of the dinners of the week was that given by Benjamin Blossom for his men friends, judges, officers and directors of the horse show. Place cards, favors and table accessories were carried out around this central idea of an equine exhibition and the horse show colors were used in decoration. Covers were laid for twenty-four and seldom has "The Blossoms" been the scene of a more delightful hospitality.

Mrs. Harrison I. Drummond of South Grand avenue was the hostess at a bridge party Wednesday afternoon where all the appointments were charming. The affair was complimentary to Mrs. William Scudder of St. Louis, who is spending the winter at the Raymond. There were six tables and the guests were Mmes. John McMillan, Lafayette Lamb, Knapp, John S. Cravens, Tracy Drake, A. K. Macomber, F. R. Kellam, Walstein Root, J. B. Miller, R. H. Wagner, William Park, Lawrence Newman, Harvey, Thompson, Wood, John Lambert, G. G. Guyer, Fred Elmer Wilcox, A. A. Libby, Robert Pitcairn, H. W. English, Conkling and Miss Daughday.

Mrs. Henry Mellon of Bellefontaine avenue entertained Wednesday with bridge in honor of her guest, Miss Doughty. Pink carnations were used in decoration of the drawing room, where tables were arranged for cards and before the games luncheon was served for eight in the dining-room, which was ornamented with spring blossoms.

Anticipated events of the coming week are an afternoon tea given Tuesday from 3 to 5 o'clock by Mrs. Lutie Wright Benton of Congress Place, and a large card party given Wednesday afternoon by Miss Cora Auten at her home on Madison avenue, in honor of Miss Altadena Green. Saturday Mrs. Robert Bruce Langdon and Mrs. John B. Manning give one of the largest functions of the winter at Hotel Green. This will be a progressive euchre party, where all the decorations and accessories will be appropriate to St. Patrick's Day.

Rev. and Mrs. Robert J. Burdette entertained friends Tuesday evening in honor of George Ade at their home, "Sunnycrest."

Mrs. Neal K. Traylor of South Los Robles avenue has issued invitations for a large card party at the Shakespeare clubhouse for Thursday afternoon next.

For the opening of the horse show Mr. and Mrs. John H. Norton had as their guests Gen. and Mrs. Adna R. Chaffee, Miss Helen Chaffee and Miss Mazie Mather of New York City.

AT THE HORSE SHOW.

Nearly all the boxes were filled and the grand stand was crowded to its utmost capacity at the Horse Show yesterday afternoon, the dressing exceeding in elegance and showiness that of either day previous. Conspicuous in their boxes commanding the best view of the show were Pasadena's social leaders, each in a costume different from that worn before. Mrs. A. Kingsley Macomber was charming in purple velvet with hat to match, covered with shaded plumes; Mrs. C. M. Henderson, sitting beside her, wore a stunning costume of gray broadcloth with gray hat with pink roses and gray feathers. Mrs. Edward R. Kellam wore white broadcloth trimmed with Irish lace and a hat with mustard-colored plumes; Mrs. Arthur Libby wore a street costume of black and white with a toque of American Beauty roses; Mrs. Robert Rowan wore dahlia-colored cloth gown with a hat to match, loaded with plumes of dahlia color, blue and mustard.

Mrs. Fred Elmer Wilcox was handsomely gowned in white broadcloth trimmed with Irish point, and wore a black hat of horsehair braid trimmed with black and white; Mrs. R. H. SANTA MONICA'S RED LETTER DAY.

BREAK GROUND THIS AFTERNOON FOR NEW CHURCH.

Many Visitors Are Expected from Various Towns of Southern California to Attend the Turning of the First Spade Full of Earth for the House of Worship.

SANTA MONICA, March 9.—Tomorrow will be a red-letter day in the history of the Catholic Church of Santa Monica. The occasion is the breaking of ground for the new St. Monica Church at the corner of Fourth street and California avenue.

The exercises, which will be participated in by Bishop Thomas Conaty and a number of priests from the several charges throughout the southern end of the State, will be directly under the auspices of the local lodge of Knights of Columbus.

At least two thousand visitors are expected to be present, and their entertainment is in the hands of active committees. At 10 o'clock the Knights and Ladies of Columbus will assemble at the Southern Pacific Depot to meet and welcome the visitors, who will march to the church on Third street. Here solemn high mass will be pronounced at 10:30 o'clock. At noon the visitors will be dined at the Casino on Third street, where a big circus tent has been erected and converted into a dining hall.

At 1:30 p.m. the first spade of earth will be turned by Bishop Conaty at the site of the new church. At 3 o'clock the bishop will deliver a lecture at the North Beach Auditorium, and at 4 o'clock the visitors will be treated to a trolley ride throughout the city. In the evening at 7 there will be an exemplification of the third degree at Columbia Hall and at 9 there will be a banquet to the visiting Knights.

The site chosen for the new church is not far from the spot touched by Father Junipero Serra in 1770, when in search for the Bay of Monterey, he passed through Santa Monica. The new church is imposing in design and dimensions, being arranged to seat 1000 persons. It is to be of the gothic style of architecture and is to be completed at a cost of $100,000.

FOR CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY.

Bishop Conaty today closed negotiations for the purchase of a ten-acre tract upon which to locate the new Catholic university. The site selected includes a part of the California-avenue race track, being between Ninth and Eleventh streets and California and Washington avenues. This is to be a Christian brothers' college and the plans for it call for the expenditure of $150,000.

The land was purchased from ex-Senator John P. Jones and Mrs. Arcadia B. de Baker and is a part of the original San Vicente Rancho. The institution about to be established here is to be of the order of St. Mary's and will be similar to the college now being conducted by that order at Oakland. There will be ample room for athletic grounds and a commodious campus.

The project of the Catholic denomination to found a great seat of learning here contemplates also the erection at an early day of a boarding school for girls. There is now a day school here, under the management of the Sisters of the Sacred Heart, but the quarters are not large enough to accommodate boarders. Plans for such an academy are being worked out, as well as those for the academy for boys, to be erected at the corner of Fourth and California.

PLANS NOT MATURED.

Regarding the report of plans for a new seaside resort north of Port Los Angeles Robert F. Jones said today that while he had purchased the property, which embraces 2000 acres of land extending back from the ocean to the foothills north of Santa Monica and contains 1600 acres under cultivation, including some mountainous and some cañon lands. No plans or arrangements have yet been completed as to the development of the property.

SANTA MONICA BRIEFS.

Since it has been definitely determined by the government that a forest reserve will not be made in the Santa Monica Mountains, property owners who have interests lying up the beach are preparing a petition to the County Supervisors asking that a county road be established through the Malibu ranch of the late Frederick H. Rindge.

In the baseball game played here this afternoon the Long Beach High School nine defeated the Santa Monica Highs by the disgraceful score of 18 to 1.

Coronado leads all others.

DON'T TALK CITY NOW.

EL MONTE, March 9.—El Monte will not incorporate, for the present time, at least. The little preliminary work done aroused such a storm of opposition that the "pushers" have dropped the entire matter. By a vote of 2 to 4 the Improvement Club declared the movement premature.

William K. Raphael of Oakland, who recently bought the James Freer tract of fifteen acres, moved this week to his new possessions.

E. J. ("Lucky") Baldwin has sunk another deep well east of the Williams place. This tract is occupied by a Jap colony, which has planted a large acreage of strawberries

SIMPLY SWALLOW

Many Eat as Though They Were Blind and Their Tongues Cut Out.

Dyspepsia is built on confidence—too much confidence in the ability of your stomach to digest anything and everything you put into it.

In this age we have developed speed in every line of action and we have also developed speed in mastication.

We don't take time to eat right, and sometimes we do not eat the right kind of food. Sometimes we carry our business to our meals and as a result eat mechanically. We eat as though we were blind and our tongues cut out. We simply swallow.

The result is that the food we eat is half chewed and lies like a lump of lead on the stomach.

You may deny to yourself that you abuse your stomach, but when you get a bloaty feeling, you can't deny you've got it.

When you get brash eructations, burning sensations, bloating, aversion to food, loss of appetite, belching and other kindred ailments, there is not much use asking yourself, for the time being, why you suffer. The fact is you've got these ailments and the question of the hour is how to get rid of them at once, so that at your next meal you may be able to sit down and look at your meal straight in the face—with a keen appetite and a smile, and enjoy thoroughly everything you eat.

Just one of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest an ordinary meal, without the help of the stomach. One ingredient of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest 3000 grains of food. The strongest stomach couldn't do the work any better than one of these wonderful little Tablets can do it.

Each tablet contains the strongest digestive agents it is possible to obtain.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are not a patent medicine. We come out and say just what is in them—hydrastis, golden seal, lactose and aseptic pepsin. They are recommended by 40,000 licensed physicians in the United States and Canada.

And they are recommended by everyone who uses them—they can't help it, for they immediately invigorate the stomach by letting it take a rest; they strengthen the gastric juice and cause the appetite to become keen and regular.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will surely destroy dyspepsia, brash, belching, that "lump of lead" feeling, burning sensations, indigestion, loss of appetite, and aversion to food.

Have Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets handy, where you can take one or two after each meal. Then you will know what a blessing it is to have a good appetite and to get all the good possible out of everything you eat. You'll feel rosy and sweet. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at any drug store on earth, 50c.

SOUTH PASADENA, March 9.—This place seems to be struck by the moving fever. Five houses have been moved in the last week or so. The postoffice will soon be transferred to the new Alexander Block. The Baptist Church will move near Central and Diamond streets and South Pasadena High School wil loccupy the new building on Fremont street.

There is a proposition before the City Trustees to pave Mission street with asphalt and the matter is attracting general attention among South Pasadena citizens.

UPLAND.

UPLAND, March 9.—The Board of Trustees has passed a resolution ordering the building of new cement walks and curbs on both sides of First avenue from A to Eleventh streets. This means almost fourteen blocks to be thus improved. A street, from Second to Euclid avenue, three blocks, is to be given like treatment, and the petition for walks and curbs, on Third avenue, from Ninth to Eleventh, has received the signatures of a majority of the parties in interest, and will be the next in line for favorable action by the Trustees.

The matter of better school facilities here is occupying the thoughts of most of the citizens. Members of the school board are looking about for a site suited to the needs of this district. It is believed a majority of the board favors a change from the present location, and that much more room is needed.

At the regular meeting of the City Trustees, a petition was presented, bearing the signatures of forty-two ranchers and citizens of Upland, requesting the board to take steps necessary to issue bonds sufficient to improve the streets and highways of the city. The petition was received and placed on file, until the expression of as many citizens as possible could be had on the matter. At the next regular meeting of the City Trustees on March 18 some action will likely be taken. There is believed to be hardly a doubt but that an election will soon be called.

Large crowds at Coronado.

ONTARIO.

ONTARIO, March 9.—The Citrus Fruit Association here shipped in February seventy-five cars of oranges, while the shipment for the whole colony amounted to 200 carloads. The car shortage crippled the shippers considerably, the fruit being on hand for at least 300 cars. Total shipments of oranges and lemons for the whole season is estimated at 2000 carloads, being an increase of 600 cars over last season's output. March business will of course be crowded to the limit and 450 cars must be shipped in order to properly care for the immense crop. The oranges have retained their firmness so far, while the market is good and the prices remain high, so that the growers are fairly well satisfied with the situation.

The rainfall resulting from the last storm was 2.72 inches, which brings the total for the season up to 21.76 inches for this locality. This is considerably in advance of the total rainfall up to this time last year.

All the cañons are full and San Antonio Creek is a rushing river and the power-houses in the cañon have all they can do to cope with the great volume.

LOS ANGELES VICTIM.

Warrant Out at Santa Ana for Arrest of Man Accused of Getting Money Under False Pretenses.

SANTA ANA, March 9.—E. B. Deitrich, who is employed at Levy's in Los Angeles, was victimized to the extent of $75 by the man who called himself A. L. Moore, and for whose arrest a warrant is out on a charge of getting $225 under false pretenses from A. M. Greenfield of this city. Moore went to Los Angeles a week ago to buy fixtures for a store here and he has not been seen since.

Shortly after arriving in Los Angeles he cashed $75 in checks, receiving the coin from Deitrich. The checks were signed J. H. Walton. When the checks were returned by the Farmers and Merchants' Bank of Santa Ana to Deitrich, Deitrich came here. He said he had known Moore a long time as J. H. Walton, and also knew that he had passed under the name of A. L. Moore in Santa Ana.

FORGERY THE CHARGE.

The grand larceny case against W. A. Stafford was dismissed in the Superior Court this morning on the motion of Dist.-Atty. Davis, who stated that the prosecution against Stafford would be made on the forgery charge. Stafford was accused in the grand larceny complaint with stealing certificates of deposit in the First National Bank worth over $6000, one being for $5400. The $5400 certificate had the name of Mrs. L. H. Fields written on it. Mrs. Field declares this to be a forgery.

Stafford claims the certificates of deposit were presents to him from W. H. Rector, whose nurse Stafford was in his last illness.

An important move was made in the political checker board today when H. J. Forgy decided to make the race for City Attorney. He is the only opponent of W. F. Heathman, the incumbent. It is understood that Homer G. Ames, who has been mentioned as a candidate, will not enter the race.

The Operahouse paint store has been sold by its proprietor, T. B. Elliott, to F. C. Remsberg and A. M. Lindsay, two young business men who have been connected with the H. C. Dawes clothing store.

Marriage licenses have been issued to Jesse M. Fowler, aged 23, and Josephine Daly, aged 20, both of Los Angeles; Joseph F. Rowley, aged 23, and Hezena E. Arnim, aged 21, both of Orange; D. Roberts Hancock, aged 36, of Redondo, and Winifred H. Stuart, aged 22, of Los Angeles; Andrew J. Gothard, aged 53, and Alberta Comer, aged 40, both of Los Angeles.

FULLERTON.

FULLERTON, March 9.—The City Trustees met with the engineer last evening, and, after going over the city map, found that there were twenty-five and one-half miles of streets in the city, and estimated that the highways could be oil-paved and put in good condition for $75,000. The City Attorney was instructed to look up the necessary steps to take in calling an election to vote bonds. The application of J. C. Braly and others, asking for a special election for this purpose,

SKULL CRUSHED, FACE A PULP.

LOAD OF TIMBER CAPSIZES ON WAGON DRIVER.

Death Ensues in Few Hours—Another Workman Hurt—Santa Barbara Stirred by Tragedy—Woman Shoots Man Who Then Strangles Her—Victim of Bullet in Critical Condition.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SANTA BARBARA, March 9.—James Backus, foreman for John Williamson, a contractor and house mover, met with a serious accident this morning while engaged in hauling blocking, which caused his death.

While the wagon was descending a rough hill the load became overbalanced and capsized on Backus, crushing his skull and reducing his face to a pulp. The right ear was completely torn off. A physician was summoned but the man died within a few hours.

Another workman, named Phillips, was also caught by the load and had his foot badly crushed.

WOMAN DEAD—MAN DYING.

About 1 o'clock this morning Sadie Whitlock, a woman about town, met her death by strangulation while consorting with Charles Brown, formerly of Colorado, at the Hoffman House, a cheap lodging-house on lower Chapala street. Brown lies at the Cottage Hospital in a precarious condition as the result of a gunshot wound in the left lung. The doctors have little hope of his recovery.

Early this morning a man in a room adjoining the room occupied by Brown and the woman heard moans and hailed the occupant, asking what the matter was. Brown replied that he had not been well but felt better.

At 7 o'clock the occupants of the house were again disturbed by groanings and on investigation found Brown lying in bed mortally wounded and the woman lying beside him, dead from the effect of strangulation. Brown claims that he and the woman procured a quart bottle of whisky and sought a room at the Hoffman for the night. They had been drinking together earlier in the evening, he stated, and both were well under the influence of liquor when they went to the lodging-house.

After about half of the whisky had been drunk Brown threw the bottle out of the window. The woman was so enraged at this action that she grabbed Brown's 38-caliber Smith & Wesson, which was lying on the dresser, and shot him. Brown grappled with the woman in order to protect himself, but choked her harder than he intended, he says, and she died in a few minutes. The woman, it is stated, has a husband in San Luis Obispo county. It is stated that Brown has a brother engaged in the mining business in Denver, Colo.

Sunny days at Coronado.

CORONA.

CORONA, March 9.—The City Trustees, after having heard all the testimony of the property owners in their appeal against acceptance of the McIntyre Cement Company's work on Hudson, Kellogg and Garretson avenues last night, condemned the work and decided that the contractor should grade from curb to property line, and also do the curbs and gutters as per specifications. The abutting property owners are to select their own man to superintend the work. The work as done by the McIntyre Cement Company of Riverside was accepted by Street Superintendent Kelley, but as it was not according to specifications the property holders appealed against this acceptance.

The board has accepted the ten-acre Pottery tract subdivision owned by G. R. Freeman.

The Board of Trade last evening voted to give a banquet in Masonic Hall on the evening of April 2, at the time of the annual election. H. A. Prizer, George Brown, W. C. Barth, F. M. Baird and Charles Larrabee were appointed a Committee on Banquet Arrangements. The Board of Trade of and Riverside are to guests of the local board on the occasion of the banquet.

LIFE TERM FOR HIM.

BAKERSFIELD, March 9.—Charles Burnell, who murdered George Belluomini the night of September 30, while the latter's wife was shielding her prostrate husband with her own body, was this afternoon sentenced to life imprisonment. The jury deliberated but forty minutes before a verdict, and it has become known that the vote of one juror is all that saved Burnell from a death sentence.

TRAINS RUN AGAIN.

BAKERSFIELD, March 9.—For the first time in four days a through train was run over the San Joaquin division of the Southern Pacific tonight. Orders were issued this afternoon and the announcement was made that the blocked track had been cleared.

SAN DIEGO.

SAN DIEGO, March 9.—It is announced that C. D. Hillman, a millionaire of Seattle, will invest $1,000,000 in San Diego county real estate. He has already purchased important holdings between Oceanside and San Diego, notably at La Costa, along the Santa Fé Railroad.

CONTRACTORS MISSING.

Los Angeles Board of Trade Gets Attachments on Concern in Monrovia City.

MONROVIA, March 9.—Ed and Joe Schmitz are missing. They were paint contractors and on the side, wholesaled paints and oils. Yesterday they were attached by the Board of Trade of Los Angeles, and it is claimed there is a shortage of something close to $2000. Constable Thomas is now in charge of the establishment. Where the Schmitzs are no one seems to know. It is alleged that they bought heavily of Los Angeles and San Francisco firms, and then disposed of the goods at less than wholesale price.

From the weather report kept by Joseph Combs it is ascertained that there has been a rainfall this year of 25.32 inches, which has only been exceeded twice since 1881.

MONROVIA NOTES.

Mrs. Newman delightfully entertained the little children of Room 2, of the Orange-avenue school last evening, together with their teacher, Miss Edna Walker, in honor of the birthday of her little daughter, Vera.

The blacksmiths of San Gabriel Valley have agreed to raise prices on horseshoeing and general blacksmithing, beginning April 1. This includes the towns of Monrovia, Duarte, Azusa, Covina and Glendora.

Postmaster Anson will be able to report to Uncle Samuel at the end of the year that the business of the Monrovia postoffice has amounted to $8000, which is considered good enough. This will bring the office here in the second class. In celebration of the event box rentals have already been materially reduced.

POMONA.

POMONA, March 9.—Young Lanchester, the sailor lad who was a victim of the Bennington disaster at San Diego, and who suffered an attack of epilepsy here Thursday night, has about given up hope of ever being well again. He states that several operations have been performed upon his skull in San Francisco and Chicago, without success, and he now seeks admission to the Soldiers' Home. Lanchester says that he had an epileptic fit in San Bernardino this week and becoming unconscious, was robbed of all his month's pension money, hence his necessity of walking to Pomona on his way to the Soldiers' Home, as an apparent hobo, for which he was at first taken.

The second production of "Ye District Skule," given by prominent local residents for the benefit of the Pomona Woman's Relief Corps, last night, was greeted with another crowded house.

Ira A. Lee announces his candidacy for the office of City Trustee from the Fourth Ward, the office now held by M. W. Miller. W. W. Midgley is a candidate for Trustee from the Fifth Ward, to succeed J. F. Ulery, incumbent, at next month's city election.

A cow suit is being heard before Justice Barnes and a jury, and the case may be carried to the higher courts. Mark Rose of Chino and C. H. Boggess of this city are engaged in a dispute over the possession and ownership of a measly and forlorn-looking little heifer, probably worth $25. Frank Daly of San Bernardino is attorney for Rose, the plaintiff, while R. K. Pitzer of this city is representing the defendant Boggess. The counsel fees and court expenses already have amounted to considerably more than the "bossy" is worth, but that does not temper the bitterness of the suit.

ARCADIA.

ARCADIA, March 9.—All is animation here. The building of the race track and the work being done by the White City Amusement Company, has stimulated the Pacific Electric to action and a new depot, one of the finest on the system, is to be constructed. The location selected is on a corner, about one block north of the Oakwood Hotel. This news was made public today.

Work is being pushed rapidly on the White City proposition. Excavating for the large lagoon is now under way, a large force being at work. The lagoon wil cover an acre. In the center of the lagoon, built on an island, will be a pagoda. This will be reached by arched rustic bridges. The chutes and the lake will be built near the Santa Fé tracks, and already proposition has arisen that is perplexing. The Santa Fé track at this point is much higher than the grounds, and it will require a very high board fence to obscure sight. An effort will be made to have the track lowered at this point.

E. J. "Lucky" Baldwin has again commenced work on the race course, and from this time it will take something larger than the Legislature at Sacramento to impede work. Damaging legislation was anticipated, but everything has been fixed up satisfactory to the sage of Arcadia and the work is being prosecuted with a full complement of men, money and mules.

The domestic infelicity in the Billy Mullen household has been amicably settled and the dove of peace reins. Mrs. Mullen has recovered from the beer glass episode of Tuesday.

—A moderate storm area is central this morning off the North California Coast, while a second disturbance is central over Colorado and New Mexico. These storms form a trough of low pressure extending from the Pacific Coast to Texas. The pressure has increased slightly in the Southwest, while a general rise is noted in the Eastern States and in Montana and the Dakotas. This distribution of pressure has resulted in unsettled weather, with showers, in California, Arizona, New Mexico, Nevada, Utah and the Pacific Northwest, Colorado, and portions of the Mississippi Valley. Along the Atlantic coast, the weather is mostly cloudy and colder than usual. The storm off the California coast is expected to move southeastward and cause unsettled, showery weather beginning late tonight and continuing through the greater part of Sunday.

Forecasts.—Local forecast for Los Angeles and vicinity: Increasing cloudiness, followed by showers late tonight; Sunday, showers; winds becoming southerly.

LOCAL PRODUCE MARKET.

While trading was not brisk yesterday morning, the demand for most commodities was good and stocks well cleaned up. Yesterday was a rallying day for potatoes. The market, which has been weak for sometime, reacted, and prices on Eastern varieties went up 15 cents on the hundred on 'Change. The reaction was felt in all quarters and no concessions were reported. Demand for potatoes is strong under the force of delayed shipments from the East. Receipts yesterday were 3081 sacks.

Stocks are reported to have advanced in the East. Yesterday's higher prices were not wholly unexpected as the advance is natural to the present conditions. Predictions are for higher prices this week on eastern potatoes. Forecasts are based on exchange bid and asked prices. Idaho potatoes were left at the 1.85 quotations. On 'Change 1.70 was asked for Colorados, and 1.55 was bid; no sales were made.

Onions continued weak. Assorted onions are offered at low prices.

Coast roads are opening and eggs and butter showed increased arrivals yesterday.

Eggs were steady. A drop of one cent will probably occur in prices this week. Ranch eggs in San Francisco sell at 21 cents.

Local and Valley creamery were the only Storage cheese has cleaned up. A car of eastern Dairies is due in this week.

Strawberries are coming in more plentifully. Supplies will be heavy this week if it does not rain. Demand is increasing daily. Stocks sold at 17@20 yesterday.

Asparagus weakened to 10@12 per pound. Lettuce continues to glut the market at 25@75 per crate. Peas and rhubarb are active.

A few small fish came in, but cleaned up early. Halibut was plentiful. Lobsters were scarce.

For the first time in three weeks no sales were made on 'Change yesterday.

Live poultry is firmer under limited supplies.

The receipts of produce as reported for yesterday's exchange were as follows: Eggs, 552 cases; butter, 19,910 lbs.; cheese, none; potatoes, 3081 sacks; onions, 600 sacks; beans, none; sweet potatoes, none.

BULLISH ON 'CHANGE IS ASSOCIATED OIL.

CONDITIONS were better on the Los Angeles Stock Exchange Saturday than was expected. Trading showed a fair amount of interest in the list, especially in the oil stocks.

Associated Oil continued very bullish, selling as high as 46 cash, and 47, buyer thirty, which, compared with this time last week, shows a rise of 7¼ points on the bid and 5¼ on the asked prices. Forty shares was all that could be found in the market yesterday morning. No reason can be found for the bulling of the stock. Some say that large inside interests are forcing it upward to enable them to unload with less loss than they would suffer should they have done so last week, when it was reported that Southern Pacific interests were selling. The fact that the dividend is due may also have had an effect on the market.

Rice Ranch made a clear jump of 10 points on the bid during the call, closing with 2.16 bid and none in the market. An offering of stock at 2.30, buyer ninety days, was snapped up immediately, and the general comment was that the stock was cheap at that price. Arguments on the bear side of the Rice Ranch market were rife two weeks ago, but the fact that the board of directors, in their last meeting, confirmed the regular monthly dividend of 3 per cent., has had a marked effect on the bull end of the game. One sale of 1000 shares of Mexican Petroleum was made at 1.34, the stock closing at 1.33¾@1.36. Columbia Oil was quiet and ⅝ up, as compared with Friday's bid, with the offering off 2, at 80. None was sold. Olinda Land showed little activity. Central was steady at 1.13¼@1.14. Fullerton Oil was offered down from 78 to 70, and closed without a bid. Western Union is on the sales sheet with a transaction of ten shares at 305. Union was a shade off at 215.75@216.75, with no trading. Other oil stocks were inactive.

Two Pacific Light and Power bonds were traded in at 98. This is the first stock-exchange transaction in bonds for nearly a week. Interest in the bond list shows signs of returning, however, as the quotations made on the popular issues indicate. The Home firsts are well liked, but closed yesterday with no bid and an asked price at 95½. Pasadena Homes were in demand at 83½, with the asked at 86. Others show but slight changes. The banking securities were quiet. Home preferred was in demand among the miscellaneous issues. Thirty shares sold for 65@65.25, after which the bid went up ⅝ and the stock, which had been offered at 65 at the opening, was put up to 66.50. Other stocks in this list were neglected.

MINING CALL INACTIVE.

It was another dull day among the mining stocks. All along the line there was a severe falling off. California Hills selling off at 6¼@6⅝. Johnnie Consolidated at 12, and Clark Copper at 34. Others were noticeably weaker, although not in the trading list.

EFFECT OF NEW YORK SLUMP.

"Is the effect of the bad financial conditions in New York felt here to any great extent?" was yesterday asked of H. L. Percy, one of the prominent members of the Stock Exchange. "Yes, we do feel the effects of any remarkably bad time in the New York market," was the reply. "While there is a lot of talk that we are too far away from the financial center of the country to be affected by conditions there, nevertheless it is a fact that whenever there is a panic or a market condition, such as has prevailed there within the last few days, the local market is affected. It is dull here now, and I have noticed it every time such conditions prevail in the East. I believe the local financial market feels the effects of a bad day there within fifteen minutes after the news has reached here."

"Why should it affect us so markedly?" was asked.

"Because the people who are speculating in New York stocks from the offices of the brokers who have wire connections to New York houses, speculate more or less extensively in the local stocks. When panicky times come they withdraw from the local market, because they need all their resources to protect themselves in the eastern centers. Money, which they may have out on call loans, is needed and called in,' thus straitening the local brokers and others for funds. That results in a lack of orders for the local floor, and we have a dull day."

WEEK-END REVIEW OF THE CITRUS MARKET.

LOS ANGELES, March 9.—The orange market is in good shape. The demand is good and prices both f. o. b. and delivered have increased fully 25 cents per box. This is partly due to increased demand and the reduction made by the railroads, amounting to 7c per box. Auction prices are better than shows on the surface. As some of the fruit en route was injured by frost there was some decay and an excess of large sizes. The eastern section of the country has now thawed out and so the danger from freezing is practically over. Nearly all the fruit now shipped out is iced so that the danger of decay is reduced to the minimum. Shipments are still light. The roads have all been tied up this last week. The Salt Lake is not trying to ship any fruit and the Santa Fé made no shipments Monday or Tuesday of this week. The Southern Pacific's Valley Line and Southern route have been in bad shape and it is probable that hundreds of cars of navels now on the trees will never be shipped at all as they are very ripe and the first warm spell will cause them to drop to the ground. There is at present a wide range of values in market quotations. Extra fancy oranges from the best districts are quoted as high as 2.10 per box, while the same grade from other localities runs down as low as 1.75. Lemons are in good demand and eastern dealers are having hard work to supply customers. There is an increasing inquiry from markets that never before handled the California lemon, and the season's prospects are bright. Prices range from 2.25 to 2.65 f. o. b., according to quality.

NEW YORK MARKETS.

SHARES AND MONEY.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEW YORK, March 9.—The short session at the Stock Exchange today was occupied with another large volume of business and wild price fluctuations. Inroads upon prices at different times during the session made new levels in many cases, but there were points of resistance throughout and the closing tone was strong with prices on the upgrade and not a few conspicuous net gains for the day. The points of the weakness that had most effect on speculative sentiment were United States Steel and Union Pacific. The first named made a low level at 37 within the first hour after the opening and rumors were diligently circulated of cancellation of orders for the company's product for future delivery. These received no official confirmation and the stock rallied with the general market and closed at a decline of 1-8. The preferred stock was supported and closed with a fractional gain. The special weakness in Union Pacific was attributed to fears of a suit by the government growing out of the Interstate Commerce Commission's investigation to compel the divorce of the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific. The Gould stocks were unsupported still and there were wide declines in some of the stocks not usual active. The Pennsylvania group, including Reading, gave evidence of absorption, and there was a vigorous rebound in Atchison. The bank statement was regarded as weak but its publication did not deter the bears from pursuing their late covering operations. The outflow of cash was larger than expected, but the stock market liquidation was reflected in the considerable loan contraction. Money and discounts rose in London but sterling exchange continued to recede here indicating a prospect of a contest for new arrivals of gold in London. Total sales of bonds, par value $1,664,000.

New York Cotton Market.

[BY PRIVATE WIRE TO FRED DORR.]

NEW YORK, March 9.—Cotton market was quiet and lower today with tone steady. The week-end statistics were bullish with a decrease of about 150,000 bales in the visible supply and spinners' takings well over last year with the total running about a million bales in excess of last season. Selling in Liverpool after the market had risen on the visible supply statement caused a lower range of foreign prices and our market just about responded to the decline abroad. Trading was not active; most of the business seemed to be of an evening up character. The close was at a net decline of 4 points. Southern spot markets generally steady and unchanged.

Dick says: Spots steady unchanged at 11.45. Weld and Wilson bought on the call. Moore sold.

Mrs. Cora B. Miller
Makes a Fortune

Started a Few Years Ago with No Capital, and Now Employs Nearly One Hundred Clerks and Stenographers.

Until a few years ago, Mrs. Cora B. Miller lived in a manner similar to that of thousands of other very poor women of the average small town and village. She now resides in her own palatial brownstone residence, and is considered one of the most successful business women in the United States.

Mrs. Miller's New Residence. Earned in Less Than One Year.

Several years ago Mrs. Miller learned of a mild and simple preparation that cured herself and several friends of female weakness and piles. She was besieged by so many women needing treatment that she decided to furnish it to those who might call for it. She started with only a few dollars capital, and the remedy, possessing true and wonderful merit, producing many cures when doctors and other remedies failed, the demand grew so rapidly she was several times compelled to seek larger quarters. She now occupies one of the city's largest office buildings, which she owns, and almost one hundred clerks and stenographers are required to assist in this great business.

MILLION WOMEN USE IT.

More than a million women have used Mrs. Miller's remedy, and no matter where you live, she can refer you to ladies in your own locality who can and will tell any sufferer that this marvelous remedy really cures women. Despite the fact that Mrs. Miller's business is very extensive, she is always willing to give aid and advice to every suffering woman who writes to her. She is a generous, good woman, and has decided to give away to women who have never used her medicine $10,000 worth absolutely FREE.

Every woman suffering with pains in the head, back and bowels, bearing-down feelings, nervousness, creeping sensations up the spine, melancholy, desire to cry, hot flashes, weariness, or piles from any cause, should sit right down and send her name and address to Mrs. Cora B. Miller, box 8209, Kokomo, Ind., and receive by mail (free of charge in plain wrapper,) a 50-cent box of her marvelous medicine; also her valuable book, which every woman should have.

Remember, this offer will not last long, for thousands and thousands of women who are suffering will take advantage of this generous means of getting cured. So if you are ailing do not suffer another day, but send your name and address to Mrs. Miller for the book and medicine before the $10,000 worth is all gone.

ENGINEERS SEE THE HARBORS.

AND LONG BEACH GIVES THE VISITORS A SPREAD.

Seventy-five Members of the Southern California Association Make Beach Tour by Special Car and Are Shown Proposed Improvements by Capt. Fries.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

LONG BEACH, March 9.—Seventy-five members of the Southern California Engineers' and Architects' Association spent the afternoon making a tour of the inner harbor, out to and around the breakwater, and then along the tortuous windings of the Cerritos Slough to the foot of Third street in Long Beach, where they entered automobiles and were given a spin about town.

The visitors came by two special cars on the Pacific Electric. After they reached Dominguez they were taken in charge by a committee of Long Beach citizens, including City Engineer Harvey E. Shaw, N. Bunnet May and James A. Miller. Under the careful pilotage of Capt. Amos Fries, Corps of Engineers, U. S. A., all the proposed plans of improvement in the Wilmington Lagoon, the inner harbor and the breakwater were shown.

The visitors and their hosts, after leaving Dominguez station, were whisked straight through to Point Firmin, where they secured a fine shore view of the breakwater and the still water anchorage.

They then returned to San Pedro, where the tug Warrior was in waiting, placed at their disposal by Hancock Banning. In this a visit was made around the breakwater and the work thoroughly examined.

Coming back, a stop was made at the dredger, the visitors being shown the vast amount of tideland that has been reclaimed by filling with the deposits dredged from the channel of the inner harbor.

Returning to San Pedro, the party boarded Capt. H. S. Carver's fleet of tunnel boats and led by the Margarita, the flotilla began the voyage up the bay, past Mormon Island and Wilmington and into Cerritos Slough, coming westward to the harbor now being dredged by the Los Angeles Dock and Terminal Company. The company's broad and ambitious plans were explained in detail by Charles H. Windham and Maj. A. L. Sondregger. The latter is chief engineer of the company and consulting engineer of the city of Long Beach. Passing the old mouth of the San Gabriel River, which is to be opened by orders of the War Department as the ocean entrance of the inland harbor, the visitors were shown the plans for dredging and the protection to be afforded by jetty entrances.

The work of the clamshell dredger which is building the dyke for the filling of the Craig shipbuilding site, was shown and the almost human workings of the huge shovels elicited many comments.

The party arrived at the foot of Third street about 6 o'clock and after a short ride, gathered in Eagles' Hall, corner First and Pine streets. While waiting for the doors of the banquet room to be opened they were addressed by Capt. Fries, who sketched in a rapid way the harbor plans as outlined and suggested by his board. He explained that these plans had not been adopted by the War Department because there was no appropriation available for the work. Various private concerns, notably the Dock and Terminal Company and the Wilmington Dock Company, had been given permission to construct deep water channels from the inner harbor and to avoid entanglements and endless complications, it was necessary for the local board of engineers to adopt some design for filing with the War Department.

Capt. Fines pointed out the bad features of the so-called "Peninsula plan," and, by means of a map, showed the good features of the design adopted, which provides for three turning basins, one at Wilmington lagoon, one at the west lagoon and the third near Terminal Island where the present harbor terminates.

As originally planned by the government, a big basin was intended at Wilmington to serve as anchorage during storms, but the building of the breakwater made this unnecessary. Vessels can now ride at anchor inside the breakwater, be towed up the inner harbor, discharge their cargoes, move on to one of the turning basins and return in safety.

The captain spoke of the permission to widen and deepen Cerritos Slough and called attention to the fact that the winding route would be shortened by half, making the distance from Long Beach to the outer harbor about 24,000 feet.

Being asked about the filling up of the channels by silt, Capt. Fries said the turning basins would get all the deposits, making its removal easy and not interfering with navigation. As to the Long Beach inland harbor, he was of the opinion that the opening of the ocean entrance, and the maintaining of the Cerritos channel would create a tidal current that would be scouring in its effects.

The dredging operations of the two channels, he said, meant the excavation of nearly 14,000,000 cubic feet of earth, which would reclaim over 300 acres of land. He regarded the San Gabriel ocean entrance as very desirable, because, when the harbor became a big shipping port, the inner harbor channel would at times be crowded with vessels on both sides, as it is only 500 feet wide, and then another ocean entrance would be valuable.

At 7 o-clock the banquet was served. Those at the tables were: J. B. Lippencott, Harry Z. Osborne, A. B. Waddingham, Frank J. Currie, Thomas A. Eisen, Arthur B. Benton, Harry Iles, H. G. Folsom, W. T. Knowlton, J. N. Preston, John P. Krempel, Octavius Morgan, J. A. Bennal, H. P. Drake, Daniel S. Halliday, Olin G. McWain, C. S. Pope, J. O. Marsh, H. K. Wheeler, G. Reichant, M. H. Bridle, H. E. Strong of Long Beach.

After the fine spread had been disposed of, Secretary James A. Miller of the Chamber of Commerce introduced Dr. L. A. Perce, who gave a short, but warm address of welcome. He was followed by Maj. A. L. Sondregger, who spoke of the development of the harbor, especially the inner portion, and what it means for all this section of Southern California. Other short talks were made and adjournment came about 10:30.

DOLGEVILLE PLANT.

Directors Hold Meeting, Re-elect Dolge President and Name Two New Members.

The directors of the Alfred Dolge Manufacturing Company met yesterday and reëlected Mr. Dolge as president. Willis Booth and F. S. McKee were named as new members of the board, those reëlected being W. G. Kerckhoff, Alfred Dolge and Mr. Hood. The latter becomes secretary and treasurer, W. T. Noble having resigned.

The company expects to make things hum on the return of Mr. Huntington from the East as he is greatly interested and will see it through. There have been some losses, but these will likely soon be more than regained in new business.

STABS WOMAN; IS STABBED.

General Mix-up of Two Men and Woman on Aliso Street Leads to Triple Arrest.

P. Quarlejo and Augusta Prejo were both wounded in a general fight which occurred last night at the home of the latter at Aliso and Lyon streets.

L. Rivera and Quarlejo met and went to the home of the Prejo woman. Quarlejo wanted Rivera to drink with him but the woman objected. Quarlejo grabbed the woman by a hand and bit off a piece of the little finger. He also stabbed her in the arm.

Rivera then fought Quarlejo and stabbed him several times, inflicting serious, although not dangerous wounds. All three were arrested.

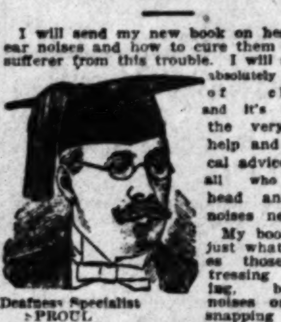
Head Noises
Book Free



I will send my new book on head and ear noises and how to cure them to any sufferer from this trouble. I will send it absolutely free of charge and it's full of the very best help and medical advice, that all who have head and ear noises need.

My book tells just what causes those distressing ringing, buzzing noises or that snapping in the ears when the nose is blown. It explains how they are the signs of serious and sometimes very dangerous trouble in the inner parts of the ear, and how, if neglected, they too often result in that terrible affliction—Deafness. Fine pictures of the inside passages of the head and ears, where the trouble starts, illustrate the book. Best of all, however, it points out how head and ear noises can be cured, easily and painlessly, right at home, so that the ear will be in perfect condition and the hearing clear and distinct.

Don't suffer with head and ear noises any longer. Let me send you this book that will tell you just what to do. You're gladly and freely welcome to it—it shall not cost you a cent. Write your name and address plainly on the dotted lines and mail the free book coupon to Deafness Specialist SPROULE, 394 Trade Building, Boston

CURES DRUNKARDS

Mary's Miracle.

The day of working miracles,
I'm sure is far from past,
And now to show you what I mean,
I'll tell you of the last
Great one that happened right to me,
For I was part of it, you see.

You know the life I used to lead—
O God, a living death,
A drunkard of the hopeless kind—
For, scarce a sober breath
I ever drew, and hope and pride
Were lost to me and nearly all beside.

One friend alone was left—my wife,
God bless her ev'ry hour!
She saved me from a drunkard's grave,
And Whiskey's wicked power.
Just how she saved me you shall see—
This is the way she told it me.

When hope was almost dead within
Her faithful, constant breast,
She read of Dr. Haines' Cure,
Then without stay or rest,
She sent for one Trial Sample free,
And gave it unbeknown to me!

I drank of it at ev'ry meal—
I ate it in my bread,
While Mary watched me anxiously,
But ne'er a word she said;
Until one day I stopped to think
That I had lost my love for drink!

When, quite unconsciously I was cured,
My Mary told me all;
It seemed the very act of God,
A modern miracle;
I call it this, because my wife
And Haines' Cure had saved my life.

And now my little story's done,
My ev'ry word is true,
And what this treatment did for me,
The same 'twill do for you;
And wives and mothers—one and all,
Take heart of Mary's Miracle.

Save those near and dear to you from a life of degradation, poverty and disgrace. You can do it by cutting out this coupon.

Fill in your name and address on blank lines below. Then cut out this coupon and mail it to Dr. J. W. Haines, 9415 Glenn Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio. You will receive in return enough of the remedy to prove to you that it will cure drunkenness in any form. You give it in tea, coffee or food. The drunkard will stop drinking without knowing why. You will also get books and testimonials to prove how hundreds have been saved.

TOTEM FOR BLACKSMITHS.

Assembly Passes Walking Delegate McMullin's Bill to Drive Out Free Workmen.

Blacksmiths throughout California who wear not the totem, both employers and employed, may be affected if the Senate concurs in the action of the Assembly in passing the bill introduced by McMullin, the Bakersfield walking delegate whom Kern has seen fit to send to Sacramento. The bill is the one to which The Times has called attention before, providing for an examination of all members of the trade before a State commission, fee $1 a head. If candidates are obliged to go to Sacramento, it is easy to see the hardship worked, while the commission travels around the State the expense will be a nice item.

The motive for the bill, however, is simply that its author hopes for a commission of totemites who will refuse a certificate to all except unionists and ask no questions of them as to proficiency. He is himself one of the blacksmiths now supposed to be on strike in Bakersfield and the bill is intended solely to bolster a lost cause, but its effect upon the trade all over California will be bad. To remove any possible doubts as to the motives, the Bakersfield Echo, McMullin's only supporter in the newspaper field, declares that it is "a strong union measure."

The same paper also gives a list of the members voting, which may be of interest as showing who wears and who does not wear the collar.

Ayes—Messrs. Barry, Baxter, Beban, Bishop, Boyle, Bush, Butler, Case, Coghlan, Cornish, Cullen, Estudillo, Fisher, Forcea, Fratessa, Hammon, Hans, Hartmann, Held, Johnson of Sacramento, Johnson of San Diego, Kohlman, Leeds, Lemon, Ludington, Lynch, McGuire, McKeon, McMullin, O'Brien, Pierce, Pyle, Root, Stanton, Strohl, Thompson of San Francisco, Thompson of Los Angeles, Transue, Walsh, Wessling, Wilson and Mr. Speaker—43.

Come this evening and you will gain knowledge of yourself never dreamed of before.

Either there is or there is not a higher existence than recognized by ordinary man. If there is it is the business of science to discover it and teach mankind the way to attain it.

Mind appears to be shut up in the [illegible] circle of its own ideas, without any capacity of breaking through the circle or apprehending any reality but itself.

Man has become weary of his thoughts and longs for power to break the circle that keeps him enslaved.

Without this power folly or madness is usually the lot of mankind.

PROFESSOR SHELDON.

THE WORLD'S GREATEST PSYCHIC.

It is just as cheap to see the best.
The World-famed Clairvoyant and Astral Dead-trance Medium, Psychic Palmist.
Special this week.

$1 Low Fee. $1
$1 One Dollar. $1

My $5 reading $1 if you bring this advertisement.

Great Reduction.
Will for the first time during his professional career reduce his consultation fee to
$1.00—One Dollar—$1.00
$1.00—One Dollar—$1.00
to give every one an opportunity to test his powers and to demonstrate to the utmost satisfaction of all that he has no equal as a clairvoyant.

Those who wish to take advantage of this low fee must call at once.

THE NAME SHELDON
A DOUBLE GUARANTEE.

MAN OF PSYCHIC GIFT POWER IS SHELDON.

The most critical test that one who practices a profession must submit to is the crucial test of time. No business that is ever so slightly tinged with fakirism or doubt can withstand the development of time and the interchange of ideas among those who consult, investigate and pass judgment. Professor Sheldon has been in California eighteen years. He has been consulted by thousands. The best evidence of his wonderful power is the testimony of his large clientele, who come from every walk in life; secondary to this is the true and brilliant work of eighteen years of restless activity and without exciting the hostility or failing to secure the admiration of every person who has consulted him. A man should be judged by his works, and so he is. Prof. Sheldon has been tried. He has met every expectation, every advertised promised, and his reputation is established.

I hereby solemnly agree and guarantee to make no charge if I fail to call you by name in full, names of your friends, enemies or rivals. I promise to tell you whether your husband, wife or sweetheart is true or false, tell you how to gain the love of the one you most desire, even though miles away. How to succeed in business, speculation, lawsuits; how to marry the one of your choice; how to regain youth, health and vitality. Removes all evil influences, cures drink habit, locates treasures, cures all nervous diseases.

How can I have good luck?
How can I succeed in business?
How can I make my home happy?
How can I conquer my enemies?
How can I marry the one I choose?
How can I marry well?
How soon can I marry?
How can I conquer my rival?
How can I make any one love me?
How soon will my love propose?
How can I get a letter?
How can I get a good position?
How can I remove bad influences?
How can I control any one?
How make distant ones think of me?
How can I settle my quarrel?
How can I hold my husband's love?
How can I keep my wife's love?
Sheldon never asks questions.

STANDING CHALLENGE.
$5000—FOR HIS EQUAL—$5000.

SHELDON
has been a native of California for the last eighteen years and is legally ordained to one of the oldest spiritualist societies in the world.

My only reason for calling you by name and what you called for—I do this incidentally as a chain to read by.

He will tell you frankly your condition and what you may expect; if nothing can be done for you he will not take one cent of your money. Has not this honesty on the face of it?

The folowing list shows purely and simply that Sheldon has been consulted by the most popular and most noted men and women of the world, and his reading of their lives was pronounced most wonderful—Julia Marlowe, Sarah Bernhardt, Helen Gould, Hon. C. H. Harrison, President McKinley, President Harrison, President Cleveland, Senator Depew, Senator Hanna, Senator Foraker, Senator Spooner.

No man has ever been consulted in more notable affairs than he. In Europe and America he has advised thousands in various walks of life, and always to their advantage.

Sheldon stands alone, possessing a force, a power, a gift—call what you will—that none can explain, none can account for.

During the last ten months I have brought around through this wonderful power of personal control, 721 marraiages, 142 separations, without any after trouble, came by the mutual consent of opposing parties; located 16 buried treasures; located 19 wills and 11 deeds; success in gaining 810 pensions; reunited 118 separated; have helped 182 investors; there have been 714 cases of such private nature I do not feel like classifying; in fact, it suffices to only say there is no heart so sad or wish too great that your hopes cannot be speedily realized by the force of this wonderful power.

He can relieve your anxiety, care, embarassment, can astonish, guide, comfort, cheer and strengthen you.

Make no change in business, do not buy or sell a rooming-house, do not buy mining stock, do not buy a lot, a farm, a ranch, or make a lease without first seeing Sheldon. He will advise you to your advantage. He asks no questions.

SUCCESS AWAITS YOU.
OPPORTUNITY KNOCKS AT YOUR DOOR.
WILL YOU ANSWER?

BEWARE
of pretenders and partially developed mediums. They copy his advertisement and in many smaler cities use his name. Please remember, Professor Sheldon can be seen only at his home office, in the Windham, 109½ S. Broadway.

My practice and professional reputation are built upon "honor," reasonable charges, fair dealings, faithful service and speedy success for my clients have won for me the largest practice in the State of California. My superior knowledge and power, give me advantages which warrant me in guaranteeing safer, surer and more rapid results than can be obtained elsewhere.

All this week, $5 reading $1.

MRS. MASSON,

the noted palmist of London, Eng., may be consulted at

by those desiring CAREFUL, CONSCIENTIOUS AND SCIENTIFIC HAND-READINGS FROM ONE OF THE FOREMOST PALMISTS OF THE DAY.

The earnest student and thinker will soon learn, in his investigations along psychological lines, that that which pertains to occult phenomena proper, can readily be distinguished from crude and oft-exposed SLEIGHT-OF-HAND TRICKS, the most common of which is the telling of the subject's name, age, etc., AFTER HE HAS HIMSELF WRITTEN THAT INFORMATION.

PALMISTRY, HONESTLY PRACTICED, WILL NOT tell you your name, but it WILL give you information of considerably greater value in everyday life.

Your vocation, your present line of work, matters of health, marriage and domestic life, financial conditions and ways and means of climbing out of a rut of ill-luck into wide paths of success and prosperity can all be told you through scientific palmistry WITHOUT A SINGLE QUESTION, WRITTEN OR VERBAL.

MRS. MASSON DOES NOT APPEAL TO IGNORANT SUPERSTITION, BUT TO THE FINEST INTELLIGENCE.

HIGH-CLASS PATRONAGE SOLICITED.

FOR FOUR DAYS ONLY.
Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday.
REGULAR FEE, $2, $3 AND $5.
ALL READINGS REDUCED THIS WEEK
I CALL YOU BY FULL NAME.

I possess the SECRET POWER of reconstructing unhappy domestic affairs and making the home happy, of gaining the one you wish in marriage, of making the ONE YOU LOVE ADMIRE AND LOVE YOU, of overcoming rivals, gives you the SECRET POWER OF INFLUENCING PEOPLE WITHOUT THEIR KNOWLEDGE OF DOING YOUR EVERY WISH, OF OVERCOMING ENEMIES AND PLACING YOU IN A PLACE OF POWER AND INFLUENCE.

ST. ELMO,
THE ACKNOWLEDGED ADEPT AND RECOGNIZED AUTHORITY OF HINDOO PHILOSOPHY AND OCCULT MYSTERIES MAKES A REMARKABLE STATEMENT: "YOUR GREATEST WISH CAN BE REALIZED—YOU WOULD NOT DESIRE A THING IF YOU WERE NOT CAPABLE OF ATTAINING IT."

I KNOW HOW TO CONTROL AND USE THAT POWER FOR YOUR SUCCESS AND MINE. IF YOU WISH TO SUCCEED IN ANY BUSINESS UNDERTAKING, CONSULT ME. I can put you on the right road. If you desire to win in love, or be reunited with one from whom some trouble or estrangment separates you, I CAN AND WILL HELP YOU TO GAIN THE DESIRE OF YOUR HEART. Are you tired of being poor and living a "from-hand-to-mouth" existence? If so, COME TO ME AND I WILL SHOW YOU A BETTER WAY. Life is not half so much of a mystery as some people would have you believe. If you had studied more in Nature's laws and learned the lessons there revealed you would know better WHY SOME PEOPLE SUCCEED AND OTHERS FAIL. There is a good reason, just the same as THERE IS A REASON why water will run down hill more easily than it will run up hill. I CAN EXPLAIN THAT REASON to you. I AM SUCCESSFUL MYSELF. I do not make this claim in the spirit of a braggart or egoist, but to enable you to appreciate what I can do for you.

MY EXTENSIVE PATRONAGE AND GREAT SUCCESS ARE THE ENVY OF ALL COMPETITORS. I AM NEVER IDLE. MY MOTTO IS—"WORK AND WIN." I HELP MY PATRONS TO SUCCEED IN ATTAINING THEIR VARIOUS AMBITIONS, THAT IS WHY I HAVE SO MANY OF THEM, AND WHY EACH ONE RECOMMENDS ME TO THEIR FRIENDS.

The All-wise Creator did not endow you with high ideas, noble inspirations, desire for happiness and return for that great love craving within your heart without at the same time placing within your reach the means of attaining these desires. If you are in trouble of any kind or not satisfied with your condition in life, come to me and I will make this clear to you. I have helped others. I CAN HELP YOU. Positively NO CHARGE if I fail to TELL YOUR NAME IN FULL, your occupation, what you called for, whom and when you will marry, anything you wish to know.

Come this evening and you will gain knowledge of yourself never dreamed of before.

Either there is or there is not a higher existence than recognized by ordinary man. If there is it is the business of science to discover it and teach mankind the way to attain it.

Mind appears to be shut up in the magic circle of its own ideas, without any capacity of breaking through the circle or apprehending any reality but itself.

Man has become weary of his thoughts and longs for power to break the circle that keeps him enslaved.

Without this power folly or madness is usually the lot of mankind.

THE NAME SHELDON
A DOUBLE GUARANTEE.

MAN OF PSYCHIC GIFT POWER IS SHELDON.

The most critical test that one who practices a profession must submit to is the crucial test of time. No business that is ever so slightly tinged with fakirism or doubt can withstand the development of time and the interchange of ideas among those who consult, investigate and pass judgment. Professor Sheldon has been in California eighteen years. He has been consulted by thousands. The best evidence of his wonderful power is the testimony of his large clientele, who come from every walk in life; secondary to this is the true and brilliant work of eighteen years of restless activity and without exciting the hostility or failing to secure the admiration of every person who has consulted him. A man should be judged by his works, and so he is. Prof. Sheldon has been tried. He has met every expectation, every advertised promised, and his reputation is established.

I hereby solemnly agree and guarantee to make no charge if I fail to call you by name in full, names of your friends, enemies or rivals. I promise to tell you whether your husband, wife or sweetheart is true or false, tell you how to gain the love of the one you most desire, even though miles away. How to succeed in business, speculation, lawsuits; how to marry the one of your choice; how to regain youth, health and vitality. Removes all evil influences, cures drink habit, locates treasures, cures all nervous diseases.

How can I have good luck?
How can I succeed in business?
How can I make my home happy?
How can I conquer my enemies?
How can I marry the one I choose?
How can I marry well?
How soon can I marry?
How can I conquer my rival?
How can I make any one love me?
How soon will my love propose?
How can I get a letter?
How can I get a good position?
How can I remove bad influences?
How can I control any one?
How make distant ones think of me?
How can I settle my quarrel?
How can I hold my husband's love?
How can I keep my wife's love?
Sheldon never asks questions.

STANDING CHALLENGE.
$5000—FOR HIS EQUAL—$5000.

SHELDON
has been a native of California for the last eighteen years and is legally ordained to one of the oldest spiritualist societies in the world.

My only reason for calling you by name and what you called for—I do this incidentally as a chain to read by.

He will tell you frankly your condition and what you may expect; if nothing can be done for you he will not take one cent of your money. Has not this honesty on the face of it?

The folowing list shows purely and simply that Sheldon has been consulted by the most popular and most noted men and women of the world, and his reading of their lives was pronounced most wonderful—Julia Marlowe, Sarah Bernhardt, Helen Gould, Hon. C. H. Harrison, President McKinley, President Harrison, President Cleveland, Senator Depew, Senator Hanna, Senator Foraker, Senator Spooner.

No man has ever been consulted in more notable affairs than he. In Europe and America he has advised thousands in various walks of life, and always to their advantage.

Sheldon stands alone, possessing a force, a power, a gift—call what you will—that none can explain, none can account for.

During the last ten months I have brought around through this wonderful power of personal control, 721 marriages, 142 separations, without any after trouble, came by the mutual consent of opposing parties; located 16 buried treasures; located 19 wills and 11 deeds; success in gaining 810 pensions; reunited 118 separated; have helped 132 investors; there have been 714 cases of such private nature I do not feel like classifying; in fact, it suffices to only say there is no heart so sad or wish too great that your hopes cannot be speedily realized by the force of this wonderful power.

He can relieve your anxiety, care, embarassment, can astonish, guide, comfort, cheer and strengthen you.

Make no change in business, do not buy or sell a rooming-house, do not buy mining stock, do not buy a lot, a farm, a ranch, or make a lease without first seeing Sheldon. He will advise you to your advantage. He asks no questions.

SUCCESS AWAITS YOU.
OPPORTUNITY KNOCKS AT YOUR DOOR.
WILL YOU ANSWER?

BEWARE
of pretenders and partially developed mediums. They copy his advertisement and in many smaler cities use his name. Please remember, Professor Sheldon can be seen only at his home office, in the Windham, 109½ S. Broadway.

My practice and professional reputation are built upon "honor," reasonable charges, fair dealings, faithful service and speedy success for my clients have won for me the largest practice in the State of California. My superior knowledge and power, give me advantages which warrant me in guaranteeing safer, surer and more rapid results than can be obtained elsewhere.

All this week, $5 reading $1.

MRS. MASSON,

the noted palmist of London, Eng., may be consulted at

by those desiring CAREFUL, CONSCIENTIOUS AND SCIENTIFIC HAND-READINGS FROM ONE OF THE FOREMOST PALMISTS OF THE DAY.

The earnest student and thinker will soon learn, in his investigations along psychological lines, that that which pertains to occult phenomena proper, can readily be distinguished from crude and oft-exposed SLEIGHT-OF-HAND TRICKS, the most common of which is the telling of the subject's name, age, etc., AFTER HE HAS HIMSELF WRITTEN THAT INFORMATION.

PALMISTRY, HONESTLY PRACTICED, WILL NOT tell you your name, but it WILL give you information of considerably greater value in everyday life.

Your vocation, your present line of work, matters of health, marriage and domestic life, financial conditions and ways and means of climbing out of a rut of ill-luck into wide paths of success and prosperity can all be told you through scientific palmistry WITHOUT A SINGLE QUESTION, WRITTEN OR VERBAL.

MRS. MASSON DOES NOT APPEAL TO IGNORANT SUPERSTITION, BUT TO THE FINEST INTELLIGENCE.

HIGH-CLASS PATRONAGE SOLICITED.
Daily 9 to 6; Sundays 9 to 1.

ST. ELMO
PSYCHIC ASSISTED BY
MME. ST. ELMO.

A scientific palmist of ability. A graduate of Cheiro. The brightest star of her profession.

SPECIAL READING,
25C.
FOR FOUR DAYS ONLY.
Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday.
REGULAR FEE, $2, $3 AND $5.
ALL READINGS REDUCED THIS WEEK
I CALL YOU BY FULL NAME.

I possess the SECRET POWER of reconstructing unhappy domestic affairs and making the home happy, of gaining the one you wish in marriage, of making the ONE YOU LOVE ADMIRE AND LOVE YOU, of overcoming rivals, gives you the SECRET POWER OF INFLUENCING PEOPLE WITHOUT THEIR KNOWLEDGE OF DOING YOUR EVERY WISH, OF OVERCOMING ENEMIES AND PLACING YOU IN A PLACE OF POWER AND INFLUENCE.

ST. ELMO,
THE ACKNOWLEDGED ADEPT AND RECOGNIZED AUTHORITY OF HINDOO PHILOSOPHY AND OCCULT MYSTERIES MAKES A REMARKABLE STATEMENT: "YOUR GREATEST WISH CAN BE REALIZED—YOU WOULD NOT DESIRE A THING IF YOU WERE NOT CAPABLE OF ATTAINING IT."

I KNOW HOW TO CONTROL AND USE THAT POWER FOR YOUR SUCCESS AND MINE. IF YOU WISH TO SUCCEED IN ANY BUSINESS UNDERTAKING, CONSULT ME. I can put you on the right road. If you desire to win in love, or be reunited with one from whom some trouble or estrangment separates you, I CAN AND WILL HELP YOU TO GAIN THE DESIRE OF YOUR HEART. Are you tired of being poor and living a "from-hand-to-mouth" existence? If so, COME TO ME AND I WILL SHOW YOU A BETTER WAY. Life is not half so much of a mystery as some people would have you believe. If you had studied more in Nature's laws and learned the lessons there revealed you would know better WHY SOME PEOPLE SUCCEED AND OTHERS FAIL. There is a good reason, just the same as THERE IS A REASON why water will run down hill more easily than it will run up hill. I CAN EXPLAIN THAT REASON to you. I AM SUCCESSFUL MYSELF. I do not make this claim in the spirit of a braggart or egoist, but to enable you to appreciate what I can do for you.

MY EXTENSIVE PATRONAGE AND GREAT SUCCESS ARE THE ENVY OF ALL COMPETITORS. I AM NEVER IDLE. MY MOTTO IS—"WORK AND WIN." I HELP MY PATRONS TO SUCCEED IN ATTAINING THEIR VARIOUS AMBITIONS, THAT IS WHY I HAVE SO MANY OF THEM, AND WHY EACH ONE RECOMMENDS ME TO THEIR FRIENDS.

The All-wise Creator did not endow you with high ideas, noble inspirations, desire for happiness and return for that great love craving within your heart without at the same time placing within your reach the means of attaining these desires. If you are in trouble of any kind or not satisfied with your condition in life, come to me and I will make this clear to you. I have helped others. I CAN HELP YOU. Positively NO CHARGE if I fail to TELL YOUR NAME IN FULL, your occupation, what you called for, whom and when you will marry, anything you wish to know.

I WANT TWO OR THREE RESPONSIBLE business men who can invest from $5000 to $25,000 each to join me in establishing an entirely new manufacturing business to cover the United States; the product has never been manufactured before and is of daily use and consumption in every home and elsewhere. A factory for supplying the local market has been started in Los Angeles, and a large factory building fully equipped with spur tracks running into it from both the Southern Pacific and Santa Fe railways, has been leased for a term of ten years. The NET profits on the output necessary to supply the PRESENT local daily demand will be over $3000 per month, and recent developments prove conclusively that this demand will increase rapidly from month to month. This business is practically a monopoly as the product as well as the automatic machinery for manufacturing it is fully protected by United States patent just issued; it is absolutely safe, permanent, sound, of the highest class and will appeal at once to the most conservative business man. Much money and labor have already been expended in developing the subject so that it is now easily investigated. It has been submitted to the highest authorities in Los Angeles as to its sanitary feature and has received their hearty indorsement; can prove that more than $250,000 net profit can easily be made this year. Knowledge of the details of the business, which can be easily acquired will convince any person that the above statements are true and not overdrawn. Any person answering this advertisement will please give references or information which will enable the advertiser to determine their standing and responsibility, otherwise an interview will not be granted; no agents, principals only. For personal interview address A, box 186, TIMES OFFICE. 10

WE HAVE AN OPTION TO PURCHASE the controlling interest in one of the best and surest paying propositions in California today at a price far below the actual value of the real estate and live assets value of the company. The proposition is a little larger than we are able to handle alone at present. We are, however, very anxious to exercise the option so that we may be able to purchase a third or a quarter interest in it for ourselves. We are looking for some reliable parties, who will all pull together, to assist us in completing this option. We see a great big thing in it during the next six months both in income and increase in value. Our time is limited to complete this and early action must be taken. and any other stock that is sold anywhere. Having the largest stock brokerage business in Los Angeles, I can supply what you want, and can get the best prices for your stock.

The market has slumped on the listed stocks on the San Francisco Exchange all week; but I look for a much higher market this week. Always recollect to buy on a low market.

I hear that George Wingfield is in town resting. Probably getting ready for a bull campaign after the timid holders have been forced out of the market. I advise the public to hold on and let the bears sell short. A reaction must come very soon.

The stocks I advised my customers to buy have not felt the slump. I advise the immediate purchase of Frances Mohawk, Mohawk Extension, Goldfield Herald anywhere under 10 cents, Sandstorm at market, and Mohawk Florence at 30 cents. I have some splendid reports from these properties which I will give you upon application.

Now, I must ask the indulgence of my customers again, for I will have to bring before them an extract of a letter sent to them by my nephew, Roderick MacDermott. The letter is as follows:

HAYWARDS (Cal.) March 2, 1907.
Mr. Edward MacDermott, Los Angeles, Cal.
My Dear Sir: I received a letter from Roderick MacDermott today, in which he says, "I hope to retain your business patronage, etc." I understand you have separated your business interests, and would like to know which of you holds my Lincoln stock. Would you kindly advise me on this point?
Yours truly, C. B. ROGERS.

My nephew, Roderick MacDermott, while working in my employ, took a list of my customer's names and sent them these letters. I again say that Roger MacDermott was employed by me at a salary of $15 per week, which I paid him weekly, as my checks can prove. I discharged him from my employ for good and sufficient reasons, which may later appear. His attempt to show he was a partner of mine is false.

I have never had a partner in Los Angeles since I have been in business here. The Southwest Miners' Stock Exchange is owned and controlled by myself, and some of the brokers are in my employ. Likewise I pay the rent, so I have no partners, and want none. I have built up a good square business in Los Angeles and pay spot cash for everything. My credit is [illegible] Ask any business man to irresponsible brokers. If you do, you do so at your own risk.

Edward MacDermott will do your business in an honest, square manner, in the future as he has done in the past. I will always strive to treat my customers with the best that is in me. I again advise the purchase of the good listed stocks.

Edward MacDermott has placed with him several large blocks of fine stocks which the owners want to obtain loans upon. Customers who have money to invest should look this up.

Edward MacDermott has several lots of real estate which the owners wish to trade for good mining stock.

MINING—

MINING COMPANIES—
If you want results in the shape of selling your stock, why not employ us as your advertising agents.

Department stores, in fact, every line of business, with the exception of mining, put aside a certain appropation of so much, and expect results.

We can get you results, and if you will take the trouble to call on us, we will gladly show you what results are, or refer you to those who are using our methods.

For $100 we can put your proposition before 25,000 actual interested people in April. Can you do better than that? Come and see us, if you want your stock sold.

CHAPMAN, BRISCOE & CO.,
10 701-707 Delta Bldg.

HAVE YOU STOCKS OR BONDS FOR SALE? If so, you want our help. Our methods are not guess work. They are founded on the safest and surest plans known. We do not allow our clients to waste postage. Our plans mean that you send direct to interested parties. We have spent months and money in getting in touch with men all over the East, who want to sell stocks. They furnish the names of those they believe they can interest, and they agree to follow up by a personal call any matter sent. Do you know of a surer plan than this? We have other ways. Stop wasting money and time. Call in and let us show you; what we are doing for others we can do for you. Considering our services you will find our charges low.

ANNUAL MEETING.
PENN-WYOMING COPPER CO.
At the annual meeting of the company held at Encampment, Feb. 12, the former board of trustees and officers were re-elected.

MARKET FOR PENN-WYOMING STOCK.
Buyers who have been hoping to obtain this copper stock at lower prices have been unable to do so, and during the last week have steadily raised their bids with little or no stock obtainable. There is no doubt but that the stock will go to $1.25 or $1.50 by the early part of April. When the news of the big dividend that can be paid then is telegraphed over the country, look out for a big jump in the price.

Holders are now asking 95c to $1.02.

I say again, "Buy Penn-Wyoming now."

SAY SHE DRUGGED THEM.

Mrs. B. J. Byer was arrested last night on the charge of robbery. According to the police, she drugged and robbed W. Potter and J. Hines in a lodging-house near Fourth and Hill streets. The young men say that they met the woman at a Spring-street café; that she induced them to take several drinks and to accompany her to her room, where she opened a bottle of wine. After drinking it, they say, they became unconscious. Potter told the police that he met Mrs. Byer in a café three days ago and that she gave him a pair of diamond earrings and her watch to make up for his loss. The young men claim to have lost $125 and a gold watch.

THINKS THAW'S MOTHER DAFT.

Retired Baptist Minister to Give Evidence.

Tells of Visit at Which She Acted Queerly.

Jerome Now Busy Preparing State's Case.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SPRINGFIELD (Mass.) March 9.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Rev. Robert Hunter, a retired Baptist clergyman who came to Springfield from New York a few months ago, will testify for the prosecution in the Thaw case, his evidence bearing upon the question of Harry Thaw's tendency to mental instability.

Rev. Hunter's testimony relates entirely to Mrs. William Thaw, whom he visited in Pittsburgh on two occasions, to solicit contributions for harbor mission work in New York.

Rev. Hunter describes as follows the interviews which it is understood will constitute his testimony:

"Just before Christmas, in 1905, I called on Mrs. Thaw in the interest of the harbor mission fund. She received me graciously, bade me stay for luncheon and entertained me for some three hours, enquiring closely into the details of harbor work, and giving me a donation of $250 for the purchase of tracts. She also invited me to call and see her should I again visit Pittsburgh.

"Accordingly, last May, when my duties brought me to Pittsburgh, I called at Mrs. Thaw's house. Much to my surprise, she denied me wholly. I reminded her of my last visit, and of her gracious invitation to call again. She denied ever having seen me before, and acted in the most amazing manner.

"I am not an expert in mental diseases, but have had many opportunities to study the insane, having visited in asylums all the way from Montevideo to Maine. Mrs. Thaw's actions on the occasion of my last visit to her house were similar to those noticed among the insane.

"I am fully convinced that she was then mentally unbalanced. Harry Thaw had just returned from Europe, where he was reported to have married Evelyn Nesbit, but his wife did not at that time accompany him to Pittsburgh."

JEROME NOW BUSY.

With the real work of the prosecution still ahead of him, Dist.-Atty. Jerome spent many busy hours today preparing the State's case in rebuttal, which will begin Monday morning with the resumption of the trial of Harry K. Thaw before Justice Fitzgerald.

Most of the day the District Attorney was closeted with nine alienists, six new experts having been summoned into consultation with Drs. McDonald and Mabon.

Jerome declined to discuss the identity of the new members of his force of alienists. Their advent, it was said, was to assist the District Attorney in preparing his hypothetical questions which he will put to the experts when they go on the witness stand.

It was currently reported today that Jerome had determined to push the case to a conclusion and not to ask for a lunacy commission. All the members of the District Attorney's staff are sanguine that their chief will be able to throw sufficient doubt upon Evelyn Thaw's story at least to tend to discredit her in the eyes of the jury, and they further declare that Jerome hopes to have preponderance of expert testimony on his side of the case, testimony showing that Thaw acted as a sane man when he shot Stanford White, and has continued to act as a sane person ever since.

The case from today's developments promises to resolve itself at least into a battle of experts, and this means that there is absolutely no way of predicting when the end will come.

TRIAL'S EIGHTH WEEK.

The trial on Monday will enter its eighth week, and the unexpected must occur in order to bring its conclusion before April 1.

Harry K. Thaw today gave out a statement in denial of the reports spread abroad to the effect that his sister, the Countess of Yarmouth, had determined that there shall be a separation of Harry and his wife. He declares he loves his wife more than ever, and that his sister made no such statement as was credited to her.

"Perfect harmony exists between my wife and myself and my sister, as, indeed, between all members of my family. Such a thing as a separation," said Thaw today, "has never been and will never be considered by me or by any of my relatives.

"The Countess of Yarmouth is very friendly with Mrs. Thaw and holds her in the highest esteem."

Much interest attaches to the form of the hypothetical questions which the District Attorney will ask his experts.

Delmas seemed to include every fact connected with the case in his hypothetical questions, and the defense's alienists gave it as their opinion that Thaw not only was insane when he killed Stanford White, but for two months thereafter.

If the alienists for the State can take these same facts and reach a diametrically opposite opinion, the jury will have to take its choice and place its own estimate upon the value of expert testimony.

TRAFFIC MEN PROBE RATES.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, March 9.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Traffic men from every part of the country west of Chicago, are gathered here in conference regarding changes in transcontinental freight rates. The general situation is being carefully gone over and the result undoubtedly will be a large number of changes in rates and in minimum weights, which will increase the railroad revenues in nearly all territories.

The temper of the association was ascertained when the people of San Francisco petitioned for a reduction in rates on structural iron and all building material. San Franciscans stated that they needed lower rates to enable them to rebuild their city. It was stated that with reduced tariffs there would be an influx of capital which would soon place San Francisco on its feet.

Freight men have decided to reply that their rates on these articles are now so much lower than they were in any other portion of the country that a further reduction cannot be granted.

At the first session of the conference a general discussion regarding the rates situation was had, and it developed that the Western traffic men were not a unit in the belief that there should be general increases in freight rates. All are united, however, on the proposition that something must be done to prevent disaster overtaking many of the railroads through increased wages and expenses.

TO REDUCE SPEED.
HARRIMAN MAY LEAD.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, March 9.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] As a result of the wrecks which have occurred in all parts of the country, a general reduction of speed in the passenger traffic of all the great trunk lines of the United States is under consideration, and Julius Kruttschnitt, Chicago representative of the "Harriman Pacifics," has announced that he will make every effort to have the vast transcontinental system under control of the "widard of Wall street," lead the movement.

"We are going altogether too fast," said Kruttschnitt tonight. "The roads are congested with freight, and the speed required of some of the passenger trains involves great danger and the irregular making of schedules. The freight moving is of enormous volume and there is danger in handling the fastest passenger trains under these conditions.

"The officials in general throughout the country are considering the general reduction of speed on these trains. I have always felt that the speed on our road is too high, and it will be lessened if I can bring it about."

MOTOR DISPLAY BREAKS RECORD.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BOSTON, March 9.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] One of the largest and most comprehensive shows of automobiles ever held in this country opened tonight in the Horticultural and Mechanical building, in this city. It will continue until March 16.

In the show are 342 separate exhibitors, with 423 cars of 121 different models on view. This is a greater number of models and a greater number of machines than shown this year either in New York or Chicago.

Nearly a score of cars not shown in either of those cities are included in the display. There, of course, is a preponderance of gasoline cars, though five makes of steam machines and nine of electrical vehicles are represented.

The decorations are much more elaborate than at any previous show held here. The popularity of the exhibition is assured by the record attendance that filled both halls tonight.

WILL HELP SEATTLE.

SACRAMENTO, March 9.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Gov. Gillett today signed the bill appropriating $100,000 for a California exhibit at the Alaska Yukon Exposition at Seattle in 1909. He is to be the commissioner and will have the appointment of deputies, together with supervision for the expenditure of the fund. This is the only exposition bill the Governor will sign, the Jamestown appropriation of $60,000 have been chopped off by the Ways and Means Committee, while the request for a million dollars for the Balboa exposition at San Francisco in 1913 will receive no consideration at this time.

PRINTERS COME HIGH.

BUTTE (Mont.) March 9.—The Typographical Union has submitted to the publishers of the local newspapers a proposition to return its members to work at the new scale of $6 per day, the matter of wages to be decided by arbitration, the publishers having refused to pay more than $5.50 per day. The publishers have the matter under consideration and it is probable that publication will be resumed during the coming week.

MISSOURI DESTROYS BRIDGE.

CHAMBERLAIN (S. D.) March 9.—The bridge of the Milwaukee Railway across the Missouri River at this point is being washed away by the ice, and 600 feet of bridge and trestle work has gone out since 6 o'clock this morning. As soon as the water goes down a pontoon bridge will be placed until a new bridge can be constructed.

WASHINGTON, March 9.—Senator Flint talked today with the President about the difference between the city of Los Angeles and the Mono Power Company, arising from the use of water from the Owens River. The city is apprehensive that too great a use of the water of the river by the power company will impair its water supply.

in the building city have had a direct realty market. For property there is demand as at any time of the city. Less found on the market month by month. A great deal of it is in the hands of men well able to hold it and quite determined to hold it, either for higher prices, or what is more general, for improvement by themselves. Although the price of choice business property is excessively high compared with that ruling even as late as four years ago, yet there is so great a demand for premises for business purposes and for offices in the upper stories that rents are sufficiently high to figure out a satisfactory rate of interest on the investment going into the business property. In this department of The Times today appears an account of a sale of central business property, only moderately well improved, it being a three-story brick building, but it pays 7 per cent. on the actual total cost of the property as sold last week and with more than half of the purchase price in a mortgage, the interest on the actual cash investment figures out 9 1-2 per cent. In a city growing so rapidly as Los Angeles, any property that will pay 7 per cent. to 9 1-2 per cent. net over all expenses, including taxes and insurance, and that under a lease running five years, appears to people with money an exceedingly safe investment. If the city goes on growing as it has been doing for the last three or four years, such property must continue to rise in value.

Choice Residence Property.

In residence property the purchases made recently have been mostly in the higher grades. There has been no general enhancement in the values in this class of property for perhaps two years. As in the business center there has been a shifting of the residence area. The Westlake district as far out as Sunset Park has ceased to be regarded as residence property. More of it is going into high class apartment buildings and it is all reserved for such purposes. The high class residence section has moved westward and may be said at the present time to lie between Sunset Park and the western boundary of the city, reaching from First street in the closer-in district down to Adams or beyond. In the district closest in the price of the very best of such property is $125 a foot. This has been so for many months past, and there is no change. The most select building lots in the district on boulevards 120 feet wide, with every possible improvement, including parkings in the street, and with the highest class building restrictions, can be had for from $100 to $125. Farther out toward the city limits the prices range for the choicest corners at about $75 a foot. Some sightly ones just beyond the city limits in this district are held at about the same price. The prices range from that down to $30 to $50 a front foot. The Adams Heights district is becoming pretty well crowded at the present time with homes and it looks as if the growth of the city in this class of building would take place in the district just described above.

Where the Market Is Slow.

With the slackness in the building of the cottage and the bungalow style of home, naturally the market for building lots for this class of homes has been comparatively dull. The farther away from the business center one goes the slower the market is. Agents on the east side of the river in every section say their market is slow to dullness. This dullness in the market for this class of property has naturally brought to an end the subdivision business. It would appear to be wise and that it ought to be satisfactory that this should be so. The subdivision business a couple of years ago was at white heat and enough building lots were laid out at that time for a city of at least twice the size of the present Los Angeles. It would be better for all interests concerned to wait now and let the population spread over the areas already cut up before new subdivisions shall be put on. The prices are moderate enough. Good building lots can be had in the city of Los Angeles at all the way from $20 a front foot to $125. For a city of 250,000 inhabitants, these are probably the most reasonable prices ruling in the United States. Of course the possible area for the city is an exceedingly wide one and this is undoubtedly the reason for these moderate prices prevailing for building sites. Undoubtedly the price of the cream of residence property will not remain at the present moderate level. Any property suitable for hotel or apartment-house purposes at $200 a front foot is cheap in such a city as this. A great deal of it is still to be had at from $100 to $150 a foot. In many cities, hotel and apartment-house sites run as high as $500 a foot. The city is growing rapidly. It is only two years since the Shatto tract west of Occidental boulevard and north of Sixth street was put upon the market. It is pretty well occupied with homes today, and far beyond along Sixth street and Wilshire boulevard many of the handsomest houses of the city have been built in the last couple of years.

A Little Correction.

In this department last Sunday the editor was misled by information from a source usually very reliable to state that in the sale of Gray Gables, corner of Seventh and Hill streets, there was a trade. It was supposed that the syndicate selling Gray Gables was the one acquiring the Broadway lot. This is declared by the agents interested in the two sales to be without foundation.

ON BEVERLY HILLS.

The illustration on this page is one of the most nearly unique bungalows ever designed either in Los Angeles or anywhere else. Myron Hunt and Elmer Grey are the architects of the structure. They have studied the landscape in designing the house and have made it fit into the lines and curves of the hills on which it is to be built.

The house is for L. H. Nares and will be built on Beverly Hills, "between the city and the sea," commanding a wonderful view from each face. As the picture shows, it is a long, low, rambling structure, curving with the hilltop, one story high from the front, but overhanging a steep hill, and presenting a two-story facade from the rear. Both sides will be decorative. It faces northwest. The size over all is 40x160 feet.

A feature of the house is the great hall in the center of the building, 20x40 feet and two stories high, built in old English style of architecture with an enormous fireplace on one side and large bay windows at front and rear. To the right of the great hall are the dining-room, kitchen, den, and sewing-room, connections with which are gained by using the glazed veranda. To the left are four bedrooms with baths en suite. The veranda is arranged so that the glass front can be lowered into the basement at will.

The exterior finish will consist of frame plastered, with a green shingled roof, all being made to harmonize with the landscape in a way which these architects have become famous for. The interior will be in natural finish redwood, the hall to be paneled with the great beams of the roof exposed, in characteristic style. The basement will contain the quarters for the servants, a billiard room and a garage. The approximate cost will be $17,000.

Mr. Nares is of the firm of Nares & Saunders, who have, during the last ten years, so successfully colonized the Laguna de Tache grant in Fresno county, and Mr. Nares is also president of the Fresno Irrigation Company, a company having a larger canal mileage than is possessed by any other irrigation enterprise in the United States.

The architects, Myron Hunt and Elmer Grey, also have a number of other buildings on hand, somewhat similar in construction. They are taking figures for an eleven-room residence for Walter R. Leeds, which is to be built in Berkeley Square. It is two stories high, of frame construction, with a shingled roof. The lot is 160x200 feet. Another for Chester Montgomery, just across the street from the above, will be a seven-room frame house. The cost will be about $10,000. The contracts have been let to the Alta Planing Mill for a fourteen-room, two-story frame residence for S. P. Calef of Santa Barbara, to cost about $35,000. This will be in a ten-acre plot of land, and will be one of the show places of the beautiful seaside city. Figures are being received on a twelve-room house in the same town, which Mrs. William Graham of that city is building for a friend. Plans have been prepared for a large house for G. W. Wattles of Hollywood. This will be built in a ten-acre plot, and will be in the well-liked Spanish style of architecture, with a Spanish walled garden, and terrace. It will contain twelve rooms.

TO BUILD AT ONTARIO.

On this page is shown the architect's perspective of the country residence of Mrs. R. T. Nelson, to be erected at Uplands, Cal. The design, modified old English, has been well carried out, and the large half-timbered work, covering eaves and gables, together with the cobblestone work on the chimneys, porch piers, etc., combine to make a charming exterior. The interior fulfills the expectation given by the exterior. From the large front porch one enters into a spacious living-room with beamed ceilings and large stone mantel. At one side of the living-room and to the front, is the library. There is a brick fireplace in this room. To the rear of the living-room is the dining-room, having a built-in buffet. These rooms will be paneled and finished in slash-grained Oregon pine. A large kitchen is reached through a well-fitted butler's pantry. The kitchen is fitted with all modern arrangements. A kitchen pantry and screen porch are on this floor. The second floor is reached by a pretty staircase springing from the living-room. On the second floor are four large chambers and baths. The entire upper floor will be finished in white enamel and there will be hardwood floors through the house. The estimated cost of this residence is $10,000. The plans were prepared by Garrett & Bixby.

CORNER NINTH AND WALL.

The Crippin Investment Company and Martin & Rockwell report the sale to E. W. Pascoe, for C. A. Rockwell, of the southeast corner of East Ninth and Wall streets, 140x140 feet to fifteen-foot alley, being lots Nos. 1, 2 and 3 of John Montgomery's subdivision of Moran tract. Improvements consist of two-flat building and seventeen-room house, bringing an income of $100 per month. Consideration $101,500, or $725 per front foot. The property will be held for investment.

INVESTS ON FOURTH STREET.

Fred Lyon a Purchaser of Well-Paying Property on Choice Downtown Street.

One of the big deals completed this week was the transfer of the lot on Fourth street due west of the Angelus Hotel from A. M. Chaffey to Fred Lyon, of Tufts-Lyon, for $165,000. The lot is on the southwest corner of the alley and has a frontage of thirty-one feet on Fourth street and a depth of 120 feet. It is improved with a substantial brick building, three stories high, all of which is rented for a total sum of $1100 a month. W. B. Merwin & Co. and R. A. Rowan & Co. were the successful agents who engineered the deal.

This property is known as Nos. 218 and 220 West Fourth street. The alley to the east is twenty feet wide. Of the purchase price, $60,000 was cash and the balance is a mortgage of $105,000 running five years at 5 per cent. net.

Following is a schedule of the income: The ground floor, leased for five years, $650; second floor, leased for the same period, $300; third floor and basement, same period of lease, $150; total, $1100 per month. This gives a gross income per annum of $13,200.

The expense figures as follows: Taxes, $885; insurance on the building, $1000; interest on the mortgage at 5 per cent., $5500; giving a total annual expense of $7385. Deducting the total expenses from the gross income, the net income from this building is $5815 a year.

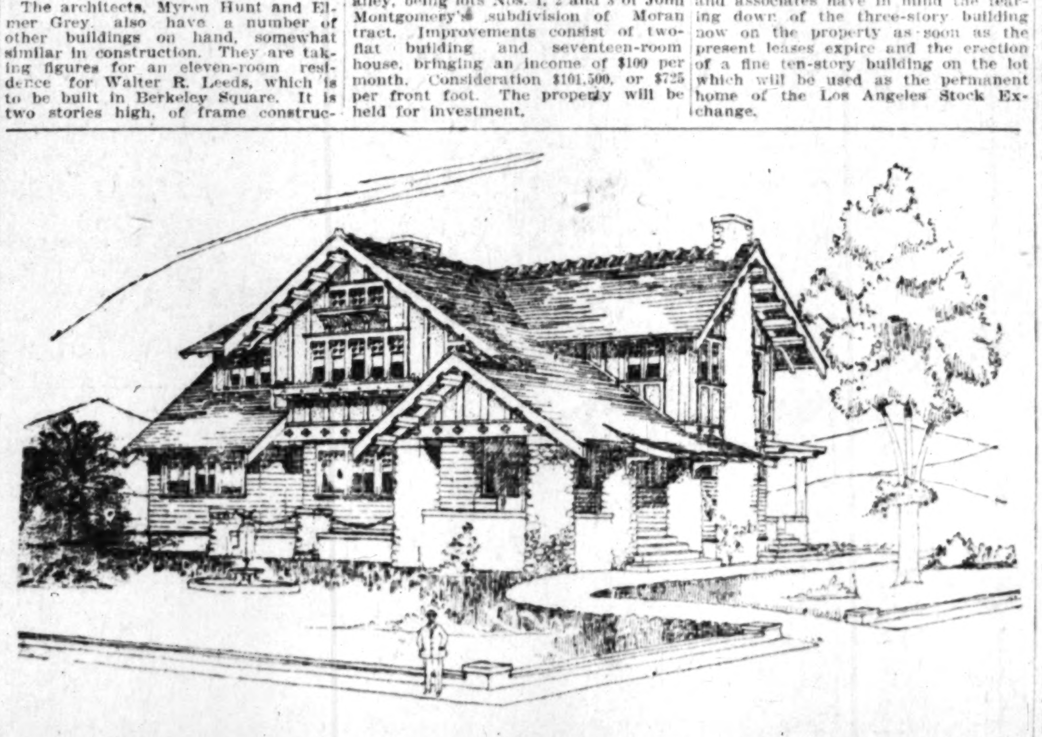
Figuring the rate of interest paid out the total purchase price gives 7 per cent., but including the interest on the mortgage in the total expenses and taking the net income as above, figuring on the cash investment of $60,000 gives an annual income at the rate of 9 1-2 per cent.

FOR STOCK EXCHANGE HOME.

That Is the Purpose in Recent Purchase of a Lot on Fourth Street.

H. L. Percy, a leading operator, is one of the principal investors in the purchase of the property of A. M. Chaffey, sold last week, on Fourth street between Spring street and Broadway for $165,000.

It transpires since the closing of the deal was made public that Mr. Percy and associates have in mind the tearing down of the three-story building now on the property as soon as the present leases expire and the erection of a fine ten-story building on the lot which will be used as the permanent home of the Los Angeles Stock Exchange.



ONTARIO RESIDENCE.

PURCHASE FOR SPECULATION.

Lot on Main and Eleventh Bought for Hundred Seventy-five Thousand. Hold for Advance.

Colson, Bryon & Donnell announce that they have sold for George J. Birkel to a local syndicate of speculators, headed by C. S. Huff, the northwest corner of Eleventh and Main streets, for $175,000. The lot has a frontage of 80 1-2 feet on Main street and runs back 150 feet to a twenty-foot alley on Eleventh street, and is directly north of the Huntington block and diagonally opposite the large brick building, now in course of construction on the Hicks-Hager estate. The sale of the property was recently reported for $160,000 from S. K. Lindley to George J. Birkel, but it now appears that that deal was made February 1, and was not reported until two days ago. By the resale of the property Mr. Birkel has cleared $15,000 in less than forty-five days. The agents named above made the former sale, also.

This is distinctly a speculative buy, the syndicate purchasing do not intend to make any effort to improve the property, and do expect to sell the property in the near future at an advance, justifying their present investment.

Mr. Birkel, the former owner, thought so well of the property that he retained an interest in it. Laying, as it does, at the junction of Main street and Broadway, the widening of Main street will place the lot practically on the latter thoroughfare.

The same company also report the sale of the southeast corner of Maple avenue and Eleventh street, lot 100 feet square, for $32,000. H. T. LaGrange conveys the property to the Union Title and Trust Company, which is representing a local syndicate. Bryan & Bradford represented the purchaser. The improvements consist of two two-story frame dwellings which rent for a nominal sum. The sale of the opposite corner for a similar amount was reported by the last named agents a week ago.

FOR NEARLY HALF MILLION.

Remaining Interest in Hermosa Beach Sold to Los Angeles Securities Company.

The largest deal in beach property reported for many months was that by which E. P. Clark, Gen. M. H. Sherman and the real estate men, Burbank and Baker, transferred their interest in Hermosa Beach for $450,000. This total of nearly a half million dollars includes the purchase price of the extensive improvements which have been installed on the pretty beach, including $100,000 for the water system, $10,000 for the wharf and pleasure pier, and $50,000 for the sewer system. The real estate transferred consists of 407 building lots in Hermosa, and twenty-five and a quarter acres of residence sites in Shakespear and Manhattan beaches.

This sale brings the returns from the property to the grand total of $950,000, the company in which the two railroad men, Gen. Sherman and Mr. Clark, were silent partners, having sold more than half-a-million dollars worth of dwelling sites to homeseekers prior to the recent sale. The land was purchased in 1900 for $54,000. Improvements, and the connection with the outside world by way of the electric lines developed the property rapidly and made it possible to sell it to advantage last week.

The purchaser is the Los Angeles Securities Company. The plans of the company are to improve the property by extending the water and sewer systems, build better thoroughfares, and establish floating landings off the wharf. There are also rumors of a new Huntington car line, a cut-off from the Inglewood-Redondo line, to Hermosa Beach.

ABOUT FULLERTON.

A. S. Bradford of Fullerton has purchased the J. W. Shenk fifteen-acre orange and walnut grove for $10,000. Joseph Dierksen has purchased the twenty-acre home place of E. H. Stone in La Habra Valley for $4500.

On Westlake ave. near one of the best cross-town streets in the city, fine 9-room residence, cement basement, furnace, everything strictly modern and in first-class condition, house built 1 year, lot 50x150 to alley, absolutely no restrictions on this lot; if you want a fine home or want to buy for investment, see us at once; house will rent for $75; price $8500.

FOR SALE—
While the prices of residence properties in this city are by no means excessive, bargains in this line are comparatively rare. There are, however, a few. We have some of them. One of these is a 10-room 2-story frame dwelling, on the west side of Lake st., in the Westlake district. It has 2 baths, 3 toilets, inlaid floors, art glass windows, tinted walls, and every convenience known to the best equipped family mansion; it stands on a lot 50x145 feet, to a 14-foot alley, and could not be duplicated for a cent less than $10,000, probably not for that. There are reasons for selling, of course, otherwise the property could not be had for such a figure. The cash payment required will be from 1-4 to 1-3 the purchase price, balance on terms to suit buyer.

Another bargain in residence property is on Bonnie Brae st. It has 7 large rooms and hallway, is of attractive architectural design, and a model of convenience. A picture of the building can be seen at our office. The lot is 50x150 feet. The property can be had for $8500 on any reasonable terms. Owner is leaving for north coast city. Other listings include about 50 modern dwellings, mostly in Westlake district, the Nevin and Angelus Vista tracts; prices of these range from $3000 to $30,000. They are all good value and several of them are bargains. We have also several desirable cottage dwellings, in various parts of the southwest, that we can deliver at prices and on terms that must make them attractive. To all of these we will be pleased to drive prospective buyers.

IN THE PROFIT BELT.

Ever hear of anybody losing money who invested within a block or two of Moneta ave.? Ever hear of anyone who didn't make a big profit?

Guess not.

Moneta ave. is a money maker—a wealth creator—a profit producer.

But there's such a thing as paying too much for a lot or going too far out, even in this favored district. And that's no "knock."

You'll strike it just about right if you invest in PECKHAM'S MONETA AVE. SQUARE.

Lots now selling as low as $500, and on easy terms if you desire.

If Moneta ave. alone is not good enough there's famous Figueroa to the west and Main street Boulevard to the east.

Lots are all above grade in this tract. Improvements are nearing completion on this magnificent tract. Oiled streets, cement walks and curbs, fine water supply. There's some fine choice lots left. Better call. We'll be glad to take you out. Doesn't cost a cent to investigate.

FOR SALE—"WE SELL THE HILLS."

There are thousands and thousands and multiplied thousands of level lots in Los Angeles from which one can see up and down the street and get a fair view of the blue sky overhead, but there is only a very limited number of close-in lots from which one can see the Pacific Ocean on one side, the distant snow-capped mountains on other sides, and have extended views of beauty and grandeur as far as the eye can reach on EVERY side. We make a specialty of such lots. We wish to call your attention to 2 east front lots, each 50x155 to 15-ft. alley on the summit of that beautiful hill in Alvarado Park tract, only a few hundred feet from the crossing of Sunset blvd. and Alvarado st. We can sell these for $1500 each, and the corner on Reservoir st. adjoining for $1700. Making 150x155, with Reservoir st. graded, for $4700. This is as close in as Westlake, and affords a finer view than anything at Westlake. Then we have another grand site, almost an acre of ground, on the summit of Capitol Hill. Street work done on 3 sides. Magnificent view in every direction. These and similar sites will appeal to people who appreciate the grand and beautiful in nature, who want the very best there is to be had. We will sell the Capitol Hill site for $5500. If this site and view were set down in Westlake district it would sell for $30,000 today. The northwest hill section is coming to the front very rapidly, and these RARE, GRAND-VIEW sites will soon be as high-priced as any residence property in the city. We have a great many lots, with elegant views in one or more directions, at from $500 to $1500, and hundreds of plain every-day lots, same as you find in other parts of the city, at from $400 upward, on very easy terms. The most healthful climate, the most beautiful views, the cheapest property, the safest, sanest investments are found today in the northwest part of the city.

We would like to prove this to you. Suppose you call up the RANNELLS LAND CO., Sunset 'Phone Main 2556, or take Hollywood or Colegrove car to our office, corner Sunset blvd. and Alvarado st. I will be there every day except Sunday, from 8 a.m. to 12 m. and from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. unless I am not showing property. If you can't get reply on my 'phone, ring up main office, Main 5707, or Home A7781; and arrange a time to come out. I will show you something as fine as earth affords. Yours truly,

S. D. RANNELLS.

WESTMINSTER SQUARE.

HIGHLY ELEVATED TRACT NEAR THE WILSHIRE BOULEVARD.

MAGNIFICENT LOCATION.

This superior residence tract is commandingly located in the Wilshire Blvd. district on high ground at the corner of Fourth and Western aves. Fine homes and elegant subdivisions entirely surround this property.

MODERN IMPROVEMENTS.

The improvements are unusually high class and consist of 75-foot streets with trees and ornamental palms planted in front of every lot; street cars will shortly be running directly through the tract. One man bought six, another five and another three lots, which is conclusive evidence of this property's value. Two beautiful homes are almost completed—others are being planned.

REASONABLE PRICES.

You may search the city over—you won't find a subdivision possessing all the high-class, desirable features of Western Square priced so reasonably as lots in this tract. Prices range from $1750 up. Mr. Shrewd Buyer, here's your chance to make several hundred dollars' profit in a short time. Mr. Homeseeker, this tract is just what you've been seeking for—an ideal location for a home. Do not delay seeing this property—conveyances waiting at our office to take you out any time. Come early Monday.

SCHMIDT HEIGHTS

In the fashionable WILSHIRE-WESTLAKE district, will be the nearest high class exclusive residence tract on the line of the Fourth st. SUBWAY, for the VERMONT AVE. SUBWAY STATION will be located in this tract where the tunnel emerges, and the time from 4th and Hill sts. will be ONLY FOUR MINUTES.

SCHMIDT HEIGHTS is now reached in 15 minutes from Broadway by the Bimini and W. 6th st. car lines.

Price $250,000, and easy terms.

We respectfully invite the attention of the investor, who would like to put in a few thousand dollars in a first class acreage proposition which is income bearing and not dead wood. Remember of the thousands of inquiries for California, nearly all are for farm lands and not for city property. Outside acreage which will produce is just as good and safe an investment as is Broadway or Spring st. property. The price is right we assure you, and the property carries itself.

A 20th interest requires $5250 in cash.
A 10th interest requires $10,500 in cash.
A 5th interest requires $21,000 in cash.
$ 4th interest requires $26,250 in cash.

We trust that you will allow us to call upon you and explain all the merits of this genuinely good investment. Our acreage man has been in California for 30 years and knows his business.

R. S. BASSETT.

BARGAIN ON FIGUEROA—Close in, only few minutes' walk from 3d and Broadway; lot 120 feet frontage on Figueroa st.; on a corner; 60 feet frontage on the corner is yet unimproved, but the other 60 feet has on it a magnificent apartment house, strictly modern and nearly new; its rentals amount to $2880 per year; the building could not be duplicated under $18,000. This makes the lot only $241 per foot. There is nothing near here on the street for from $350 to $450 per foot. Taking this lowest price, $350, there is a profit now in this property of $12,000. Or the price of an inside lot within a block of this, viz., $400, and there is a profit of $19,000. This is absolutely a safe buy, because if values should never increase here (but these will, and that soon,) the property is over $100 per foot under value. The building on the lower 60 feet of the lot pays an income on the whole proposition and the corner is yet available to improve or sell. Price only $45,000; easy terms can be arranged.

OLIVE ST. CORNER—120 feet frontage on Olive st. Beautiful site for modern building, hotel or apartment house would bring generous returns on the investment. Nominal improvements at present bring in a rental of $750 per year. Price $40,000.

GRAND AVE.
GRAND AVE.

IS GOING TO BE PAVED

FROM TEMPLE TO JEFFERSON ST.

You don't need to take my statement for this, but come in and I will show you the petition signed up for the work.

Present prices on this fine wide avenue are very low and we all know what effect paving has made in values on all other long streets, not nearly so well located as Grand ave.

In working up the petition for this work we have got in communication with most all the property owners and consequently are in a position to offer you the best bargains on the street to choose from, any of which will make you money.

But the people who investigate and invest right now on Grand ave. are the ones who will make the largest profits. So we would advise you to act at once.

FOR SALE — WE OFFER FOR SALE SALE on the great retail street of the future, at the northwest corner of Seventh and Flower, 67½x115 feet of the finest speculative corner property on the market. The prospective increase in values on W. Seventh between Figueroa and Broadway is greater than for any other seven blocks in the whole city of Los Angeles. In other words, at the prevailing prices in the real estate market, Seventh st. property between Broadway and Figueroa will double quicker than any other real estate in the city; prove it to your own satisfaction by the following comparison—Broadway and Spring st. corners at $3500 to $4000 per foot will take how long to double? Seventh and Flower at TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS PER FOOT will take how long to double? The answer means a fortune in the pocket of the man who banks on W. Seventh and Flower.

We will guarantee to secure about two-thirds of a loan at 6 per cent. Looks good, don't it? BLACK BROS., sole agents, 905-6 Union Trust Bldg. 10 we offer the following, viz:

$250 FRONT FOOT FOR THE Best apartment-house site on the hill, and when you understand that it not only a CORNER, but that it is a NORTHWEST corner, hence having the sun every hour that it shines, and further that all of the first-class apartment houses on the hill are commanding higher prices and therefore paying bigger interest on the amount invested, than any other property in the city, you will appreciate the merit of this proposition. It commands a charming view, is within 5 minutes WALK of the business center, and 1 block from "Angel's Flight;" an investigation will demonstrate that it is NOW WORTH 25 per cent. more than the price asked; indeed, no other corner in this, or the next block, can be had for less than $350 and up to $445 a foot; Court st. frontage.

FOR SALE—
LAND PRODUCES $600 TO $1000 PER ACRE ANNUALLY.
ROGUE RIVER VALLEY, OR.

Our climate combines all the best features of California and Oregon and possesses none of the objectionable features of either, here we have no excessive rains; the rainfall averaging twenty inches, with days and weeks of bright, clear, sunny days during the winter; no excessive cold, the temperature seldom falling to the freezing point; during this terrible cold wave from which the entire country is still struggling to extricate itself, we did not even have a frost here; no excessive hot weather, while in summer blankets are a necessity, the nights always being cool.

OUR APPLE AND PEAR INDUSTRY
Is our greatest attraction; here we have orchards which produce per acre $600 to $1000 annually. Our pears bring the highest prices in the world in the markets of New York and London. Our Newtown apples also bring higher prices than those of any other section of the world. Our Spitzenberg apples are unsurpassed for quality, color and size. This industry is still in its infancy here, we have thousands of acres of undeveloped lands irrigated, and upland, at lower prices than ordinary alfalfa lands are selling for in California. Here we get four crops of alfalfa without irrigation.

Three new railroads are to be built immediately, one to our copper mines, one to our coal mines, and one to our timber. Our lands will produce anything that grows out doors, corn, grain, vegetables, alfalfa, fruits of all kinds and berries of all varieties from April till November.

Our copper mines are developing such a volume of ore that the entire mining world is now turning its eyes this way.

Medford is a beautiful little city of 4000 inhabitants, possessing all modern conveniences and with the hosts of homeseekers now settling here, promises to have a population of 10,000 in the course of a couple of years. We have splendid schools, electricity, new water system now going in, fine business houses, hotels that any large city might feel proud of, and a delightfully picturesque environment.

We can offer more undeveloped opportunities for money making than any other section of the United States, and that with natural attractions unsurpassed anywhere.

AN ACRE DOWN SECURES A FINE

FARM

The first payment of $16.25 an acre secures the finest agricultural land obtainable, and the balance can run for 1, 2 and 3 years. With ordinary diligence, a farmer can pay up with the profits on his crops during 3 years and make a good living besides.

This land is the famous Paige-Mitchell ranch, noted for its rich soil and heavy crops; water is abundant and the land is close to the thriving city of Tulare.

Why locate on desert or "far out" lands, when you can secure a good farm close to a good city, which affords two railroads, schoolhouse, churches, stores and markets.

There is no question but what this land is worth more than property located 20 miles from a town, yet the price is no higher than in many less advantageous locations.

There is na schoolhouse right in the middle of this ranch; there are good level roads to Tulare and freight has to be hauled only 4 miles to Paige Station.

The climate is excellent.

SIX FREE FARM BOOKS.
We publish 6 booklets, giving actual results of different crops, dairying, stock raising poultry culture. This land will produce heavy crops of alfalfa, grapes, sugar beets and many other profitable California crops. Call or write for the free books. They are worth actual money to any one who is undecided about their location.

A GOOD VILLA LOT PROPOSITION.

Lot number 142, of CASA VERDUGO VILLA TRACT. Size 96x200 feet, includes 40 12-year-old LEMON trees, each now bearing an average of 250 pounds of lemons every two months, or 60,000 pounds of lemons per annum on this lot. We will secure a yearly contract to pay 1 1-4 cents per pound on the trees, for these lemons, equal to a gross return of $750 per year. This is 43 per cent. annual income on the cost price of the lot, which is $1725, including cement sidewalks, street grading and mountain water. After building your home, there is ample room besides, for a garden, and poultry yards, 96x100 feet. Here on your own lot, you are saving rent, besides having the means of an income in cash from fruit, garden and poultry, in all equal to over 50 per cent. income on the cost of the lot. This lot would be cheap at $3500, and yet we have 1-4 acres as low as $400, with fruit trees on or without, that will do as well in proportion. All this amid the most charming scenery and best all-year-around climate in Southern California, only 30 minutes from HUNTINGTON BUILDING VIA GLENDALE-CASA VERDUGO LINE, "the scenic trolley route." FOR SALE—
THE HOME PLACE.
Of Los Angeles county is Alhambra, and all you need to prove this to your own satisfaction is to come out and see what Alhambra means; we are having a steady growth in our population because the beauty of our location in the famous San Gabriel Valley, combined with the advantages of fast electric transportation and 85 cent gas and electric lights, and all other things which make life worth living in an up-to-date community, are here.

We have some choice locations for homes, one at $2100, near the car line, and 176-foot lot to an alley, frontage of 165 feet; we consider this one of the choicest opportunities in Alhambra, and would be a fine place for the location of an apartment house, of which we are very much in need; every house is rented as fast as it can be finished, and a continual demand for more.

A choice corner on First st., which would be a credit to any community, can be had for $3000 if taken right off; First st. is closely built up, and very little property is for sale, and a purchase here would be one of the best investments.

$2500 for your choice of two modern 5-room cottages, with all modern improvements; cement work done, lawns, right close to the car line, and in the best rental section of the city.

From $2000 to $5000 we have several choice bargains in new and modern houses, with all up-to-date improvements, in very fine localities; if you will spend a few hours with us looking the ground over, it will be worth your while.

for that home of yours by buying a lot at Alhambra, where lots are the most reasonable in price, considering advantages offered, of any one in the county.

We can offer you lots near the car line with all street work in (and street work here means the very best that can be made), at prices from $500 to $700; lots of full size 50x150, and deeper. A number of locations, all of them very attractive and from almost all of them you can have the most beautiful view of the mountains, for which the valley is so famed.

If you want to build, we will build a house for you with a very moderate payment down, and afterwards you can pay for it as easily as you can pay rent.
DON'T FORGET ALHAMBRA ACRES.

Did you hear that voice a-calling, a-calling, and did you heed the call of the "Wizard?" The sign-writer gave thee fair warning, and today he has but to record the magnificent achievements of that Grand Old Man of the trading world, in the interest of those who consulted and confided in him who does things, during the week just past. What's the use of the sign-writer, anyway, unless it is to pass an occasional straight tip to you? And what's the use of handing out straight tips to you, unless you take profit therefrom? Cheer up! Then "sit up and take notice." The "Wizard's" bulletin today, which follows, is chuck full of good things. Pick them out; take my "tip;" you cannot lose. It is a sure winner any time you back the "Wizard." "They're off."

FOR EXCHANGE—45-ACRE FARM IN THE artesian belt, south of Los Angeles 20 miles; good 6-room plastered house and two good barns, with flowing water and tank; water piped to all places of necessity and convenience. The house is situated back somewhat from avenue, with private drive and ornamental trees along both sides; neighborhood is very choice, and the market for all products is unexcelled, and the products to be grown from this place are varied and profitable. There is a cash income right now of $160 per month from dairy department and the orchard is a natural and faithful producer. The 2 acres of walnuts bring in about $200 per acre, and the sandy loam soil which we have is the most delightful to work. The farm has been brought up to a high state of cultivation and profit, but the owner is compelled to go away and will sell at a bargain, or give good trade. Price $11,000. I failed to mention the fine new 12-H.P. pumping plant that sends out its steady 100 inches of water to guarantee sure crops. See this nice place.

How We Cure

Weak Puny Men

There is one thing that we notice in all our patients—the loss of vital power. They have wasted it in some manner, usually by foolishness. Vital power is what they have lost. We know that we can give it back, so we know that we can cure every weak, puny man who will follow our advice.

With our new improved Belt, the result of many years of study, we will cure any case of weakness.

Or We Will Forfeit $1000 in Gold

This is no idle boast. We talk straight from the shoulder, and back up everything we say.

With some poor men, who have spent every cent they have earned upon quacks who have promised everything, it is not enough for us to say: "We can cure you." Others have said that and have not cured them. We want to prove to them that we can and will, if our advice is followed. We are doing it every day.

Mr. John Klossner, Humboldt, Nev., writes us: "I want to tell you that your Belt has done me great good. It is the best thing I ever tried, and may the Lord bless you for it. I now feel as if I was only 25 years old."

It makes a man feel young. Youth is health, vigor, courage, ambition. It is joy and happiness.

Give us a man broken down from dissipation, hard work or worry: from any cause which has sapped his vitality. Let him follow our advice for three months, and we will make him as vigorous in every respect as any man of his age.

We will not promise to make a Hercules of a man who was never intended by nature to be strong and sturdy. Even that man we can make better than he is; but the man who has been strong and has lost his strength, we can make as good as he ever was.

We can give back to any man what he has lost by violation of the laws of Nature. We can stop all drains upon his vitality in ten days. We explain how we do this in our book for men, which we will send, sealed, free, on request. Every man who would like to reach the highest physical standard should read it.

A man who is nervous, whose brain and body are weak, who sleeps badly, awakes more tired than when he went to bed, who is easily discouraged, inclined to brood over imaginary troubles, who has lost ambition and energy to tackle hard problems, lacks the animal electricity which the Dr. McLaughlin Electric Belt supplies.

The whole force of vitality in your body is dependent upon your animal electricity. When you lose that by draining the system in any manner our Belt will replace it, and will cure you.

122 N. 20th Ave., Los Angeles, Cal.

Dr. M. D. McLaughlin Co.: Dear Sirs—I want to say in regard to the Belt that I purchased of you a month ago, that it has done [illegible] I am highly pleased with the result. I can truthfully say that it has helped me more and quicker than I expected. Yours respectfully, [illegible]

Letters like that tell a story which means a great deal to a sufferer. They are a beacon light to a man who has become discouraged from useless doctoring. We get such letters every day.

Our Belt has a wonderful influence upon tired, weak nerves. It braces and invigorates them, and stirs up a great force of energy in the body.

We make the best electric body appliances in the world, having devoted twenty years to perfecting it. Our cures after everything else has failed are our best arguments.

Free Electric Suspensory for Weak Men

This suspensory is constructed so as to carry the current to the prostate gland, the seat of all weakness. It is free with the Belts for men.

Mr. John Gately, Long Valley, Cal., writes: "Your Belt has relieved me of rheumatism and stomach trouble to such an extent that I am able to do my work in peace. I have gained thirty pounds in weight and am still improving."

Give us a man with pains in his back, a dull ache in his muscles or joints, "come-and-go" pains in the shoulders, chest and side, Sciatica in his hip, Lumbago, Rheumatism or any ache or pain, and our Belt will pour the oil of life into his aching body and drive out every sign of pain. No pain can exist where our Belt is worn.

Mr. E. B. Miller, of Compton avenue, Los Angeles, Cal., writes: "I have used your high-grade Belt for two months for lame back, rheumatism and weakened nerves, and am now a well man. I have gained over six pounds in weight and feel as strong and hearty as I ever did."

They come every day from everywhere. There is not a town or hamlet in the country which has not cures by Dr. McLaughlin's Electric Belt.

Now, what does this mean to you, dear reader? If you are not what you ought to be can you ask any better proof to make you try it? Is there anything which is as simple, as easy to use, as sure to cure and as cheap as Dr. McLaughlin's Electric Belt? We have not seen one. You must try it. In justice to yourself and to those who look to you for their future happiness, try it now. Act this minute. Such a matter ought not to be delayed.

It is as good for women as for men. Worn while you sleep, it causes no trouble. You feel the gentle, glowing heat from it constantly, but no sting or burning, as in old-style Belts. We take other Belts in exchange.

Send for our beautiful book, full of the things which a man likes to read if he wants to be a strong man. We send it, sealed, free. Cut out this coupon and send it to us.

HORSELESSLY WOULD FARM.

And Elder Flory Freely Offers His Plan.

Believes in Engine Doing the Hard Work.

Interesting Los Angeles Man's Idea.

Elder J. S. Flory of the Dunkard sect, or German Baptist Brethren, and sometimes called Bishop Flory, who lives with one of his sons in this city, has come forward with what he considers an ideal system of horseless farming. The motive impelling Elder Flory to thought along this line may be discerned in something he said yesterday.

"If the thing is any good," he said, "the public is welcome to it. It suggests the possibility of doing away entirely with horses, thus emancipating brute creation from the slavery imposed upon them by their master, man."

Elder J. S. Flory, of the Dunkard Church, who has a horseless farming idea.

Elder Flory's suggestion contemplates placing a traction engine, or truck, on each side of the plot of ground to be plowed, connected by an endless cable to which the plows may be attached, something after the manner in which the grip worked on the supplanted street-car service. The same engines that operate the cable will also propel the trucks forward for the next furrow, and accomplish all the cultivation, threshing and grinding of the crop, and may be utilized for all kinds of operations on the farm, where power is required for pumping-plants and many other purposes.

"This mode of farming," he said, "will, in a special manner, appeal to those engaging in the cultivation of sugar beets, and gardening on a large scale. One great advantage, among many others, will be in saving the tramping of the ground by horses, where crops are growing, thus assuring a larger yield."

It must be said that Elder Flory's proposition is not entirely new. The same plan is of almost mediæval origin, and a generation ago was illustrated in the government reports of the Department of Agriculture, the main difference being that in these old illustrations stationary engines were shown, as the dreamers of that day had not yet scented the coming of the automobile.

EXPECTS TO SEE IT.

"I believe the system practicable, and though I have passed the milestone of three-score-and-ten, I expect to live to see it put into universal practice on level lands," said Elder Flory yesterday, but he is so hale, hearty and active that one readily feels that he may yet have many years to wait. Thirty years of his life have been spent as a farmer in Virginia, Iowa and Colorado, and has been a resident of Los Angeles county since 1884.

His inventive turn of mind found vent while he was a farmer in Colorado, during the great grasshopper plague. He invented a grasshopper exterminator, which received marked attention from the Agricultural Department, and was illustrated in the reports sent out from Washington.

He uttered a trite axiom, characteristic of the man, when he said: "If there's nothing in a boy, there's not much use trying to put it there, and if it's in him it will come out anyway."

FEARLESS FRONTIERSMAN.

Elder Flory was born in Virginia, and early in life became a Dunkard evangelist in the mountains of West Virginia. In 1872 he went to what was then Colorado Territory, and became one of the first settlers on the South Platte River. He there took up his work as a preacher of the simple gospel as taught by his people, and became a trader throughout the South Platte Valley, in order to come into contact with the settlers.

He tells thrilling tales of his experience in that early day, when the Platte Valley swarmed with Indians and buffalo. The settlers were few and far between, and the Indians had a bad habit of paying unwelcome visits and eating the settlers out of everything in sight.

On one occasion Elder Flory drove up to a settler's door to do trading, and a moment later two Indians appeared at the same door, demanding something to eat. The women of the house told them to go on, as they had already eaten almost everything in the house. They simply sat on their horses to wait until the trader took his departure, when they would help themselves.

After Flory's patience was exhausted he went out, took hold of the bit of one of the Indian's horses and motioned for them to go on. A big buck jumped down, took Flory by the collar and threw him aside, with an ugly scowl, and then rode away.

[illegible] knew the trader as a [illegible] he drove along the road they had taken, he was never molested.

When Elder Flory arrived in Southern California in 1884 there were but three other Dunkards here, so far as he can recollect, and the number has now grown to something over 1000. He has traveled all over the Coast, and is personally known to every one of the sect.

He is deeply interested in the coming national convention of his people in this city, and has been one of the earnest workers in bringing it to the Coast. He has attended these conventions, "general conferences" they call them, all over the country, and is an authority on the subjects that engage their attention.

RETURNS FROM EAST.

City Superintendent Looks Over the Field and Makes Comparisons, Favorable and Otherwise.

Dr. E. C. Moore, City Superintendent of Schools, returned home yesterday from a month's trip East. He brings the report that practically every teacher east of the Great Divide is planning to come to the National Education Association, which convenes here in July. Dr. Moore attended the National Conference of School Superintendents in Chicago, and, together with Dr. N. C. Schaeffer, president of the N.E.A., was permitted to address that great gathering of 500 school superintendents from all over the country, concerning the coming convention in Los Angeles. Among the prominent educators, who will be here are Superintendent Maxwell of the New York City schools and President Judson of the University of Chicago.

Dr. Moore went as far East as Baltimore, where he made three addresses before the city teachers, and also spoke at Johns Hopkins University. He visited the schools of St. Louis and Kansas City and returns to his work thoroughly convinced that Los Angeles has the best lot of children in the country, and her teaching force is unsurpassed.

"I did observe, however," said Dr. Moore, "that our school buildings would, by no means, compare favorably with those of the cities I visited. All their buildings are of brick and are built in an elaborate and expensive manner. The fact of the imperative need of more school buildings in Los Angeles is more than ever impressed upon me. By next fall we will see an army of children shut out of the schools for lack of accommodations. We need right now $600,000 to expend in school buildings—a new High School and additional room for 6500 children. About forty temporary rooms are in use now, and how many will we need next fall? The increase in school population this year above last was over 4000. What will it be next, and where will we house them all, are the questions that are perplexing me."

GREENE IS DEAD.

General Freight and Passenger Agent of Las Vegas and Tonopah Road Passes Suddenly.

Word was received in this city yesterday from Rhyolite of the sudden death there from heart failure of Henry T. Greene, general freight and passenger agent of the Las Vegas and Tonopah Railroad. The news of this sudden taking away of one of the most popular railroad men in Los Angeles, who was also well known throughout the West, came as a shock to his many friends here.

Last week Mr. Greene went to Rhyolite with the Elkins party in a special car. But the great altitude seemed to have a bad effect upon Mr. Greene, and when Rhyolite wsa reached he remained in that town instead of going across the desert to Goldfield with the party. Friday he seemed to be rapidly improving, but early yesterday morning came a relapse and he died in a few minutes.

Mr. Greene was 48 years old, and a native of Wisconsin. He began his railroad service as an operator on the Wisconsin Central, and was promoted rapidly for efficient service. He went to Chicago, and later became the general assistant freight and passenger agent of the Mexican Central.

A little over two years ago Mr. Greene became connected with the Salt Lake road as chief clerk, and he made his home in this city at No. 955 Vermont avenue, with his wife. When the Las Vegas and Tonopah road was opened last summer, Mr. Greene was the man selected to be the real head as general freight and passenger agent.

A widow, three brothers and two sisters survive him. One of the brothers is a member of the Board of Trade of Duluth. The widow is at her home on Vermont avenue, prostrated by the shock and sorrow of her husband's sudden death. The body will be brought to this city tomorrow, and the funeral arrangements will be made later.

OWENS VALLEY UNDERTAKINGS.

Chaffey Railroad Not Injurious to City's Interests.

Jewett Denies Responsibility for Forbes's Actions.

Government Aids City by Blocking Bogus Filings.

Responsibility for the attempts of Assemblyman Forbes of Inyo to hamper the city of Los Angeles in securing legislation to facilitate the Owen's River project is repudiated by George Chaffey and his associates. Forbes, who lives at Independence and has been an opponent of the Owens River project from its inception, tried to insert in the bill giving the city eminent domain for railroad purposes a provision that any line, built by the city for use in construction of the conduit should be a common carrier of freight and passengers, and it was said in Sacramento that he was inspired to do so by the Chaffey interests.

S. P. Jewett, engineer for George Chaffey, emphatically denied yesterday that Chaffey had interfered in the slightest degree with the city's work at Sacramento. "We have been scrupulously careful," said Mr. Jewett, "to refrain from doing the least thing to hamper the city. Forbes has written letters to us, offering his services and trying to get in somewhere, but we have not even replied to his letters. We will not do anything to obstruct the city. On the contrary, we are as desirous as any citizen of Los Angeles can be to see the Owens River project carried out, and we will do everything in our power to help it along.

"We have had several conferences with the city's representatives concerning the relations of the Chaffey enterprises to the city's project, and there is every reason to expect a satisfactory adjustment of differences. We have agreed to relinquish our claims on Cottonwood Creek below the 5000-foot level, so that the city may have the power and the surplus water, and the city has agreed that our work above that level will not interfere in the least with the aqueduct. We have abandoned our power filings on some of the upper creeks which the city may want to use, and we hope that all other matters can be arranged to the city's satisfaction. Emphatically we are not fighting the city anywhere.

RAILROAD PROJECTS.

"The Chaffey railroad project is not detrimental to the Owens River project and is not so regarded by the aqueduct engineers. The railroad will be of service to the city, and the city is quite willing to grant us right of way through its lands. From Charlie's Butte to the south end of the valley, our road will be more useful than an extension of the Southern Pacific from Keeler could be, for the reason that our line is on the west side of the valley and follows closely the course of the conduit. We can save the city quite a lot of railroad construction work, but if the city prefers to build its own line for temporary use, we certainly cannot object. It is not to our interest that the city's road be made a common carrier, and we neither inspired Mr. Forbes nor suggested the slightest interference with anything the city asks of the Legislature."

Surveys for the Chaffey railroad in Owens Valley are progressing rapidly, and the engineers have located a line from the north end of the valley to the Little Lake region that is remarkably favorable. The stiffest grade, near Independence, is 1 per cent., and the curves are few and slight. The tangents, or straight stretches are from ten to fifteen miles long.

ANXIOUS FOR SETTLEMENT.

Mr. Jewett says he is ready to begin work on a power plant on Independence Creek at a day's notice, and is only awaiting a definite understanding with the aqueduct officials. He suggests that he could furnish power for the city's dredge at a price not exceeding the cost of maintenance of a power plant on Division Creek, and could have his plant in operation as soon as the city could, if not sooner.

Independence Creek is about midway of the canal to be dredged. Division Creek is in an equally favorable position in relation to the canal, and it is the purpose of the city's engineers to put a small power plant on the creek to operate a dredge.

The chief point of disagreement between Chaffey and the city relates to salvage waters of creeks flowing into the valley. Chaffey thinks he can save water that now sinks in the granite detritus and use it for irrigating lands which he owns. The city's engineers [illegible] city lands along the river by underground flow and cannot be diverted legally.

The city has offered to buy the ranches acquired by Chaffey, paying him cost price and interest, but objects to paying for claims on "salvage water." There seems to be no objection to Chaffey's use of water for power purposes. The differences concerning salvage waters and the value of the Chaffey holdings remain to be adjusted.

BUSY OBSTRUCTIONISTS.

While Chaffey and his associates seem anxious to come to an agreement with the city and to work harmoniously toward consummation of the aqueduct project, there are others perniciously diligent in trying to obstruct the city and to complicate the situation. Agents of power companies have made ostensible filings on water to serve as a basis for litigation, and their newspaper organ keeps up a clamor about "prior rights" that must be satisfied before the city can take any surplus water from Owens River. Those "prior rights" are fictitious. The filings were not made in good faith, and it is not possible for the claimants to make use of the water they pretend to have appropriated. The real purpose of the power companies behind these dummy claimants is to provide their organ with an excuse for attacking the Owens River bond issue.

The administration at Washington has checkmated some of the schemes of selfish corporations and would-be hold-up speculators by extending the forest reserve to cover the north watershed of Owens River in Mono county, and by withdrawing from entry large areas of public land in the valley, which may be added to the Sierra reserve.

In the meantime J. D. Hooker's evening pipe organ is wailing over the conduit and pleading tearfully for a chance to sell pipe to the city. That is the reason for the organ's existence and the explanation of its hallucination that there is only enough water in Owens Valley to fill a pipe line.

IT CEASES TO BE FUNNY.

Mayor Tires of Running Matrimonial Bureau, Believing Himself Victim of Practical Jokers.

Mayor Harper is tiring of conducting a matrimonial bureau. His investigations are bringing to light the fact that nine out of ten of the applicants for mates are practical jokers, who are sending the names and photos of persons already mated.

Here is one letter from Berkeley that reads as though it might be genuine:

> Mayor Harper: Just read in today's San Francisco Chronicle of the English widow and fifteen others you have on the waiting list. Wish you would kindly recommend me. Would prefer the English widow, but suppose that is out of the question as I am unknown to you.
> I am a widower for the last seven years. Am well-to-do and have a good income. No children. I do not use tobacco, neither do I drink or gamble. Am 40 years of age, 5 feet 9 inches, dark complexion, slightly gray and weigh 165 pounds. I belong to the Odd Fellows and can give you references from some of the very best people as my sister is married to a Berkeley capitalist. H. R. A.

Among the photos received yesterday was that of the floor walker at the Saddlerock restaurant. He writes:

> Honorable Mayor: Enclosed you will find photo, and I trust my pleasant smile will assist you in securing for me a pleasant widow of moderate means—one who has knowledge of preparing chop suey and noodles, and is not afraid of Limburger. Such a girl will find a cozy corner in my heart. No objection to children. No triflers wanted. Smilingly.

of a man. He is sleeping. He is sleeping soundly and snoring loudly. The reason? He has invested some of his money in the company who manufacture the Buttress Burglar Proof lock. He knows his investment is earning money for him. He also has burglar proof locks on his windows. That's another reason why he is slumbering so peacefully. He has no dreams of burglars to interrupt his rest.

A Los Angeles company owns the patent covering this lock. It is the only device of its kind in the world. It is the only window lock that is a lock. It is the only device that locks both the upper and lower sash of a window when they are shut, or open for ventilation. Everybody who sees one of these locks wants their windows fitted with them. Every hardware dealer who sees them wants to sell them. Every man who is building a house wants them on his windows.

Suppose you had something everybody wanted. You would think you had a big thing. Wouldn't you? That's what this company has. It has something that is demanded by everyone. Not demanded by just a few people. Not demanded just by a certain race of people. Not demanded only by clerks, preachers, bankers or some-one else, but by everybody. Everybody who has a house—a house that has windows in it.

The demand for this lock is going to be enormous.

Orders are coming in daily for them. In a short time this lock will be on sale everywhere, in every hardware store in the United States.

The profit on every lock is nearly 300 per cent. The device sells at the same price as those of other makes. The company has its own factory. It is now making locks. It needs more money to increase the capacity of the plant. It needs more money to get them on the market. It can sell and place as many as 40,000 daily. This will be the capacity of the plant when the improvements are completed.

This lock is patented. Its patent covers not only the United States but the whole world. No one else can make this lock. They dare not do it. The company has a monopoly on the business. It has no competition. There are 80,000,000 window locks sold in the United States yearly. This company is going to get this business. It will get it either all or the biggest part of it. Why? Because it has the best lock ever invented. This lock does three times the work of the ordinary lock. Furthermore it is a lock. It is simple, neat, easy to install, and easy to manipulate. Once installed on a window it will last forever. It sells at the same price as other locks. It does three times the work. It does its work well.

The men behind the company are business men. They are honest and straightforward. They have made a success of their personal business. They are going to make a success of this business. They are manufacturing something that is in demand by everyone. The sale of these locks will be tremendous. They are a necessity. These locks will be used all over the world where civilized people live. We have been given permission to sell some treasury stock of this company. You can buy it now from us at $1 a share. Later, it will be worth more. Lots more. This stock is non-assessable. If you want some of it, now is the time to get it. This is your chance to share in the profits of a necessity. Come into our office and see this lock. See it at work on a window. It does everything we say it will. It does more than we say it will.

The rails are arriving daily. Dirt is now flying. Better buy now. Then there's the Los Angeles-Pacific Railway Co.'s electric line to Redondo, the broad-gauging of which will soon occur. And in addition to the above three electric lines now running to Redondo is the great Santa Fe steam railroad. With four lines of transportation it would seem as if same would be sufficient, but surveyors are in the field laying out the shortest line of all to connect Los Angeles with its choicest seashore suburb—Redondo. Mr. Huntington is now building at Redondo the largest electric power house on the Pacific Coast, to cost $1,250,000, as fast as men and money can do it. Go down and look at the mammoth cement smokestack.

A suburban electric railroad is now nearing completion at Redondo. The grand three-story business block of Mr. W. M. Garland at Redondo is just finished. Follow successful men like Mr. Huntington and Mr. Garland—they know that Redondo is substantial and a safe place to invest in. Buy anywhere around Redondo and you are sure to make large profits. Three commercial wharves. A safe harbor by twenty years' practical test. Redondo is permanent and has just begun to grow. Then again, referring to successful men, we notice that the following men have bought to the north of Redondo:

Mr. Edwin Chambers, the far-sighted General Freight Agent of the Santa Fe; Mr. George H. Peck, the successful banker of San Pedro; Mr. John J. Byrne, the capable General Passenger Agent of the Santa Fe, and Dan Murphy, the millionaire oil operator of Los Angeles. A word to the wise is sufficient! BUY

Remember that your purchase is made with the distinct understanding that we will refund all money paid us, with 6 per cent. per annum interest added, if after visiting the "Redondo Villa Tract B" it is found that we have misrepresented our proposition in the slightest particular.

25 Per Cent. Guaranteed Increase

For $4 down and $4 per month until paid for we sell you a "Redondo Villa Tract B" lot for $90, subject to the following guarantee from us: If at the expiration of one year from purchase this $90 lot is not worth $112.50—or 25 per cent. increase—based on the price at which our corps of salesmen will then be selling similar lots, we will refund all of the money you have paid us, with 6 per cent. interest additional. If you should die at any time before payments have been completed, we will give to your heirs a deed of the lot without further cost. If you should lose employment or be sick you will not forfeit the land, but as each written certificate of sickness or non-employment is received monthly your time for payment will be extended another month.

Our Restrictions

No saloons, no shanties, no factories. Purchasers are not compelled to build, but if they do then they must erect attractive looking houses, there being no "dollar limit." We leave it to each purchaser to build a pretty looking home, which must be neatly painted, as we known that for a moderate sum one can now build a very pretty bungalow. Lumber is cheap at Redondo, as there are three commercial wharves at Redondo, at which lumber schooners are daily discharging their cargoes.

If Russell Sage, the multi-millionaire of New York told you that you could make a fortune in suburban real estate (especially when it costs you only $4 down and $4 per month) wouldn't you be impressed? Well, listen! That's just what Mr. Sage did say in the New York World of September 28, 1902: "Young man, buy real estate, especially acre property, in the outlying boroughs and then work hard at your usual avocation. Your real estate purchases will make your old age comfortable."—Russell Sage.

POLITICS TO BE TABOOED.

The Highway Commissoiners Must Be Enthusiasts.

First Session of Executive Committee Held.

Good Roads Movement Now Spreading Rapidly.

"No effort will be spared to keep this movement on a high plane and absolutely free from politics."

This was the declaration of purpose made by Hon. P. J. Beveridge, a member of the Executive Committee of the Los Angeles County Good Roads Association and representative of the Hollywood Board of Trade, at the first meeting of the committee in the Chamber of Commerce yesterday.

It was a sentiment heartily indorsed by every member of the committee and along these lines the committee will work for the advancement of the good roads movement in this county.

F. W. Blanchard, first vice-president of the association, presided at the meeting in the absence of President S. A. Butler and announced that he was preparing figures to show that the expense of the proposed $3,000,000 issue of bonds for good roads will be so light upon the taxpayers as to hardly be felt.

Thomas Earley of Pasadena was chosen chairman of the committee. Roy Jones of Santa Monica sent in his resignation on the ground that personal business will prevent his attending the meetings of the committee. His successor will be chosen later.

ONLY ENTHUSIASTS.

The meeting of the committee was for the purpose of naming the other vice-presidents of the Good Roads Association and the delegates from the forty-nine road districts of the county. Owing to a lack of information at hand, however, this important action was deferred, as the members of the committee were unanimous in the belief that only the best men, and these genuine road enthusiasts, should be chosen to help carry on the good work.

But there was a good deal of discussion over plans and reports were made by members of the feeling toward the project of good roads in the various districts represented. The most encouraging reports were made along these lines, everybody apparently favoring immediate action to make the roads of the county the best in the West.

Chairman Earley reported that both in San Diego county and Santa Barbara county there was much enthusiasm over a good roads movement similar to the one in this county and predicted that before so very long a network of fine macadam roads would gridiron these counties. But Riverside and San Bernardino counties are also interested and are already working to make their county thoroughfares among the best in the State.

PERMANENT CLUB.

Following the meeting in the Chamber of Commerce a number of the committee as well as others interested in the subject of good roads, met at the Hollenbeck Café at noon, and appointed a committee to report permanent officers for the Los Angeles Good Roads Club, which was started.

Among those present were City Councilmen Wallace, Dromgold and Pease, County Supervisor Alexander, F. W. Blanchard, M. Lissner, Dr. W. A. Lamb, Judge Conrey, Charles Cassat Davis, Harry Lelande, Dana W. Bartlett, Melville Dozier, Marshall Stimson, Hartley Shaw and A. P. Johnson.

Mr. Lissner, temporary chairman of the club, presided and directed a general discussion of the new law just passed by the State Legislature, which provides for the appointment of a highway commission, which, it is believed, will greatly aid in the improvement of county roads. The bill was framed by members of this club, under the advice of the best legal talent on the general subject of road improvement, and it is supposed to be strictly all right.

"Uncle George" Alexander told the road enthusiasts that these commissioners ought to be the best men in the county, and that it was up to them to see that such men were secured. They are appointed upon a petition signed by at least 10 per cent. of the voters of the county at the last preceding election.

It was brought out that under the new law, two separate road systems may be maintained in the county, one in control of the County Supervisors and another under the Highway Commission.

SANTA BARBARA.

SANTA BARBARA, March 9.—The dead whale which came ashore near Edgecliff is a source of much concern to people in that vicinity, as the stench from the carcass has become obnoxious and is regarded as a menace to health. The whale-bug infesting the rotting flesh makes it difficult work for men to approach the whale in an endeavor to cut it up in particles small enough so that the offensive object can be handled for burial. The burnal of the remains is progressing, but not with the rapidity that the residents hoped for.

HEMET.

HEMET, March 9.—The water falling over the Hemet dam is thirty inches deep, and consequently over 5000 miners' inches of water are going to waste. The rainfall at Hemet now for the season is over fifteen inches.

W. D. Gay, a visitor at Hemet from Illinois, has bought twenty acres of unimproved land, and will come here soon and make Hemet his home.

TREATMENT ABSOLUTELY FREE UNTIL PERMANENTLY CU

$3 In all Catarrhal Diseases, Including Deafness, Asthma and Lung $3

TROUBLES (that are curable) to all who apply to Drs. Shores during the remaining days of March to prove to the afflicted that there is a PERMANENT CURE for CATARRHAL diseases.. Drs. Shores know there are thousands of afflicted people with different forms of catarrh that have become discouraged as to whether or not catarrh can be cured PERMANENTLY. It is to overcome this skepticism, and to demonstrate that Drs. Shores & Shores' new treatment does CURE quickly, and PERMANENTLY that this special offer is given. Drs. Shores give their professional services free, and their treatment free until the patient is cured PERMANENTLY. The only charge in any case will be for medicines actually used which Drs. Shores guarantee WILL NOT EXCEED $3.00 for one whole month. Do not delay, but start treatment AT ONCE. This is the most remarkable offer ever before made by reputable specialists. Don't be late. Come today—come any day, this week, for under this special offer all beginning treatment with Drs. Shores AT ONCE with catarrh or any catarrhal chronic disease will be treated absolutely free until cured PERMANENTLY. The only expense will be for the medicines actually used, which in the more complicated cases will NOT EXCEED $3.00 for one whole month. Hundreds will be cured practically free. Apply at once. You can consult Drs. Shores free for any disease, whether you take treatment or not. Call or write.

The Family Doctor and Specialist

Doctors Shores have been asked time and again why it is that their treatment cures so many people whom other first-class physicians are unable to cure. They have also been asked if they would advise people to give up their family doctors and employ specialists exclusively.

To the first question Drs. Shores would say that the reason that their treatment cures is not because Drs. Shores are the only good physicians in California, for there are hundreds of eminent doctors here. It is not because they possess superhuman powers, for Drs. Shores never attempt any such shallow deceit as that.

It Is Because

They have specially studied the diseases they treat and nothing else. They pay special attention to diagnosis, have every facility and a world of experience to enable them to properly diagnose a case, and after diagnosis is complete they begin to REMOVE THE CAUSE of the disease and make the organs do their proper work, instead of simply giving drugs to do the work of nature in an artificial way.

The Mistake of Doctors

Many doctors, for instance, use pepsin, bismuth, etc., in stomach troubles to ARTIFICIALLY DIGEST THE FOOD, and expect the patient to take medicine forever. But Drs. Shores cure the diseased stomach, and make it do its own work. That is why they cure stomach troubles.

The old way is like giving a lame man a crutch instead of curing his lameness. It is temporary "help," but sick people want CURES, and Drs. Shores try to give them cures that stay cured.

As to the Family Doctor

Drs. Shores would say: NEVER GIVE HIM UP IN HIS LINE, for he a safe and valuable friend in hundreds of ailments, but on the other hand don't expect him to cure old chronic, lingering diseases that require special study and years of special training and experience, when you know he is busy from morning till night with a thousand little duties that make it impossible for him to give the time and study necessary to properly understand and master special diseases.

The Specialist's Field

Is narrow. He treats only certain diseases. He is not trying to saw off a leg today, and cure measles tomorrow, but confines his time to his specialty, hence he is better able to treat successfully his specialties than the tired, overworked family doctor.

We have no quarrel with the family doctor. His work is a blessing to humanity, and in sudden and acute diseases is better qualified to treat the patient than the specialist, but can you reasonably expect him to have the instruments, facilities and experience necessary to cure a chronic case of Catarrh, Deafness, Stomach Trouble and like ailments?

Drs. Shores, Specialists

Drs. Shores and Shores have spent their lives in the study of Chronic Diseases. They have treated over 100,000 cases, an experience rarely ever granted any specialist, and have gleaned therefrom information that is invaluable to sick people. They would not attempt to treat Scarlet Fever or Diphtheria at any price, not because they don't know how, but because they have not given it the thought and constant study that other doctors have, and, in short, it is not in their line of specialties. Every moment is given to studying CHRONIC DISEASE. That is where they excel and that is where they can serve you better than any one else.

They know what causes Catarrh. They know how to cure it. They know what causes stomach trouble. They know how to CURE it instead of merely relieving it. They have studied the Liver, the Kidneys, the Ears, the Throat, the Lungs and Private Diseases, and they know what to do for these troubles. That is all they claim. That is all they treat. Consultation is always free at Drs. Shores' parlors or by letter. Prices and terms are within the reach of all. Success has not turned Drs. Shores' heads, and they do not charge fancy prices because the people have made them popular. A low fee, mild and painless treatment has been their motto always and always will be. Consultation always free.

$3 Not Temporary Relief, but Permanent Cures $3

Drs. Shores not only claim that the new treatment gives quicker relief than any other treatment, but Drs. Shores claim for their treatment that it cures "permanently," and now to demonstrate this fact they will treat all who apply at once with deafness or any catarrhal chronic disease absolutely free until the patient is cured "permanently." THE ONLY CHARGE IN ANY CASE WILL BE FOR "THE COST OF THE MEDICINES ACTUALLY USED," which in the more complicated cases will not exceed $3 for one whole month.

Under this special offer Drs. Shores give their professional services free and their treatments free, until the patient is permanently cured, to all who apply at once. THE ONLY EXPENSE in any case will be FOR THE MEDICINES ACTUALLY USED. The only restrictions the doctors place on this special offer is that you apply for treatment at once, for Drs. Shores reserve the right to withdraw the offer at any time the crowds become so large that the proper attention cannot be given to each case. Consultation free.

Dental Work Free

Without Pain. Trifle More Than Cost of Material

After being butchered by other dentists, I had a perfect dread of the dental chair. After being operated on by the People's Dentists for crown and bridge work, and having several teeth extracted absolutely without pain, I can recommend them to all wishing expert dental work done absolutely without pain.
A. W. HAYCOCK,
558 Fremont Ave.

After suffering two months trying to wear a bridge made by a highly advertised and high-priced dentist please accept my thanks for removing the same. The bridge you made is a perfect fit and gives entire satisfaction. I deem it my duty and privilege to let the public know where to go for first-class work and tender treatment. If you wish to publish my letter you have my consent to use my name.
Respectfully,
MRS. SARAH E. M'KINLEY,
1304 East Seventh St.

This is to certify that I have just had an aching nerve removed painlessly at the People's Dental Parlors, that another dentist had said would require four days. I cheerfully recommend them to all wishing skillful dental work at reasonable rates.
S. L. BROWN,
Pomona, Cal.

I have had crown work done at the People's Dental Parlors, and I am very much pleased with the way I was handled, and the work was done entirely satisfactory.
L. LUDERMAN,

Have just had a very bad root pulled by People's Dental Co. Gum was swelled very badly; never hurt a bit.

I cheerfully recommend the People's Dentists' process of pulling teeth to anyone needing work of that kind. I am a man well along in years, and dreaded having my teeth pulled because of being almost murdered in years past in having teeth extracted, but I can truthfully say there is no pain in the process they use. I had six drawn at once, and didn't know it until they were out. I pronounce it fine.
H. J. FRITZ,
Anaheim, Cal.

This is to certify that I have had filling, crown and bridge work done at the People's Dental Parlors, and am well satisfied. I can recommend them to others.
B. NOICE,

I have just had a tooth extracted without the least pain. I take pleasure in recommending the People's Dentists.

little lady, nothing over again. She Flint, and he ad- attend the Leg- She sent to Washington for all sorts of books on birds and bird laws. From these she herself framed a bill providing that meadow larks should not be killed, except in case where they were harming the crops, and then only by farmers, or their tenants.

Then Miss Hittel ,herself went to Sacramento, and did some successful lobbying. This was not at all to her taste, but she was very anxious to get the bill through. She attended the Legislature every day, accompanied by Mr. Steffens, the father of Lincoln Steffens. The bill was in the hands of an interested Senator and passed.

FINDS LEGISLATURE FUNNY.

Speaking of her experiences while attending the Legislature, Miss Hittell said: "Those men were all so funny, you know. They did not care at all about the facts and books and all that. They were all willing to vote for my bill, just out of pure friendliness. When I met Mr. Shortridge and told him about my bill, he laughed and said: 'Of course I'll vote for it. I'm rather fond of "Larks" myself.' Anyway the bill was passed, but just afterward a farmer sent two meadow larks to the convention, both filled with grain. The Senator who had engineered the bill looked at them and said: 'They stuffed 'em, that's plain.' "

To Miss Hittell and the members of the California Club is due the fact that the 5 per cent. bill for California was passed. Every State but California has always received 5 per cent. of the money received from the sale of public lands. California never had this. These women sent a petition to Congress and found a Senator to listen to their plea. Just about the time the bill came up in Congress the great San Francisco disaster occurred.

"Everybody felt so sorry for us then," said Miss Hittell, "that they passed the bill."

WANTS FORESTRY SCHOOL.

The money was set aside for State schools, and now Miss Hittell and her friends are working to get some of it for a State School of Forestry.

Miss Hittell also was instrumental in persuading the government to establish forestries in the islands about the coast.

Through the California Club the Calaveras grove of big trees was saved, and is now being made into a national park. The women petitioned Congress and Congress tried to buy the grove for $100,000, but the owners refused this price. Finally Congress made an arrangement to exchange certain other public lands for these, and now the grand old trees will be preserved forever.

HER EFFORTS IN THE NORTH.

Another work in which Miss Hittell has been prominent is that of saving historic Telegraph Hill for San Francisco. This noble mound of granite has been for the past few years a prey to the grafters. It stands in the center of the city, and for contractors has proven a veritable gold mine, for from it they are extracting rock, day by day, endangering the lives of many people, whose homes are thus undermined.

Many poor people live on this hill, and frequently some one is killed. The contractors are in with the politicians, who run the city, and nothing can be done with them. To secure an ordinance prohibiting the excavation of stone Miss Hittell and women of the California Club have worked faithfully. Miss Hittell even addressed labor meetings, pleading with the union men to vote for the ordinance.

She says they were most enthusiastic, and shouted and clapped their hands. "They even rolled great spittoons across the floor, to make more noise," she said, laughing at the remembrance.

The ordinance, however, was defeated this year, but the women are indefatigable, and have already planned a new campaign.

IS PUBLIC BENEFACTOR.

Miss Hittell is interested in beautifying her home city, and through her efforts the city planted the clinging Boston ivy around all the public buildings, enhancing greatly their appearance. The earthquake and fire, of course, destroyed all this.

There are many other things which this energetic little woman has done. She is a great climber, a member of the Sierra Club, and thinks nothing of a run up Mt. Tamalpais, for her Sunday outing.

What Our Patients Say

Mr. W. H. Leeds, a well known carpenter and contractor, living at 334 West 42d street, says: "For some time I have been a victim of chronic catarrh, affecting principally the nose and throat, the nose being stopped up nearly all the time, so that I was compelled to become a mouth breather, while I was constantly hawking and spitting mucous from my throat. The specialists of the Los Angeles Medical Institute cured me. The discharge has stopped and I am now sound and well. Can

What Our Patients Say

J. M. BRITAIN,
Huntington Beach, Box 55, R. D.

My case is a typical example of the thorough, scientific work done at the Los Angeles Medical Inst., said Mr. J. M. Britain of Huntington Beach to the writer a few days ago. I had been a sufferer from catarrh, undoubtedly affecting my whole system, but particularly so my ears. The hearing was gradually failing, while the head noises were a source of constant annoyance. I had but little hope of any permanent benefit when I went to these specialists, but I have been agreeably surprise, as I have improved from the very first, and now have little or no trouble. While my friends all tell me I look better than I have for years. I certainly advise any sufferer from catarrh in any form to consult with these specialists.

(Signed) J. M. BRITAIN.

Not Catarrh Alone

The specialists of the Los Angeles Inst. can be consulted free of charge in regard to any chronic disease, no incurable cases accepted for treatment.

In asking you to sign an "Application for Gas," we call your particular attention to the fact that you do not sign a contract, but a request only, for supply of gas as soon as this company's plant is ready to furnish it, at the then current rate, not exceeding 80 cents per 1,000 cubic feet.

Hundred Thousand Paid for Frontage of Eighty-five Feet Near Eighth Street.

Syndicates have been busy in the real estate field this week. One of the latest buys of a group of men was that of a lot on South Olive street, immediately adjoining the northeast corner of Eighth street. The lot is 85x160 feet, and was bought for $100,000, or at the rate of $1150 a front foot. Niles Pease is named as the grantor. The syndicate was formed through the agency of the Wright & Callender Company. It is said that surrounding property on the same street between Seventh and Eighth cannot be bought for less than $1500 a front foot.

SYNDICATE BUYS ON BROADWAY.

Lot Between Eighth and Ninth, Sold for Hundred Fifty Thousand. Quick Profit.

One of the notable deals of the week was that by which the ownership of forty-two and a half feet frontage on South Broadway between Eighth and Ninth street was transferred from Frederick Gundlach to a local syndicate of investors, headed by Howard B. Smith, for $150,000. The property in question is on the west side of Broadway and was recently purchased by Gundlach from Henry S. Williams for $138,400, Gundlach thus clearing $11,600 in less than sixty days. It has a depth of 160 feet. The improvements consist of a one-story brick store building renting for a nominal sum. At the time of purchasing the property, two months ago, Gundlach planned to erect a modern five-story structure and hold the property for investment, but when the syndicate came forward with an offer of $250 more a front foot than he had paid, he took his profit. Colson, Bryon & Donnell were the agents in the deal.

PRETTY RIVERSIDE HOME.

One of the neatest homes in Riverside is that being built for Lew W. Irvine in that city. It is two stories and a half high and contains sixteen rooms, eight on the first floor, six bedrooms, two baths and plenty of closet room on the second floor, with four servants' rooms in the attic. The building occupies a corner. It is fifty-six feet square. There is a deep cement cellar equipped with a furnace, laundry and other conveniences.

The exterior finish consists of brick veneer and cement plaster. The foundation is faced with artificial stone. The roof is covered with metallic tiling. The interior is finished in the natural Oregon pine. All the main rooms on the lower floor are connected by archways, enabling the entire first floor to be thrown open into one large suite for entertainments.

Preston & Seehorn, Los Angeles, are the architects for the structure, which will cost about $13,000. David Irvine has the contract for the carpentery, and Casselman & Knoll are doing the masonry work.

ON SECOND NEAR SAN PEDRO.

Contracts have been let for the erection of a five-story, brick, building to be built on the north side of East Second street between San Pedro and Los Angeles streets. It is to be used as a store and apartment building and will cost about $35,000 to complete. The front elevation of the building is pictured on this page. A. L. Healy (Inc.) is the architect. The structure will be built for T. L. Bacon. The size of the building, over all, is 50x95 feet. There will be two large store rooms on the ground floor, the remaining four floors being occupied by sixteen large, and well-lighted apartments, each equipped with a wash stand, hot and cold water, gas and electricity. There will be two private baths and two public bathrooms on each floor. The building will be rented to parties, who will open it as an up-to-date European hotel. There will be an elevator for the use of the guests. Steam heat will be supplied each room. W. H. Jones has the contract for the structural work. The front will be finished in red pressed brick.

MONROVIA ACTIVITY INCREASES.

Building of the $50,000 canning factory enterprise has stimulated the real estate market in and about Monrovia to quite an extent in the matter of increasing values. The factory will be ready for business in thirty days.

Local capitalists are now behind the Redburn Hotel project and if there ever was any doubts as to its being built, they are now dispelled.

Minnie Anderson has purchased of Hotchkiss & Bovee their residence lot corner of Lemon and California, consideration $1000. J. E. Bunker sold to J. H. Good & Co. three lots on corner of Palm and Ivy avenues, price $3400. The Granite Bank and Trust Company sold lot and residence on south Encinitis to J. E. Bunker, consideration $2500.

BUYERS SHOULD BEWARE.

Sixty acres of unimproved land in Orange Heights, Corona, have been subdivided into three plats, Orange Place, Lemon and Marvin tracts. The land is without water and is only suitable for dry ranching. As such it is worth about $25 an acre. Although within the city limits, the tracts are fully three and one-half miles southwest of the business portion of town. The Corona Board of Trade censured the City Trustees for accepting the plats of these subdivisions, claiming they were of little value as city lots.

It is understood the Orange Place tract has been practically sold out, prices in some cases ranging from $200 to $250 a lot. Some of these purchasers have listed the lots with Corona realty men, offering to accept whatever can be gotten out of the property.

Charles Stansbury, the contractor, backs the Lemon and Marvin tracts with E. L. Hazard as his agent and it is generally believed also as a partner in this land scheme. The promoters claim to be getting a water supply from two wells recently put down in the wash, three miles north of their tracts, but as this would require a lift of 300 feet the outlook for getting water on the subdivisions seems rather problematic.

BIG ACREAGE BUY.

J. D. Dyer and associates have purchased from E. W. Thatcher, through the agency of I. N. Richards, thirty acres on the northeast corner of Central and Manchester avenues. The price paid was about $1000 an acre. The land is located about two blocks west of the Long Beach line of the Pacific Electric Railway. It is without improvements in the way of buildings, but is excellent farming land, and the greater portion of it is now planted in barley. The purchase was made as a speculative investment and probably for future subdivision. The price is the highest yet reported for acreage in that immediate locality.

HILL STREET NEAR PICO.

W. D. Wilson has sold through the agency of A. E. Halsey and J. W. Cunningham to local investors, No. 1210 South Hill street for $55,000, being at the rate of $1100 per foot. The property is 50x140 feet and improved with a two-story nine-room house.

The recent sale of the northwest corner of Pico and Hill streets was at $1500 per foot and other sales in that locality are about same level of values.

CORNER SIXTEENTH AND OAK.

Conway & Kessler have sold for T. C. Rathbone to Max Kuhn the southwest corner of Sixteenth and Oak streets, 106 feet on Sixteenth street and 85 feet on Oak street, improved with two cottages, for $12,500; Dolton & Austin represented the seller. Conway & Kessler sold to Charles T. Stewart 42x149 feet to alley, on west side of Moneta, just south of corner of Thirty-seventh street, for $6500. The Gleasner Company represented the buyer.

NEAR NINTH ON OLIVE.

T. J. Jarvis & Co. report the sale of a 60x165 feet lot on the west side of South Olive street fifty-five feet south of Ninth street, from E. G. Hahne, to a local invester. The property was deeded to the Union Trust and Title Company, representing the buyer. The price named is $66,000. There is a nine or ten-room two-story, frame residence on the property, which rents for $60 a month. The value of the improvements did not make much difference in the purchase price.

REAL ESTATE NOTES.

Emil Firth reports the completion of all improvements in his new subdivision, Athen Heights. It is claimed for this new tract that it occupies the highest piece of ground on Vermont avenue with a sweeping view of mountains, valley and the beach. High-class improvements have been installed throughout. The lots are platted extra large, ranging in size from 50x169 to 100x169, with alleys in the rear. The opening sale is announced for today and many of the lots already have been reserved. For the convenience of visitors, a special observation car will be operated between Second and Spring streets and the tract. The car will run every hour today and will probably continue every day for the remainder of this month, or until the property has been sold.

Building activity and improvement work still continues at Oceano Beach, the new resort and commercial center on San Luis Obispo Bay, and twelve miles south of that city. The recent storm, however, damaged the southern portion of the beach to some extent, though not enough to effect the work then in progress. Port Harford, and Oil Port on the northern end of the beach suffered considerably, but the resorts, El Pizmo, Oceano and La Grande fared unusually well, considering the violence of the storm. It is only in February and March that this section receives anything that can be called a violent storm. Two buildings were started on the boulevard at Oceano Beach this week by Long Beach parties.

Engineer F. T. Perris of the Santa Fé has submitted to the City Council of San Bernardino the plans for the proposed viaduct across the railroad tracks, extending along Mount Vernon avenue from Third to Fourth street. The estimated cost of the improvement is $50,000. The Santa Fé proposes to build the viaduct free of expense to the city if the city will agree to keep it in repair. Perris states that besides this outlay, the company will expend $400,000 this year in shop and yard improvements.

A new townsite has been staked off at Mesto Station, midway between this city and Santa Ana. It will take its name from the station. L. A. McCray & Bro., oil dealers, of Hollywood, are at the head of the syndicate. Five acres of land, a part of the Rawson ranch, was bought from Mrs. Della B. Rawson of this city, and upon this triangular tract is to be located the town proper. The streets are being graded, a water system will be put in, together with electric lights, and application will be made for a postoffice.

C. N. Randolph, fiscal agent for the Graham Steamship, Coal and Lumber Company, who have recently purchased 120,000 acres of timber land, and 20,000 acres of coal land on Graham Island in the Queen Charlotte group, above Victoria, has just arranged for an additional purchase of 12,000 acres of coal-bearing land, which is also heavily timbered. Purchase price of this additional coal land being $20 per acre, making a total of $240,000. This company, with a capital of $5,000,000, is headed by B. F. Graham of Los Angeles, president; Charles M. Shannon of Los Angeles, vice-president; J. W. Rice of Los Angeles, secretary; W. J. Doran of the Metropolitan Bank and Trust Company, Los Angeles, treasurer; including also W. P. Lett, capitalist of Riverside; H. Stine, capitalist of San Diego, and Col. Epes Randolph.

THAT PADEREWSKI—PROBABLY THE GREATEST, AND CERTAINLY THE MOST POPULAR OF LIVING PIANISTS — IS A STRONG ADMIRER OF THE STEINWAY PIANO IS DEMONSTRATED BY THE FOLLOWING TESTIMONIAL RECENTLY RECEIVED FROM HIM.

Dear Mr. Steinway:

I must tell you that, although I was delighted and inspired with your pianos at my first concert, my enthusiasm and inspiration increased at my second concert, and became still greater at the third, and thus it went on crescendo until my final appearance, at which my joy in the grandeur, the power, and the ideal beauty of the tone and perfection of touch and mechanism was unbounded.

All who play your pianos can but thank you. I also do so, and at the same time congratulate you most heartily.

Yours very devoted,
I. J. PADEREWSKI.

I gladly confess that my demands were not only completely fulfilled, but far surpassed. Your grand piano is distinguished by its rare purity of tone quality: sensitive, clear as a bell. The touch is simply unsurpassable for the delivery of all kinds of double notes. WINE GROWERS' CUP OF JOY IS FILLING.

California's Producers See a Bright Future for Vineyards.

They Find That the Pure Food Law Protects Home Industry, and That Shipping of Our Fine Vintage Abroad to Fortify Foreign Stock and Make It Bring High Prices Is About to Cease.

JOY REIGNS supreme among the wine growers of California. They have learned that the pure food law affects the foreign wine grower who sends his product into the United States fully as much as it does the Golden State grower.

For the last few months there has been a feeling of chagrin among the California growers over the ruling of the Department of Agriculture that the local growers could not use the names "Burgundy," "Port," "Sherry," etc., in connection with the product of this State, and a great loss in business was expected. It was ordered that the humiliating word "type" accompany any use of the above names unless the goods were grown in the districts in Europe which bear the above names.

Labels on California wines necessary under the pure food law. Wine growers object to the use of the word "type," and are talking of some plan to give distinctive names to the product of Golden State grapes.

It was at first thought that the ruling would leave the market clear to the foreign growers, and would only prohibit shipping California wines to Europe and sending them back under high-sounding names. It is stated by local wine growers that this last procedure has seldom been followed out, but the use of California wines to fortify the wines of Europe has for years been a common practice.

This last statement is a broad one, but it is vouched for by several of the most prominent wine growers of the State. It is said in explanation that the wines of France, Italy, etc., are produced from vines hundreds of years old, and have as a result been refined in a sense to such a degree that the virgin body of the grape has been lost.

One wine grower said that were it not for the nitrate fields of Chile, France could produce but a very inferior wine. As it is, the growers claim, it is necessary to add to the highly refined wines of France and other countries the rich, virile wine grown from the virgin soil of the New World. It is said that the natural wines of France have an ultra-refined taste which only reaches that perfection sought by the best growers, by the addition of the rich, sturdy wine from California.

CHANGE FORESHADOWED.

This fact, which the wine growers say they can prove, is the basis for the expressions of satisfaction in this State. It is pointed out that Burgundies, Sherries, Ports, etc., which bear a foreign label and which have been fortified by the addition of the wines from California, will be compelled to adopt the same label as the local wines. The product will not be a Burgundy, but a Burgundy type, and as such the local wines will bear identically the same name.

The high-sounding names from across the ocean will to a great extent cease bringing the high price now obtained for them, owing to their foreign label, it is believed. This is said by the growers to foreshadow a complete change in the wine business. It is stated that instead of shipping California wines to Europe and sending them back mixed with French wines, and paying the double duty necessary, French wines manufactured for consumption in the United States will be shipped direct to this country and the fortifying will be done in the United States. This wine, after it has been fortified, will have to be called a "type," and again foreign wines will be on the same level as the California wines.

The extent to which California wines have been used to fortify foreign wines is not generally known. The shipments of wine from this State are seldom made direct to ports in France. To a certain extent shipments intended for France are forwarded to Tahiti Island, a French possession, and then reshipped. This same procedure is said to be carried on by shipments to Samoa, a German possession, and thence to Germany. This method is, of course, not universal. It has been carried on, however, until local growers have directed their attention to it.

SUDDEN REVELATION.

A prominent Philadelphia man who is not connected with the wine business, but who spent a year in France, yesterday told of his experience in one of the famous wine cellars there. He had been shown into the cool depths of the caves and saw great casks and tiers of bottles all covered with cobwebs. A large door was opened, and he was told that he would now be shown the vintage of all vintages, the wine used only at royal feasts, etc. Musty flasks were pointed out with almost a reverent gesture. The American was duly impressed and felt abashed when he thought of American wines. As he emerged from the cellars he saw the American flag gaily waving from a ship in the harbor. The sight gladdened his heart, and he proceeded immediately to the harbor.

The ship's crew was busy unloading great tiers of casks and barrels. They all contained wine from California, and were consigned to the wine company through whose cellars he had just passed. The American wine was to be used in fortifying the wines from France and make possible that "vintage of all vintages," which is used only at royal feasts."

Wine growers of the State will testify that it is no uncommon sight to see famous wine merchants of France, accompanied by their private secretaries and chief cellar men, traveling by easy stages through the wine districts of California. Heavy purchases of wine are thus made, the foreign merchant keeping in the background as far as possible.

MIX IN NEW YORK?

It is the belief of the local growers that New York is to become the scene of the mixing of French and American wines in the future. New York has heretofore been the scene of simply relabeling of California wines in the grossest manner. Some of the large hotels of Gotham are charged with purchasing California wines in bulk and bottling them under foreign labels. During January of this year over 120,000 gallons of wine was shipped by water to New York and about half that amount by rail.

One of the largest wine growers in the State said yesterday, anent the future for California wines:

OUR WINE FUTURE.

"California is the only country in the world where not a drop of rain falls from the time the vine is in blossom until the grape, bursting with its richness, is plucked. In France there are so-called special vintages. This means years in which the rains were late and the grapes were picked before rain fell. When a grape is ripe and a drop of rain falls upon it, it bursts and the bouquet is lost. The grape will have a rusty streak on one side where the water struck it. Other years in which the rain falls in France before the graps are ripe are called poor years. In California the grape is always plucked before the rainy season starts. This means that the future California wine is to become the finest in the world. Gradually, as the vines are developed and the grower can afford to permit his wine to age longer, the quality will improve.

With the pure food law stepping in and compelling foreign wines to state exactly where they are made, and whether they are a blend of two grades of wine, places the wines of California upon an equal basis with the wine of Europe. This condition, which permits California wines which are a pure native product only to masquerade under a misnomer and bear a name which means some district in France or Italy, does not go far enough for some of the loyal wine growers of California, and there is a movement on foot to create names for California wines which, while telling what they are, will have a distinctive quality which will finally bring the wines of the State to the standing with the public that they deserve. One wine grower has gone so far already as to give numbers to his products, and have stamped on the label the district in this State where the wine is grown. More of the growers will follow.

PROUD SCHOOL POSSESSION.

The Polytechnic orchestra is a proud school possession. It has recently been augmented by the addition of several new instruments, viola, trombone and several violins. At present it is composed of thirteen first violins, eight second violins, two 'cellos, a viola, three clarionets, three flutes, three cornets, a trombone, drums and a piano. The orchestra has played for all the school entertainments and plays. At the last production of the students' "Twelfth Night," an artistic portion of the programme were the old English selections played by the orchestra. It is in charge of Mrs. Gertrude Parsons, and, under her direction, has made a marked improvement over last year's work.

Councilman Walter J. Wren, who thinks the Receiving Hospital investigation has not reached the facts, and who intends to probe conditions along quiet lines.

PLAIN FACTS OF HOSPITAL.

City's Place for Injured Is Really Horrible.

One Surgeon Seldom There, Outsider Paid.

Councilman Wren to Probe the Conditions.

Developments of the past two days go to show that the City Council has not done with the Receiving Hospital investigation. If Councilman Wren can accomplish it the hospital will for some time to come remain the subject of close examination. And it is altogether probable that this future probing will not be carried on to the accompaniment of a brass band.

There is every reason to believe that genuine desire to mend things is a motive for this change in programme. Who the men are who will be examined as to conditions is not known, and probably will not. In the past month, during which the hospital has been a center of public attention, a number of wild statements have been made; which is almost invariably the case when municipal institutions get a raking over. Unjust things are said and believed as a rule on such occasions, and facts are lost sight of.

In the newspapers many sensational reports have been given by physicians and laymen concerning the Receiving Hospital. As a matter of fact what exists in the institution is easy to learn. And a layman can see it. Conditions are evil; the evil has been in the main the result of facts which have not been given to the public at all. These facts are nearly all included in this one statement: The City Council has placed the hospital in cramped quarters, and of its two chief surgeons one has showed his face about the place so rarely that 75 per cent. of the policemen in Los Angeles do not know him when they see him.

HORROR IN LITTLE ROOMS.

The Receiving Hospital consists of three rooms, each about the size of a sitting room in a $2000 cottage. These were built without any knowledge of the fact that they were to be put to their present use. They adjoin the jail. Admittance to them comes through two entrances, the jail itself and a large door opening into the north corridor of the building's first floor. In these three rooms is done most of the emergency surgical work of the city. During the year which has passed 2518 operations were performed within their walls. This is said to be more work of the kind than is done in any other hospital in Los Angeles.

In these facts are contained the main reasons for existing bad conditions—conditions really horrible. The men and women and children who are injured daily on the streets—many of them gravely—do not get the emergency treatment to which under twentieth-century conditions they are entitled.

In these three rooms are six beds. In the women's ward of the City Jail are two more hospital beds. On the latter are placed, after operation, the girls and women who meet accident or incur injury from design. These eight beds hold drunken men, mangled street car victims, morphine fiends, raving lunatics—and sometimes little children who have met harm.

OPERATIONS ON FLOOR.

Times have been—and they were not infrequent—when bleeding men and women have lain on the hard floors while perspiring surgeons with sleeves rolled up stepped over their prostrate forms, knives in their hands, working as only men can work who are saving the lives of others. On such occasions the place has been a hideous sight.

The afternoon of the Cessaty restaurant explosion police ambulances carried victims in loads to the hospital. Among the injured were men and women. Outside surgeons helped the Receiving Hospital staff. The one small operating room was packed, not only with those patients undergoing actual treatment, but with some who were awaiting attention, and with stretcher bearers and policemen, coming and going in their work of mercy. The hospital did not look pretty that day.

Nor did the place look pleasant on other occasions. For instance a year ago last Christmas eve a trolley car, running wild down the Second-street hill, crashed at Spring street into another car which in its turn collided with and overturned a third. In a moment the street was literally crawling with maimed women and children, and groaning men. The police stretched fire lines, the sound of the ambulance gong and the beat of horses hoofs on the asphalt became wearisome. That Christmas eve the Receiving Hospital looked much like a busy butcher shop. There was something pitiful in the

STATE DIVISION IS ALMOST IMPOSSIBLE.

Requires Amendment to Constitution of the United States.

Ex-Senator Short Points Out the Great Difficulties in the Way—People of the North Would Have to Agree to the Scheme as Well as the Southrons—Co-operation of All Is the Best Programme.

BY HON. FRANK H. SHORT.

THE OBSTACLES.

Mr. Short shows in this article that the following requisites are necessary to State division:

A two-thirds vote of both houses of Congress.

Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

Favorable action by the Legislatures or constitutional conventions of three-fourths of the States of the Union.

Agreement by two-thirds vote of the two houses of the State Legislature, dominated by the North.

A majority vote of the people of the whole State of California, most of them opposed to a separate State of Southern California.

YOU have requested me to give my views as to the difficulties obstructing the programme of State division. I do not think it will require much space to show the difficulties, not to say the impossibilities, of State division.

Section 3, Article IV, of the Constitution of the United States, reads as follows: "New States may be admitted by Congress into this Union, but no new States shall be formed or erected within the jurisdiction of any other State; nor any State be formed by the junction of two or more States or parts of States without the consent of the legislatures of the States concerned, as well as of Congress." It will be observed that the words "but no new State shall be formed or created within the jurisdiction of any other State," are independent of the other portions of the section, and are prohibitive in terms of the creation of any new State by the division of any State already a part of and one of the United States. It is well understood that at the time of the adoption of the Constitution the States were not only jealous of their right of local self-government, but of their so-called sovereign powers, and also of their territorial integrity and, therefore, this provision, prohibitive in terms, was put into the Constitution in order to guarantee the States against any act of the United States that would serve to divide the States or erect new States out of territory belonging to then existing States.

HON. FRANK H. SHORT.

The only State division that has ever occurred since the formation of the Union, and the adoption of the Constitution is the instance wherein West Virginia was segregated from the State of Virginia and created into a new State. I presume this fact has led to some confusion of ideas and the assumption that new States may be created out of territory already included in an existing State. This, however, is not true, except under conditions which existed at the time West Virginia was admitted to the Union. Virginia was in rebellion against the authority of the Federal Union, had withdrawn from and denied the binding effect of the Constitution of the United States and during this period and as a purely military matter certain of her territory having been wrested from the Confederate armies, was erected into and declared to be a new State, not because the Constitution permitted it, but upon the theory that Virginia at the time was outside the pale of the Constitution.

It is not probable, I assume, that even our most enthusiastic friends in favor of State division will try to accomplish it by the drastic road that resulted in the formation of West Virginia.

STATE CONSTITUTION.

It will also be found that the Constitution of the State of California, while not saying anything upon the subject, makes no provision for the emasculation or segregation of any portion of the State or the setting up within her jurisdiction of any new States. Within the powers conferred on the Legislature by the Constitution there is no intimation of any power to either divide the State or permit the erection of any new State, or to take any act or proceeding in aid of or recognition of such a movement. It is, therefore, astonishing that a proceeding so practically impossible, and so thoroughly hedged about by constitutional restrictions and limitations should have been thought a subject for serious or at least animated discussion.

Perhaps, however, some one will be found ready to rise and observe that all things are possible, at least in the nature of a proceeding that is or may be authorized by law. Conceding this, we will then consider briefly what procedure would be necessary in order to permit the erection or installation of a new State out of and including a part of the territory now embraced within the State of California.

An amendment to the Constitution of the United States would obviously be necessary, and it has been found that except immediately following the adoption of the Constitution and during the reconstruction period when the powers of the Southern States were suspended under the Constitution, it has been practically impossible to amend the Constitution of the United States. This for the reason that an amendment must be proposed and initiated by at least two-thirds of both houses of Congress; or on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, Congress shall call a convention for proposing amendments; and these amendments in either instance, whether proposed by two-thirds of both houses, or by a convention called by the action of three-fourths of the States, shall be valid and become a part of the Constitution only when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States or by conventions of three-fourths thereof as the one or other mode of ratification may be proposed by Congress.

PRACTICAL IMPOSSIBILITY.

When we take into consideration that none of the States other than California would be interested in or desire the erection of a new State out of a part of its territory, and that Congress would undoubtedly not favor as a general rule the erection of new States, and that the various States would be apprehensive, that if an amendment should be adopted permitting the same that numerous efforts favoring State division and secession of portions of other States would occur, it can be very readily seen that it would not only be impossible to obtain the consent of three-fourths of the States to such a movement, but that doubtless more than three-fourths of them would oppose the same, being either not interested in such an amendment or apprehensive of its undesirable effect as to them. And of course an amendment of the Constitution of the United States could not be thought of or hoped for of mere local, and not of general application. Even if the Constitution of the United States would be amended, which is obviously practically impossible, we would still be confronted with other practically impossible difficulties in the way of State division.

To begin with, a constitutional amendment would have to be submitted to the people of the State concerned by a majority of two-thirds of the Senate and Assembly of the State and after being submitted would have to be voted by a majority of the people of the State. Since a majority of the Legislature would naturally be opposed to division and since a majority of the people would also be opposed, it is hardly conceivable that even if the way were open that the State by any procedure known to our system of laws could be divided. But the one perfectly conclusive provision against a division is the prohibitive provision of the Constitution of the United States and the obvious impossibility of amending it so as to permit the erection of a new State.

We think these few observations are quite sufficient to fix in the mind of any one that State division for purposes of practical consideration is impossible.

For myself, and I have no doubt my views are concurred in by a very great majority of the people of California including very many at least and I hope a majority of the residents of Southern California, I feel that State division, even if available would be a very grave mistake.

PULL TOGETHER.

It is constantly reiterated that California is too large and that her resources and interests are so diversified and scattered as to render adequate legislation and community of interests impossible. To my mind this is a mere narrow and prejudiced view, having little foundation in the general facts of the situation. While some portions of the State are now more actively irrigated than other portions there are but comparatively small portions of the State that could not practically engage in irrigation and that will not ultimately do so. While we have a very great variety of climate, our horticultural, mining, manufacturing and general farming and industrial interests will be found to extend quite largely throughout the State and in a very large degree one way or another effect the greater portion of the entire State.

The Pacific Ocean lies along our entire western boundary, the Sierra Nevadas traverse the entire eastern portion of the State, and there would be more difference between the various sections of either Northern or Southern California within themselves than there is between either of the two sections taken as a whole.

History has demonstrated that largely populated, wealthy and influential States are more satisfactory than comparatively small States with a small population, comparatively poor and of small influence in national affairs.

Since, however, State division is not and can never become a practical question, its agitation is not only unnecessary, but positively detrimental. Northern and Southern California are married after the Catholic fashion, for better or worse, for rich or for poor, for time and for eternity, at least until they shall terminate together and as one State.

It would, therefore, appear to me to be much more broad-minded, sensible, patriotic and statesmanlike, not to say business-like, for the various sections of the State to be considering not only questions that would be beneficial to them locally but to other portions of the State as well, acting in harmony and in accord and for the welfare and advancement of the entire State. If the sections should commence to pull apart, criticise, find fault with and quarrel with each other, there would be an end to good government beneficial to either section. I have no doubt that considerable well-founded criticism could be suggested by either sec-

Signor Constantino, the great tenor of the San Carlo Opera Company, cooks fish and makes excitement.

Well, it's safely over. Heaven be praised!

Constantino has cooked fish—and all is well.

One great sigh of relief has swept through the San Carlo Opera Company and joy reigns once more—until the next fish cooking.

The great Italian tenor is an altogether adorable person—until he begins to think about cooking fish.

It seems that there is a variety of fish growing near Italy for which Constantino has an indefinable mania.

It looks like a pale worried worm that does not get on very well with its wife. The only place in which it is caught is at the mouth of a certain Italian river, where the water is half salt from the sea and half fresh from the river. It cannot be caught with a hook; but is beguiled into nets by means of a torch at night. They are so scarce and hard to get that only one is caught at a time and that after much trouble.

Wherefore Constantino has to pay $20 for a wee tin box of his favorite fish. He would rather die by the wrath of an El Paso mob than permit any but his own hands to cook one of these fish.

SHUDDERS TRICKLE.

When Constantino decides to cook fish a shudder of apprehension trickles down the various spines of the stars of the San Carlo Opera Company.

Last Friday, the night he was going to sing, one of his worst attacks of fish cooking came on early in the morning. Black despair settled on the colony of private cars at the Arcade Station. If it had only been any other day!

Constantino and his wife live in a private car, also inhabited by Alice Nielsen and Henry Russell—the impresario.

When they got out to breakfast Friday morning they knew at once from the symptoms that Constantino was about to cook fish. It was to be felt in the air.

"Sh-h-h-h; hush," the word went down the line of the private cars, "have a care; Constantino is about to cook fish."

Mme. Nordica, from her car, "Plymouth," tactfully sent a servant out on a wide detour. Presently a cab backed softly up to her car and Nordica's maid stepped in with Nordica's celebrated poodle "Fi-fi," to be gone for a long and indefinite ride.

Fi-fi once upon a time disgraced himself and the prima donna at a fish-cooking and fearfully complicated the tragedy by eating the fish. They were not taking any chances.

Then everybody waited in a solemn stillness.

THE PLOT THICKENS.

Suddenly, Constantino, who had been reading, threw down a book and said with a determined gleam in his eye, "I am going to cook fish."

"Oh how nice," gurgled Miss Nielsen enthusiastically (This is the way she has learned to steel herself against emotion; so was able to sing "Star Spangled Banner" and calm the audience in the burning theater.)

"How perfectly jolly," she said, "Constantino is going to cook those dear little wormy fish."

"How perfectly jolly," echoed Mr. Russell gloomily, his voice wet with tears.

Constantino's valet and his private secretary leaped from their places and danced attendance—from long experience.

"Tell the cook," whispered Mr. Russell in a worried voice, "that Mr. Constantino is going to cook again."

Miss Nielsen tactfully slipped out of the drawing-room car and disappeared in the direction of the kitchen. She is the only intrepid soul who dares be the bearer of this message.

voice trying to calm another voice raised in indignant expostulation: "No siree. No ma'am. No, ma'am, not even fo' yo' all, ma'am. Not fo' nobody.

"Nobody cooks in dis hyah kitchen but me. No ma'am. Yo' jus looka hyah, Miss Alice. If that man comes in hyah, he goin' to git a soak behind a ear with a frying pan. Ah don' cyah if he is a tenor. Ah don' care if he plays de bass drum. Ah don' care if he rides de elefunt. No siree—no ma'am, he ain't goin' to git no mo' of that garlic in mah butter—no siree."

Little by little the expostulation dies away to a grumble and finally the portly form of the cook is seen departing in the direction of the city for a day vacation—with many a backward glare of savage scorn and anger.

MARSHALS HIS FORCES.

Meanwhile Constantino has been getting into war paint for the coming fray. His valet, a Spaniard, and his private secretary, an Italian, are both flying around with aprons, chef's caps, each, in their excitement, jabbering in their own tongue. Constantino is attempting to put on all the things at once and meanwhile glares fixedly at the innocent little tin of fishes on the table.

The scene is transferred to the kitchen. Like most train kitchens, it is about big enough for a rat. One of the little wormy fish would be crowded if he were brought into the kitchen at the same time with another little wormy fish.

Into the holies of holies enters Constantino alone. The others wait on the outside in fear and trepidation.

Miss Nielsen and Signora Constantino throw themselves into arm chairs in dumb resignation. Mr. Russell paces the floor in imitation of a new-born papa waiting to hear what the doctor says—outside the hospital door.

Ever and anon issue strange and baleful noises.

A hiss of frying butter.

"B-r-r-r-r—where iss ze oil?"

A valet rushes to the rescue.

Snort of rage! "Oh, O-o-o—zis is not good oil, zis is like wheel grease."

More frying noises.

"Caramba (what the dickens does that mean, anyhow?) Ze salt. Ze salt."

Another valet rushes.

"Salt!" I do not want all ze salt there iss. I do not want a crystallized ocean."

A long interval of dreadful silence.

To the relief of all comes a smiling handsome head around the corner of the kitchen door. "Ha, he iss all cooked."

They do not fall into one another's arms for joy; but they look that way.

PRIDE OF CONQUEST.

A grand scurrying is made to set the luncheon tables while Constantino looks on with pride—fairly in a glow of pleased satisfaction.

All are summoned from the other cars for the festivity.

Comes Nordica; comes the peachy beauty—Fely Dereyne; comes the langourous Tarquina Tarquini—Andrea de Segurola, Conti and a while constellation of stars.

Constantino is very sensitive about his little wormy fish.

Every time one of the luncheon diners seem to grow a trifle jaded in the region of the appetite, he would half rise from his chair and inquire chillingly, "You don't like my cooking of fish?"

"Oh yes," they would say, "Just perfectly lovely; perfectly grand."

"Please have them often," begged Miss Nielsen.

"Fine," ejaculated Mr. Russell; adding under his breath, "but not for eating."

When it was over and the remnants of the feast had been cleared away, Constantino went away humming a little air from the opera.

Manager Russell waited in the wings Friday night until Constantino went "on" and his glorious tenor began floating out over the footlights.

Then he sighed a long sigh and went out for a square meal. There were no wormy little fresh-salt-water $20 fishes on his menu.

"Those little fish are great; yes sir," said Mr. Russell last night, "but as one friend to another, don't eat any—unless you have a tenor on your hands."

HILLSDALE RECEPTION.

Graduates of the Michigan Baptist College Have a Reunion at the Home of Dr. Adkinson.

A reception was given by the Southern California Association of Hillsdale College Alumni and Students at the residence of Dr. and Mrs. A. W. Adkinson, No. 2115 West Twentieth street, Western Heights.

Hillsdale College is under the auspices of the Free Baptist Church, and was founded more than fifty years ago at Hillsdale, Mich., about 200 miles east of Chicago. The college has been noted for its high standard of scholarship, its high moral character and the special attention given by the students to the literary societies, the development of art and public speaking. Its representative, Mr. Walrath, won first honors in the Michigan State oratorical contest recently held.

About three years ago the local society of alumni was formed, and the constitution provides for a winter banquet and a summer picnic. This year, in place of the more formal banquet, the invitation of Dr. and Mrs. Adkinson to meet at their home was accepted.

There were present those who had been students of the college back in the '50's and one of the class of '06. Two generations of "Old Hillsdale" spent a delightful social evening. The house was tastefully decorated with potted ferns, smilax and the college colors, red, white and blue. Harp and violin music were rendered, and Miss Augur gave a vocal solo. The reception committee consisted of Dr. and Mrs. Adkinson, Judge Luce, Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Augur, Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Ralsback, Miss Katherine Adkinson and Miss Pedeu. Misses Edna Augur, Ruth and Frances Bishop presided at the refreshment tables. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Eggleston, Litchfield, Mich.; Edna Louise Ray, Hillsdale; L. J. Kenrick, Hillsdale; Miss Mamie Bath, Evart, Mich.; Judge M. A. Luce, San Diego; Dr. and Mrs. F. A. Bishop, Mr. and Mrs. S. L. Leub, Misses Ruth and Francine Bishop, Long Beach; Mrs. C. E. Russell, Miss Ina Russell, E. A. Kenrick, E. W. Kenrick, Glendale; W. H. Cartwright, Dr. Charles King, Pasadena; Mmes. Lillian S. Wells and E. Burlingame Cheney, Hollywood; Ida E. Warfield and L. K. Warfield, Ocean Park; Wm. H. Burdick, Santa Monica; Miss A. Ruth Lockwood, Riverside; Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Fay, Dr. J. N. and Mrs. Martin, Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Augur, Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Potter, L. M. and Mrs. Holt, J. D. and Mrs. Ashbaugh, and Mrs. E. M. Cunningham, Mmes. M. A. Hamilton, Edith Withrow, Anna W. Roberts, Eldora Lockwood Smith, Ollie J. Martin, Eliza Scott Potter, Elbertine McNeil Sabine, Nellie S. Dram, Misses Harriet MacDougal, Rosa McDougal, Villa and Edna Augur, Eva Adele Olney, Mabelle Cunningham, Pedeu, Katherine Adkinson, Agnes G. Sabine, Hazel Dill; Messrs. J. C. Crane, S. E. Miner, Paul Adkinson, Stillman.

The local association has started a movement to provide an emergency fund of $5000 to assist in defraying the expenses of their old alma mater, and a letter was read from the college president, Dr. Mauck, extending thanks for the practical interest shown by the graduates and former students now so far away from their school home.

A FINE
DEAFNESS TREATMENT
FREE!

Do you realize the terrible fate which is staring you in the face? Do you know what total Deafness means? It means a living death. Shut out from all human intercourse — the worlds of business and pleasure, life becomes a fearful blank.

Will you suffer this untold misery and loneliness when you may have your full sense of hearing, quick and acute? I have rescued thousands from Deafness. I can rescue YOU, if you come before it is too late.

Because I have been so successful in curing Deafness, and because my heart aches for its victims, I am going to GIVE AWAY a Free Treatment for Deafness to every sufferer who asks for it. Surely this is a present worth having. Out of my sincere desire to relieve human suffering, and out of the consciousness of my power to cure Deafness, I gladly make you this gift. My treatment has cured thousands of people of the most distressing, wearing head-noises and restored their full perfect hearing. Write for the treatment today, and give me the opportunity to show how YOU MAY BE CURED, RIGHT IN YOUR OWN HOME.

All I ask is that you will act NOW. Don't hesitate or it may be too late to help you. My success has been great, and applicants for treatment are many, so that I can only make this offer a very short time. Remember this treatment for Deafness is given to you without any charge whatever. It is absolutely free. other points are prospective candidates. The bill limits the location to a point within Los Angeles county.

The rolls show that more than half of the students are permanent residents of Los Angeles, and this will doubtless cut a large figure in the decision on location. To take the school to any outside place would be to increase the expense for at least one-half of the studentes, while it would lose to the school various advantages there are in being in touch with first-class attractions in the way of lecturers, musicians, extensive libraries, churches, etc.

No canvass for sites has been made by the trustees. They will consider the propositions made to them, however, and it is likely there will be many within the ensuing month. The bill passed by the Legislature provides that the trustees may rent quarters for the school after the sale and pending the erection of the new buildings. In case the property is sold, according to present plan, the trustees will probably rent the building for a year. They plan to be able to go into new quarters by September, 1908.

BREAKING OF GROUND.

Big Day for Catholics at Santa Monica, With Hosts of Visitors from Other Cities.

This morning fully 500 Knights of Columbus will make a pilgrimage to Santa Monica to participate in the various Catholic events at the seaside city. They will go by special train at 9:30 from Arcade station.

There will also be large delegations in attendance from Oxnard, Pasadena, San Bernardino, Long Beach, Anaheim and Pomona.

The main event is the breaking of ground for the $100,000 church edifice to be erected in Santa Monica, but the day's events will comprise fully ten distinct functions.

There will be a parade of Knights of Columbus Council and their friends from the depot of the Southern Pacific, to the Catholic Church, where mass will be celebrated. At Columbia Hall there will be an address of welcome by the pupils of the Academy of the Holy Names, which will be followed by luncheon at the Casino.

Bishop Conaty is to deliver a lecture after the ceremony of breaking ground for the church. He will speak on "American Ideals." A concert is to be given under the direction of Tom Karl, and following these the citizens will take their guests in carriages and autos for a view of the beauties of Santa Monica.

Tonight the Knights of Columbus will confer the third degree on a class of candidates, to be followed by a banquet at the Casino, and a supper will also be tendered the ladies at the Casino.

CHANGES IN THE CLERGY.

Bishop Conaty has announced several changes in the stationing of the clergy of the diocese of Monterey and Los Angeles. They include the establishment of one new parish, that of Coalinga, and the appointment of a rector for this work. Rev. Emil Girardi, who has been serving as assistant priest at St. Andrew's Church, Pasadena, goes to Coalinga. He was formerly assisant at St. Vibiana's Cathedral. Rev. William A. Hughest, who has been assistant to Father Malony at St. Agnes Church, goes to Pasadena to take the place made vacant by the removal of Father Girardi, and Rev. William Power, who was recently ordained to the priesthood, goes to St. Agnes Church as assistant. Rev. P. H. McGrath, who has been serving as assistant priest at St. Vibiana's Cathedral, goes to St. Patrick's parish as assistant, and Rev. D. Daly is appointed an assistant pro tem. at the cathedral.

LOOK OUT FOR PAUERS.

Charles Donlan, California State Deputy for the Knights of Columbus, warns all Catholics to be on the lookout for a man who is victimizing the people by fraudulent collection of funds through his claim that he is a Knight of Columbus in distress. The man presents a card bearing the inscription, "Harry C. Pauers, District Deputy, San Francisco Council, No. 310," and makes the plea that he lost his wife and baby in the San Francisco fire. He claims to have been a Southern Pacific engineer, but his claims are said to be false. It is said he has succeeded in collecting considerable sums of money from credulous communities, and Donlan hopes to apprehend him. The man is described as having a smooth face, bald head, with a small dent on top; wears spectacles with strong eyeglasses, and speaks with a German accent. He wears both Knights of Columbus and Elks charms.

STATE DIVISION PRACTICALLY IMPOSSIBLE AT PRESENT.

It will be impressed upon one who reads the carefully considered statement of ex-Senator Frank H. Short, published on another page of The Times today, that our over-hasty friends, who are advocating State division, apparently are beating the thin air; and that their plan is practically impossible of realization.

Putting aside all discussion as to the advisability of such a proceeding, the obstacles in the way appear to be so numerous and so difficult that the union of all religious creeds in one denomination seems a dream about as likely of fulfillment as that of erecting a separate State of Southern California under present conditions.

According to Mr. Short, who is a lawyer of recognized ability, experienced in legislation and statecraft and master of the subject through study and practical acquaintance, the following are the steps necessary to accomplish State division:

First—An amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which would require a two-thirds vote of both houses of Congress, or an appeal of the legislatures of two-thirds of all the States, and ratification by the legislatures or constitutional conventions of three-fourths of the several States.

Second—An amendment of the Constitution of the State of California, requiring a two-thirds majority of the Assembly and Senate followed by a majority vote of the people of the whole State at the polls.

In the first instance the probability of securing a two-thirds vote of Congress to submit the question of national constitutional revision to the country is exceedingly remote, considering the fact that there is no general demand for such an amendment.

While the Congress delegation from the southern end of the State might be influenced to appeal for such legislation, the northern Senator and representatives would be opposed, and with the California delegation divided against itself it is vain to delude ourselves with the idea that Congress would by a two-thirds vote agree to disturb the whole Union at the behest of a few divisionists in Southern California.

Then, as Mr. Short points out, the legislatures of other States (composed generally of politicians) would be slow to commit themselves to a policy of division. A constitutional amendment must needs be general in application and not drawn for California alone. To open a way for easily tearing States apart whenever friction between sections arises would not commend itself to the legislators of three-fourths of the States, or to constitutional conventions of three-fourths of the States. All over the country, especially in the older States, the prevailing mood of the people is in favor of stability of institutions. The faddists are in a small minority. The underlying common sense of the people has declared that progress must rest on permanent foundations, and that sectional discords must be discouraged. There are few parts of the country today where the idea of secession in one form or another is popular.

As to the unlikelihood of choosing a California Legislature which would give a two-thirds majority to a proposition for State division, any person informed as to the economic and political influences in operation in the State needs no enlightenment. The sentiment for State division is confined to a section, and even there it is not general. The great majority of the voters of the State are north of the line below which all talk of division is heard. The northern and central parts of the State are arrayed against division, and there is no prospect of converting them to the views of the divisionists.

Of course, the politicians of the major part of the State are opposed to State partition, and it must be conceded that they must be reckoned with. They dominate legislatures. It is a safe prediction that no man now advocating separation will live to see the day when two-thirds of the legislators of California will favor their policy, or when enough votes can be had in the central and northern valleys to carry out a dream of the south.

One would judge from reading the expressions of a few enthusiasts hereabouts that the wishes of Southern Californians alone were to be considered in settling the question of uprooting the institutions, dividing the strength, partitioning the common property, scattering the fame-fruits and weakening the resourcefulness of a great State—and requiring the Southern Pacific Railroad to maintain two political machines instead of one.

And these very zealous and easy-firing neighbors of ours seem to lose sight of the fact that in either house of the Legislature at Sacramento the Southern Pacific machine has no more willing cogs than those sent up from the South through the apathy, neglect and civic unfaithfulness of us, the people of the south, ourselves. If we, the people of the South had done our duty at the primaries and the State election, the feeling beneath this talk of State division would not have been engendered. The remedy for conditions we deplore lies not in State division, not in lazily farming out our civic duties to a private political party or to a committee of fifteen dominated by one, but in each man painstakingly doing his duty himself.

In considering the question of State division there are other questions to be taken into account, besides the practicability of the scheme. Would such a move be well for the people of any section of the State? Such a point is not to be passed upon hastily and decided offhand. Mr. Short gives expression to some views on this head well worth considering. That such a crusade is almost hopeless is the main factor, however.

The ex-Senator piquantly says we shall be gadding around the world in flying machines and sending wireless telegrams to the planet Mars ere the numerous obstacles to State division can be removed. This illustration may be extravagant, but it serves to emphasize the stupendousness of the task of bringing over to the side of Southern California impetuosity enough people to carry its point. The partitioning of the State may come in the process of the years, and Los Angeles may have the Capitol building—although Santa Barbara has put in a bid for it; but conditions must be vastly different from those of today when all this is achieved.

THE SONG OF THE GRAY-THROAT.

These be the days when the song of the gray-throated mocking bird is at its best—now in the glory of the Californian springtime. In the sunlit afternoons and in the white nights of moonlight and stars, the Prince of Singers revels in his powers, ravishing the air with a music that has no equal on earth.

Los Angeles is the metropolis of the mocking bird. This is the chief city of his tribe. It is here that their King has set up his throne. You have but to turn aside into some quiet street, away from the roar of traffic, and you will hear the mocker pouring out his strong, joyous heart to the God of Things, unafraid. And as you pass you will see a white-haired man or a wide-eyed child listening, dreamwrapt, to the song. You will see the busy seeker of the marts pause to drink into his soul the thrill of the mocker's matchless melody overhead, from which the man goes away at the end with a softer light in his eyes and a new-found peace in his heart.

Here in our city of wonders, what wonder have we like unto this—the song of the mocking bird among the haunts of men? Cities are the foes of birds; they drive them away with their noises and their cruelties. None but the sparrow, the chattering little Bohemian of the feathered kingdom, will tolerate a city. East and West it is the same. The bird and the man cannot make their peace with each other, they cannot dwell together. But, happily, this is not true of the Queen City of the World. With all our clatter and roar of rushing commerce, the birds have not deserted us. Ours is not only the City of Wonder; it is also the City of Song.

We might part with many a thing that we have and yet be none the poorer, but we cannot part with the gray-throat and his song. He is joy to our hearts. He makes a music that no other can make. He has many moods, the which one to love the best it were hard to tell. Sometimes—indeed, often—he is gay, for the mocking bird is "a fellow of infinite jest." He manages to get a lot of fun out of life. But in his graver moods, when he lifts his peerless voice in anthems to the blue skies that bend above him, then it is that all the world stops to listen, forgetting the hunger of greed, the lust of power and the lure of lights that fail.

STOP DREAMING AND DO.

A call has been made to put the streets of Los Angeles in proper order before the Shriners arrive for the Fiesta season in the early days of May. This call will be reiterated. It will come with increasing energy and emphasis.

Part of the population of Los Angeles, above all others, should take up this cause—should for a little while stop dreaming of things that are impracticable and impossible, and put their hands to the doing of something for the public good. The reference is to the public ownership faddists. These people who dream that public control of all sorts of semi-public utilities would result in better management should not permit the visiting Shriners from all over the world to contrast the fine working of the street railroads of Los Angeles and environments with the condition of the public streets, as they are at the present moment. The one management is wise, energetic and effective. The other is slovenly, inefficient and negligent.

Any thinking person who will take a jaunt through the streets and observe their conditions, and then ride around the city upon the street railroads under private ownership, would certainly not be loud in his advocacy of public ownership of utilities generally.

For the good of the cause, apparently so dear to the heart of the faddists who clamor for this taking over under public control of street railroads, lighting systems and similar enterprises, they should one and all work for cleaning up the streets in order that the inefficient management of public servants may not be so conspicuous.

THE ALDRICH CURRENCY BILL AND ITS EFFECTS.

The Aldrich bill, amending the act of 1900, governing the currency, was passed by Congress just before adjournment. This new act is in the direction of a policy demanded by the bankers and business men of the United States in order to make our currency a little more flexible than it was before.

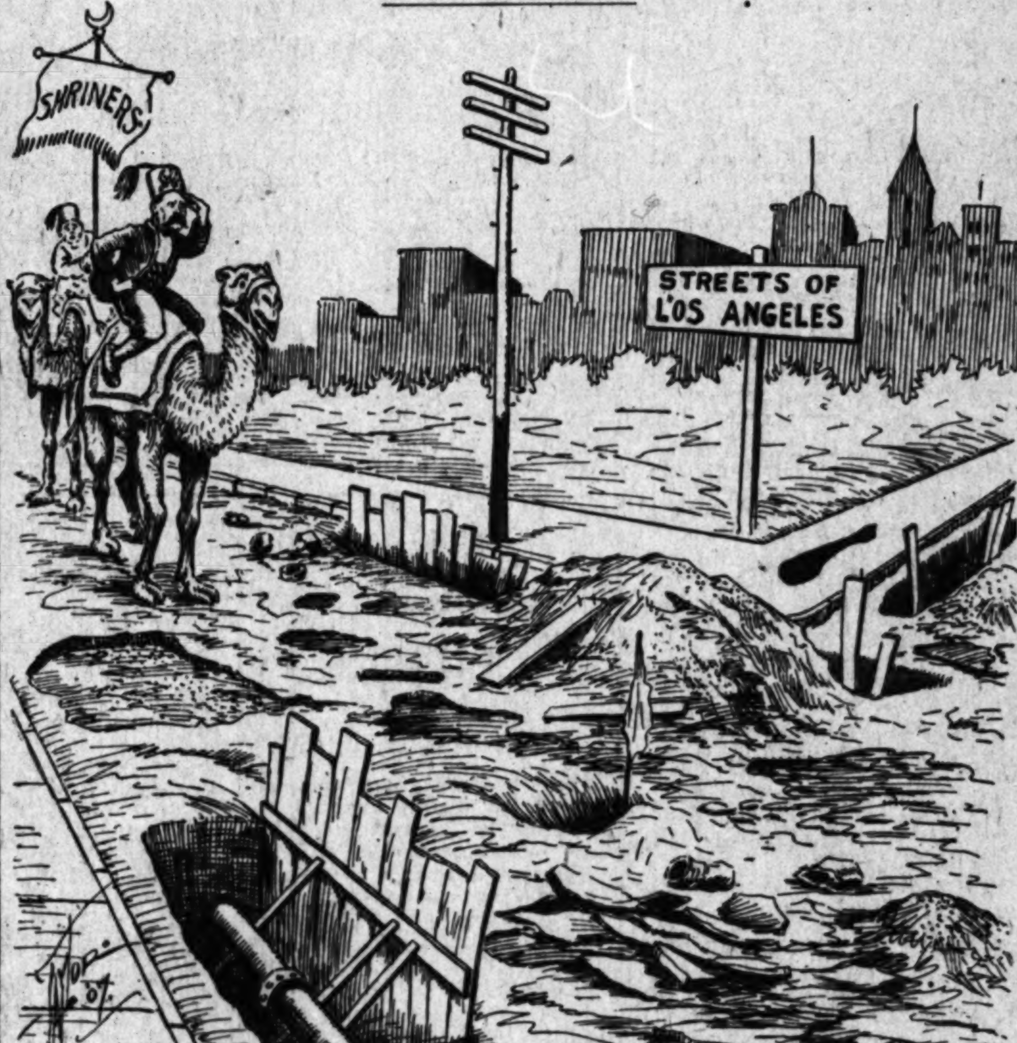
There is nearly $163,000,000 of currency, largely silver certificates of a denomination below $5, now outstanding. Hereafter these bills will be partly silver certificates and partly United States notes. Of currency notes of the denomination of $5 there are outstanding almost $400,000,000. These are either bank notes or silver certificates at present. Under the new act they will be composed of bank notes, silver certificates and United States notes ("greenbacks.") Of notes of the denomination of $10 there is a little more than $545,000,000 outstanding, comprising bank notes and United States notes. Hereafter there will be more bank notes, fewer United States notes and more gold certificates. Above the $10 denomination there is outstanding a little more than $969,000,000, composed of bank notes, United States notes and gold certificates. In the future these $10 bills will consist more largely of bank notes, of fewer United States notes and of a larger amount of gold certificates.

The total currency outstanding is $338,000,000 in United States notes of a denomination of $10 and over. These bills will become very largely of a denomination of $5 or less. That is, they will be merely subsidiary currency, supplementing the silver certificates now in use. The vacancy thus produced in notes of denominations above $5 will be filled by gold certificates and national bank notes. Of these, there are outstanding $652,600,000, in gold certificates and $494,200,000 in bank notes.

Additions to the bank notes provided under the new act will be $600,000,000, and the expansion of these notes will be possible, ranging from a probable 20 per cent. to a possible 40 per cent.; that is, from $120,000,000 to $240,000,000. This is the elastic feature in the Aldrich bill. Under the law as it was, national bank circulation could only be retired at the rate of $3,000,000 per month. The Aldrich act provides for the possible retirement of three times this amount, or $9,000,000 per month.

The idea is that this possible increase in bank notes will be availed of in cases of necessity when there is a stringency in the money market. This will, of course, call for the use of a larger amount of government bonds. When the stringency is past, these notes may be retired, there being no further demand for them, and this will again release the government's bonds bought to secure the increased issue.

THE CAMELS ARE COMING.



Shall we ask them to travel such rough roads as this?

THE ENGLISH WAY, NOT OURS.

Dr. M. H. Mallock has come over from London to teach us how to avoid in America the socialism which is ruining England. In Mandell Hall, at the University of Chicago, on Thursday last, he delivered a lecture upon this subject. In the course of his remarks he said this: "Capitalists should decide their own reward without attempt at intervention on the part of society. The capitalist and the capitalist alone is qualified to fix his return for his services in producing wealth. In proportion as men of ability are essential to the progress and to the maintenance of wealth in modern society, society as a whole, if it is to secure and retain their services, must concede to them the terms that these men desire, and what these terms shall be must be decided, not by society as a whole, but by the exceptional men themselves."

Now that is a thoroughly English view of the subject. Fundamentally and so far as individual is related to individual it is true, but it is just as true of the man of small abilities as of the man of great. This economic principle is as true of the relation of the blacksmith or the bricklayer of the most meager ability in society as it is of a Peter Cooper, an Abram Hewitt or a Carnegie. There is no principle of law and no obligation outside of the moral code to compel any man to render any service to society on any terms not agreeable to the individual. Indeed the individual may, outside of moral obligations, refuse to render society any service at all.

But in its restricted sense, when we come to great industries, and above all to corporate interests, this English view expresses exactly conditions existing in this country which the public, through individual efforts and through government intervention, is constantly trying to regulate. The relation of the individual to society cannot be placed upon the same footing as the relation of a corporate body to society. The corporation owes its existence to the public. It owes a certain debt to the public, growing out of this creation and just laws must hold these creatures of the public amenable to the public for the proper performance of their duties. These corporations are not created primarily for the sake of the corporations nor is it permissible that their career shall be followed for the benefit of the corporation to the detriment of the public interest. This rule cannot be laid down mathematically so as to apply to all corporations in the same way. Corporations like the railroads, and all corporations whose duties are those of common carriers, have a much closer and broader relationship to the community than other forms of corporate life.

Some are too prone to go abroad for ideals of government and for methods of controlling corporations and of weeding out corrupt growths from our political, civic and industrial life. There is perhaps no more general and no more radically erroneous notion entertained by a certain class of reformers than this. Mr. Mallock comes to us from a country where 25 per cent. of all the land is held by eleven individuals. He comes from a country whose government in one of its cognate branches is composed of members who hold their seats by heredity. There is no question about a man's honesty, capacity or fitness in any other respect to occupy the position of a legislator. He may be a blackleg. Some of them have been. He may be a debauchee who ought to be broken on the wheel. Many of them have been. He may be without enough capacity to cross the pons asinorum in geometry, much less to grasp the scope of any proposed law that comes before him for consideration. Many of the members of the House of Lords have been to this extent lacking in mental capacity. These lords have lent their names time and time again to the promotion of corporations whose dealings with the public have been more than questionable. It is not half so generally recognized in America as it should be that we are in the kindergarten class, mere tyros in fact, in the art of grafting as compared with what is done in the land from which Mr. Mallock comes to teach us political economy.

The closer honest American citizens stick to our own land, to our own ideals, to our own fundamental principles of government, the greater will be the results of our efforts at reformation, the purer will be our political and civic life and the more honestly will the corporations in their relations with the public and the public interest be conducted. To have ideal conditions prevail in America in all the relations of life, whether political, civic, social or industrial, calls for each of us to do his full duty in putting honest and faithful public servants at the head of all the various branches of the Federal, State and municipal governments. When we do this and get in office men of truly American business capacity, of truly American ideals, we will not need to go beyond seas to learn how to uproot the weeds of corruption from our civic life.

Another cheerful idiot is out with the statement that after a man has secured his first $1000 it is easy to become wealthy. There are at least 1,000,000 people in this country who feel a pain whenever this old chestnut is sprung on them.

PLANTIN' TREES.

There's a kindly sort o' feelin,' about this time o' spring,
That makes a man just want to help
some little growin' thing.
He'll hanker for the country, an' his clothes, an' a spade,
Till the longin' to be diggin' is the one to be obeyed.

If a man's got any gratitude because he's on the earth,
There surely ain't no better way o'
provin' what it's worth
Than just a-makin' beauty come up where he has stood,
To bless the world with sweetness in a garden or a wood.

An' there's nothin' any finer from a woman's point of view—
For a man without a collar looks so honest an' so true!
She likes to see him master the wildness o' the soil—
An' his shoulders look so handsome a-swingin' at their toil!

The whole big day o' springtime, the good smell o' the ground,
The sky that looks a bit like rain, the mountain standin' round,
The little herd a-trailin' down yonder for a drink—
Fill in a sort o' Arcady, she kind o' smiles to think;

While there he works a-plantin' the lusty little trees,
An' softenin' up the dirt to give 'em
lots o' room an' ease,
An' a-knowin' all the time that the trees are laughin' low
At the chance they've been a-waitin' for, to stretch an' live an' grow.

So it makes him more than happy, just to help the spring along,
While that woman's laughter mingles with the meadow-lark in song;
An' if she's always seemed to be the hardest sort to please,
She'll get an Eden feelin' for the feller
plantin' trees!

THAT PAPER TRAIN.

A Record-breaker—How a Newspaper Noted for its Hustling "Got There."

[From the Publishers Commercial Union, Chicago:] The Los Angeles Times is famous for the doing of big things, but that progressive publication has had a task on its hands the past week which called into play some strenuous work on the part of Harry Chandler, assistant general manager, and his Chicago representative, W. T. Cresmer, western representative for Williams & Lawrence.

Friday it became apparent to the Times people that their supply of white paper was getting dangerously low, and owing to washouts in the northern part of the State the Willamette Paper Company could not possibly get their regular shipments to the paper in time. Mr. Chandler realized that he must look to the East for a supply, and accordingly wired Mr. Creasmer to search every source of supply and rush a special trainload of white paper at any cost. This was no little task, especially when it was discovered that the paper used by the Chicago dailies was not the proper size for the Times presses. Inquiry at the paper supply houses developed the fact that all mills in Wisconsin and Minnesota were working overtime endeavoring to supply their regular contract customers and were far behind in orders. The situation was a perplexing one, but had to be met, consequently Messrs. Allen McEnery & Co., representatives of twenty of the largest Wisconsin mills, were appealed to for help. This was Saturday morning and by noon every mill in the State had been communicated with by phone and six of the largest had agreed to start in at 7 p.m. Saturday and run until 7 a.m. Monday, during which time they promised to turn out eleven carloads. This required the work of 1500 men working in three shifts at double regular pay for Sunday work.

Promptly at 7 Saturday evening the mills started on Times paper and ran to their greatest capacity until Monday morning, during which time 300 tons of white paper was manufactured and ready for shipment from the six different mills. The cars were hurriedly loaded and started for Omaha, where six more were added by the Carpenter Paper Company. A special train was at once made up under the personal direction of W. G. Neimyer, general agent of the Union Pacific Railroad, and started on its flight westward. A high rate of speed was maintained throughout the trip and only necessary stops were made. All along the line officials had been notified of the emergency train and a clear track was given the special. The train consisted of seventeen cars loaded to their maximum capacity and rolled into Los Angeles via the Salt Lake line in record-breaking time. The situation was relieved for the time, at least.

The Times is to be congratulated for its progressiveness, energy and push. Such are the essentials of a live newspaper nowadays.

PILLSBURY'S PARAGRAPHS.

Yet a few days and we, the all-befuddling California Legislature, shall see no more in all its course. It will pass into as inglorious a desuetude as swallowed any one of its thirty-six predecessors. There will, perhaps, be two or three things to its credit, but if there be more than three it will be because its last days will be full of terror-stricken hope of squaring itself with the people before death. A few reputations will go forth untarnished, but as to the majority of both houses, the one thing they can pray for with hopefulness is forgetfulness of a lost identity.

Among the good measures that have failed or surely will fail, are Assembly Bills 225 and 226 by Assemblyman Drew. The first mentioned provides for furnishing cars to shippers within six days at designated places on pain of a forfeiture of $25 per day per car. The applicant must deposit one-fourth of the freight charge at the time of making the application, and pay the railroad company $25 per day per car retained empty after the expiration of forty-eight hours. The bill is fair both ways, and if it could become a law, would force railroads to afford their customers all needed facilities. Under present conditions the railroads, being sure of shipments ultimately, discriminate injuriously in the furnishing of cars, or furnish all the cars wanted to one shipper and none to his competitor.

Assembly Bill 226 is designated to make all transportation charges reasonable and to prohibit common carriers transporting products of their own manufacture, other than timber and its products, except for its own use. The act is intended to prevent common carriers going into competition with private enterprises in dealing in commodities in the open market, such abuses with regard to oil dealings having become notorious in the cases of the coal roads of Pennsylvania and other States. The bill also requires that switches be maintained where the volume of traffic will justify the expenditure for the convenience of shippers, and forbids discriminations. In short, these two bills cover, within the State, about what the interstate commerce laws cover in interstate traffic. By their votes on these measures the people at home will know where to place their legislators as to whom they represent—the railroads or the people. These are the test issues.

Eshleman's anti-race track bill, which passed the Assembly, will be allowed to slumber on to its death in the Senate "Immorals" committee, a committee devised to perform this especial function. While this is also a test measure, it is a test of the moralities of the Senators, rather than an indication of subserviency, although this measure may have performed a useful function in securing "organization" support for other measures in return for killing this one. The continuation of the Emeryville infamy will mean that more horse-mad men and women will squander more of other people's money and spend more years in prison, or escape that destiny by the suicide route.

There will be an increase of about $1,000,000 in the General Appropriation Bill. Part of this is legitimate and needful. The better pay voted to the Supreme and Appellate Court Justices will eat up more than $100,000 of it, and there has been a general increase of expenditure in all the State institutions in order to meet growing needs. A general increase of salaries has also been made. The State should pay well for services rendered, and yet, with salaries as they stood, men counted themselves fortunate in getting into these offices. An increase of 12½ per cent. in the salaries of attendants in State institutions has been made. This war not needed. California already pays double the salaries allowed in Eastern States, and consequently, has had the services of only about one-half as many attendants. The need was for more attendants and not for more pay for the attendants already in service. There was need for an increase in wages for a few skilled mechanics employed by institutions, but not for a horizontal increase of all employés.

WEST COAST MAGAZINE.

The March issue of The West Coast Magazine presents a handsome appearance and an attractive table of contents. The field which this bright little publication essays to cover is a big one, and is indicated in its name and also in the motto it has adopted, "From Behring to the Isthmus, from the Rockies to the Sea." The cover design carries out the idea effectively.

The magazine is pleasingly illustrated with half-tones, and contains many articles of interest, as well as meritorious fiction. A reminiscence of wild days in Inyo and adjacent counties is contributed by Allen Kelly, in an article entitled "In the Days of Vasquez." The career of the famous outlaw of thirty years ago, and of the followers who escaped from the avengers and survived him, is reviewed in a style of pleasing continuity and expert brevity.

An article headed with a query answers very distinctly in the negative, giving many forceful reasons for saying no to the question it propounds: "Will Bryan be Our Next President?" The article is by George W. Burton.

A generous installment of a serial, Kane of Liscara, by the editor, John S. McGroarty, is given.

Editorially the magazine presents ideas worthy of careful consideration under the caption, "Hopes of Peace and Threats of War." The desirability of avoiding war at almost any cost is insisted on. On the other hand, the necessity of prosecuting the war that may come with a vigor and thoroughness that can mean nothing less than the destruction of our antagonist as a power is given even greater weight. That possible war is the war with Japan.

THE GREAT CRESCENT ROTARY ENGINE AFTER MORE EUROPEAN CONTRACTS.

Negotiations Now Under Way for the Sale of the Great Britain Rights of Manufacture. This Sale, With the Recent German Sale Will Make Stock of Company Almost Prohibitive Price.—Shares Now Selling at $1.50, Which Is a Very Low Price.

We learn through James Austin Larson of 212 Mercantile Place that negotiations have been opened for the sale of the manufacturing rights and patented privileges of the Cersecent Rotary Steam Engine in Great Britain. The influence of the recent sale of the German rights to the great manufacturing firm of Scheck Bros. of Cassel, Germany, has had an immediate effect in bringing to the fore several Englishmen who are anxious to be the fortunate English owners of this great invention.

The international importance of this marvelous engine is certainly recognized. If this second great sale is consummated on the same basis as the other sale above referred to, the fellow who is fortunate enough to own stock in this company will have a security which, in point of profit, will be far better than any gold mine. It is estimated that the German royalties alone, at $1.50 per horsepower, will make these shares worth $3 for every one, and certainly the English market is quite as large, if not larger, than the German.

The stimulus these sales will be to the introduction of this wonderfully compact and powerful engine with the American steam user can scarcely be measured. It is surely a world-wide testimonial of merit, and is further verifying the claims of every machinist and steam engine man who has investigated the workings of the machine. It certainly is a wonder-worker; so small and compact; so cheap to make; so extremely simple—only three working parts in its construction. We are quite persuaded that it will work a speedy revolution in steam engine practice and use. About one month ago, when Mr. Larson first exhibited the little model at 212 Mercantile Place, and announced through the city papers what sort of a marvelous engine he had to present to the steam men of Southern California, there was an instant response to his invittaion to see and know more about this great invention. Since then every day has witnessed hundreds of people taking his counsel to become identified with the company. Reports from the factory at Spokane have been immensely encouraging, as the present plant is not able to care for all of the orders that have poured in for engines, and on every side of the proposition prosperity seems to smile until the shares that were alloted for this market were practically closed at the original dollar price. The price was temporarily placed at $1.50, where it will be held until a week from next Wednesday, when they will then be listed at more nearly their true value, which is about $5.00. "We see no reason," says Mr. Larson, "why they should not be placed at this higher figure, but to accommodate any who may have been holding off this $1.50 has been placed for this limited time."

Mr. Larson says he thinks 212 Mercantile Place has been the most popular place in Los Angeles for the past thirty days. If you have not been there go down at once and investigate this wonderful investment opportunity. This stock will soon, in fact is now, in the class with such shares as Bell Telephone, Western Union and other notable industrial securities of the American market. Remember, only about ten days are left to "freeze onto" a block of this stock at $1.50 per share.

PUBLIC SERVICE.

SUMMARY OF THE DAY.

A reduction of one cent per kilowatt hour was agreed upon yesterday at a conference between the Mayor, the Council and the representatives of the lighting companies. The new rate will be 9 cents per kilowatt.

Three dairymen, keepers of filthy corrals, were ordered by the health commissioners yesterday to appear before the board and show cause why their milk permits shall not be revoked.

James Howard takes his son, Melvin, who was arraigned in the Juvenile Court, Friday, by the Pasadena deputy marshall, from the Detention Home where he had been placed.

The demoralization of a Courthouse clock creates a diversion in Department One, of the Superior Court.

Siraff Arratta, for stealing at Santa Monica, was sentenced to two years at Folsom by Judge Smith yesterday.

AT THE CITY HALL.

ONE CENT OFF LIGHTING RATE.

ELECTRIC COMPANIES AGREE TO REDUCED SCHEDULE.

Mayor Harper Scores in First Inning Against Power Corporations. Veto Message Asserts That Some Consumers Pay Less Than Three Cents Per Kilowatt.

Electricity for light and power will be delivered to urban consumers during the next fiscal year for 9 cents per kilowatt hour; this is a reduction of 1 cent per hour from the present rate.

The reduction was announced yesterday noon at the termination of a conference in which the Mayor, the Council and the representatives of the local power companies took a part. Opposition to the reduced rate was maintained by the Edison officials. They asserted that such a reduction would not allow them to lay aside a sufficient amount of money for interest and sinking fund.

The Los Angeles Gas and Electric Company and the Pacific Light and Power Company agreed to the reduction Thursday. The Edison officials agreed just before noon to operate for one year under the reduced rate.

Mayor Harper's stand against the 10-cent rate adopted by the Council won the 1-cent reduction. Ten days ago the higher rate passed the Council without a dissenting vote.

Yesterday afternoon the Mayor filed with the City Clerk the following message vetoing the 10-cent ordinance passed by the Council:

> I return herewith an ordinance passed by you fixing the rate to be charged for electricity. The ordinance does not bear my signature because it does not have my approval.
> I believe the rate charged per kilowatt in Los Angeles too high and deem it of the utmost importance that the council make an investigation with view of changing the maximum rate so the small consumer may get the benefit. As the schedule stands at the present time the rich man who uses a large amount of electricity gets the benefit of a low rate, while the poor man using only a small quantity to light his home is charged the maximum rate of ten cents per kilowatt. I am informed that large consumers have purchased electricity as low as 2½ cents per kilowatt.
> I had hoped that such an investigation could be made at this time and that the maximum rate could be fixed not higher than 8 cents. Taking everything into consideration, the earnings of the companies, expenditures and the announcement that millions of dollars are to be expended in development of plants I agreed, after assurance from members of the City Council that the rate charged the coming year would be changed to 9 cents, to postpone the inquiry until the time comes for fixing the rates for 1906.
> With the understanding that the rate will be fixed at 9 cents I return the ordinance.

The Council is not satisfied with the manner in which the Mayor carried out his part of the agreement. At the executive session they understood that they were to be permitted to call back the 10-cent ordinance from the Mayor and replace it with the one making the rate 9 cents. But some of the Mayor's campaign managers heard of this arrangement and hastened to counsel the Mayor not to lose the chance to make a hit with the "common peepul" by vetoing the electric light and power ordinance.

A veto message would read much better in the records than a simple mention that the Council requested the Mayor to return the ordinance without his signature.

Fifteen minutes after the conference adjourned the Mayor's veto message was in the Clerk's office.

Rates for the Sunset Telephone have not yet been fixed. It is probable, however, that the price for the Sunset will be reduced to $6 a month. There will be opposition to this rate from the wards east of Ninth street, with the possible exception of the Sixth bailiwick. The east-end councilmen will make a stand for a $7 rate.

Mayor Harper would veto a $7 ordinance; he might veto one fixing the rate at $6. The Mayor has expressed himself in favor of a $5 rate for both phones.

DAIRY INSPECTIONS.

FILTH AND WHITEWASH.

Three commissioners of the Board of Health made an unexpected call yesterday afternoon on a number of dairy farmers south and west of the city. This visit has been billed for Sunday afternoon. The commissioners found the dairymen in the act of putting their corrals in shape to receive the Sabbath day visitors.

Conditions were much better than that of the dairies visited by the commissioners last Sunday. Fresh paint and whitewash were everywhere, showing that the dairymen were profiting by the experience of their brethren in the Clearwater district.

Conditions at three dairies were not nearly as sanitary as the requirements of the health ordinance.

The proprietors of these were warned to appear before the Health Board and show why their milk permits shall not be revoked. Four others were warned to clean up under penalty of losing their permits.

CLOCK IN CONTEMPT.

ITS MOTION OVERRULED.

The clock which decorates the wall in department One of the Superior Court was adjudged in contempt yesterday morning, and fined 11 minutes.

As Judge Smith was entering the courtroom his eye fell upon the offending timepiece, and a pained and shocked expression overspread his face.

"Mr. Bailiff," he said, breaking in on that functionary's little morning recitation to the formula, "Department One of the Superior Court now in session," "will you please look at that clock and tell me what time it says?"

"Fourteen minutes after ten, Your Honor."

The judge's face grew more stern.

Attorney Earl Rogers, consulting his watch, volunteered the statement that the right time was 10:07. Attorney Adcock reported 10:08 as the time. Judge Smith frowned upon them and issued his decree:

"It is three minutes after ten, gentlemen."

No one took exception to His Honor's ruling, and the business of the day began.

The clock ticked on in disgrace. There is a suspicion that it has been demoralized by some recent testimony.

AT THE COURTHOUSE.

BOY WANDERER TAKEN HOME.

YOUNG HOWARD A SPOILED CHILD, SAYS FATHER.

Pet of Grading Camp Prefers Sleeping With Dog to Comfortable Bed. Attempts to Control Him Give Offense—Declarations of Independence Frequent.

Melvin Howard, the 7-year-old Pasadena youngster, who was found wandering and hungry last Friday and was arraigned in the Juvenile Court, has been taken back to the home to which he stoutly declared he would not return. Yesterday morning his father, James Howard, appeared and took the boy from the Detention Home, where he had been placed pending developments.

The elder Howard explained that it is nothing new for the younger Howard to wander off. He spends much time in the grading camp where his father, a teamster, is employed, and is the spoiled pet of all the men. Frequently, his father says, he has eaten dinner at home and then hurried to the camp to be further fed with pie and other things of which small boys are fond.

The precocious youngster's declaration of independence has taken startling forms on occasions. One night, the boy having disappeared, his father found him, after a long search, rolled up in some blankets at the camp with a grayhound. His father states that he awakened him with a strap, though not in the habit of punishing him. On this incident, it appears, together with general efforts to exercise control over his actions, is based the child's disapproval of his parents.

WORTHLESS FELLOW.

DECLARES THE COURT.

Siraf Arratta, convicted by a jury of petit larceny for the theft of a rusty file and an old wrench at Santa Monica on September 25, appeared before Judge Smith yesterday morning for sentence. The attorney who defended him spoke of the jury's recommendation of leniency, and added a few words by way of argument.

"Has not this young man been in trouble before?" queried the judge.

"Yes, Your Honor, he was arrested for vagrancy."

"Wasn't he arrested another time?"

"I believe he was, but I don't know what that was for."

Judge Smith, however, had some information on that point.

"This matter of an old wrench is not worth considering, at least not in the Superior Court," he began; "but this burglary. Hum. I dare say Santa Monica is as willing as any other place to endure the burden of its undesirable residents, but I am afraid you have tired the people out. You're an all around worthless fellow, Siraf Arratta, aren't you?" The culprit did not seem to know.

"You were one year in Folsom, weren't you? Well, it is the judgment of the court that you be confined in the state prison at Folsom for the term of two years."

STROUD ARRAIGNED.

ON CHARGE OF MURDER.

Thomas J. Stroud, who shot and killed Joseph Shine on February 17, was arraigned yesterday on the charge of murder. Earl Rogers, who is retained by the order to which Stroud belongs, appeared for the defendant and asked that he be admitted to bail. The question went over until Monday.

In support of his motion, Attorney Rogers told the story of the killing, as he had gathered it from the transcript of the preliminary examination. From this it appears that Stroud, foreman of the Salt Lake Railway boiler works, had been at dinner with Shine, and had started him on his way home afterward. When the men had parted, some boys cried "scab" after Shine, who returned, uttering epithets and threats, thinking it was Stroud who had called him a scab. He struck Stroud in the face, and then called to another man to come and help him. As the other approached, Stroud drew his revolver and shot Shine through the body.

As a special reason for admitting the prisoner to bail, Rogers stated that Stroud's wife of a year would suffer great anxiety if he remained in jail, at a time when she should be guarded against all mental disturbance.

COURTHOUSE NOTES.

BREVITIES MISCELLANEOUS.

Wiley J. Phillips visited the District Attorney's office yesterday to ask whether there is any law under which he, as a person actively interested in civic affairs, could secure an injunction to prevent the proposed reopening of the crib district. Deputy Dist.-Atty. Frank Blair undertook to examine the statutes with possible bearing on the situation. The outcome was a statement that Mr. Phillips could not secure a restraining order to prevent the commission of an intended breach of law unless he could show that he would suffer personal injury from the threatened act.

M'KINLEY TRIAL. William J. McKinley, accused of shooting his uncle, William Reid, on December 16, pleaded not guilty to the charge of assault with intent to commit murder, and his trial was set for April 17.

JAIL FOR KNIFE WIELDER. Miguel Hernandez, accused of attacking his common law wife with a knife and inflicting three wounds, and indicted for assault with a deadly weapon, was permitted to plead guilty to simple assault yesterday in the Superior Court. He was sentenced to ninety days in the County Jail. In explanation of his offense, Hernandez complained that the woman had locked him out of his own home in spite of his demands for admittance, and that he had to break down the door to get in. "I only hit her two or three times with the knife," he added.

TO CHUCK UP CHUCK HOLES.

Streets Will Be Repaired in Next Eight Weeks.

Machinery of Department Is Set in Motion.

Good Thoroughfares for La Fiesta Promised.

The machinery of the street department will be devoted for the next eight weeks to repairing paved streets and eliminating chuck holes on the main thoroughfares of the city.

Streets in the business section at least must be reasonably safe for travel during the spring Fiesta. Chairman Anderson of the Board of Public Works said yesterday that the street department will spend at least $5000 during the next eight weeks in patching and resurfacing the main business thoroughfares.

"We have already resurfaced First street from Spring to Broadway, Main street from Temple to Alameda and a portion of Spring street from First to Temple," said Mr. Anderson. "We have given orders for the repair of about two miles of other paved thoroughfares.

"All excavations in the main streets caused by city work under direction of the city will be closed before Fiesta. We have notified pipe and conduit companies that we shall not grant permits for any new work that is to be undertaken before May 1, unless we have a guarantee that the excavations will be closed at least ten days before Fiesta.

"The condition of the streets in the business district is bad, but it is a great deal better than it was a year ago, and a month from now it will be better still.

"When the last budget appropriation was made there was no allowance for repairing paved streets. This work is expensive. It entails a heavy drain on the funds of the street department.

"When a street is first paved the expense is borne by the abutting property; after it is accepted by the city the cost of repairs comes from the tax fund.

"We are now spending on the streets in the business section money that he had expected to use in employing laborers to care for residence streets. The cost of keeping the streets of a large city in repair is enormous. Our transition from a village to a metropolis was so rapid that the streets did not keep pace with the business of the city; now we are compelled both to remedy the defects of the past and to build for the future.

"But we are going to have good streets for the Fiesta, thoroughfares of which our citizens need not be ashamed. All our work is so ordered that the streets will be at their best on May 1.

Members of the Council have promised their support to the Board of Public works in its efforts to ameliorate the present condition of the city's main thoroughfares. City Auditor Mushet has warned all departments that strict economy must be practiced to escape a deficit at the end of the present fiscal year; but this economy is not to be construed into stinting the Board of Public Works in its efforts to repair streets in the business section.

City officials say that the time has not yet come when it is necessary for citizens of Los Angeles to turn out en masse and perform manual labor cleaning the streets.

"SECURITY MAP"

A New City and Suburban Map, Free for the Asking

The Security Savings Bank will soon issue a new map of Los Angeles City showing recent annexations, subway, and all car lines, with street and car lines index. This map has been drawn especially for this Bank by Felix Viole, and is the newest and most complete yet issued. It is 22x28 inches, printed in two colors on map bond paper, and enclosed in a substantial pocket folder.

On reverse side of the city map is a complete map of the country surrounding Los Angeles showing the electric and steam car lines to the beaches, Pasadena, Whittier, Pomona, Santa Ana et al.

It is not a rehashed drawing of out-of-date maps, nor a doctored copy of another's copyrighted one. It is new, especially arranged, and the right to its use has been bought and paid for at a high price. It will contain no advertisements except of Security Savings Bank.

When the map is ready for distribution, announcement will appear in the daily papers.

The Wonderful Engine That Is Revolutionizing Steam Power

World Wide Fame

World Wide Sale

Have You Seen It?

Investigate

Stock at $1.50 Per Share for 10 Days O

It is purely a question of a very few weeks or months until the stock of the Crescent Rotary Steam pany will be at a prohibitive price, compared to the paltry dollar and a half ($1.50) that will buy it placing the price of a dollar fifty on this stock I had the interests of a great number of people, who had been inquirers and prospective purchasers of the stock at $1.00 per share and who had held late. The consummation of the sale on the German rights of manufacture to Messrs. Scheck Bros. many, immediately put a value of at least $3.00 per share on this stock. The large consideration manufacturing privilege, and the further constant revenue through the royalties of $1.50 per horsepow a profit to every share-owner of stock in the Crescent Rotary Steam Engine Company that will make ment one of the most profitable of the Industrial securities on the American market. It is the of everybody on the inside of this proposition that soon they will take off of the market every share, will be such that they would be foolish to part with it.

The factory at Spokane is six months behind on its orders now on this engine. The world-wide by this great sale to these German manufacturers and the marvelous performance of the engine has mand that is simply overwhelming the company and its plant. Certainly there has never been a piece placed upon the market which has created such a widespread interest. This wonderful engine has endowed steam power in its rightful place in the engine world. Considered with turbine, reciprocating of engine power there is absolutely no comparison. In cheapness of manufacture, profit to its maker, buyer and excessively low cost in steam, up-keep and space, it has no rival in the world—every element for saleableness is in this engine. Engine men the world over recognize the value of a successful of steam engine, and not in a single instance has the Crescent Rotary Steam Engine failed to prove its fulness and power.

About the price on these shares—Now the price is only $1.50. One week from next Wednesday, be ample time for every present prospective purchaser to buy every dollar's worth he or she can afford will be advanced, and to just what price I cannot say at this time. It will not be less than $2.00 a than likely the price will go to $3.00. That it is worth $10 in earning power is positively true. To of the stock at $1.00, again I would urge the wisdom of holding your stock for the larger advance ticipation in the enormous profits sure to accrue as soon as these royalties become effective, and if you money to invest in a positively world-wide industry, buy more shares while the price is only $1.50. friends that you would like to have share in your good fortune, urge them now to buy these shares while is still a Dollar and Fifty Cents.

I shall be glad to show the 10-horsepower model now at my office; give every inquirer every verifying any and all statements made about the engine, the earning capacity of the stock and such other as they may wish. If you want in on the lowest price this stock may ever be sold for again, buy now at lar and a Half price.

THE RUNAWAY RIVER.

How the Colorado Left Its Channel, Formed the Salton Sea, and Was Forced to Return to Its Bed—An Empire of Agriculture Saved by the Southern Pacific to the United States and Mexico.

BY ALLEN KELLY.

BY CLOSING the break through which the Colorado River had been flowing, for nearly two years, westward and northward into the Salton Sea, the Southern Pacific Railroad has saved from immediate devastation and ruin a vast area of the most fertile land in North America, estimated by the United States Reclamation Service and by President Roosevelt in his message to Congress to be capable of supporting an agricultural population of half a million and to be worth, when under cultivation, probably $700,000,000.

To insure the permanent protection of farming lands worth more than twice as much as the property destroyed by the San Francisco earthquake and fire, the President advised Congress to make an appropriation of $2,000,000, virtually as a loan to the settlers to be returned to the government from the increase in land values. A bill embodying the President's suggestion was introduced, but has been so amended as to reduce the appropriation to $1,000,000.

When the President's message was sent to Congress, January 12, 1907, the Colorado River was pouring the entire volume of its flood through the break in its west bank, and was threatening not only devastation of Imperial Valley, but destruction of the town of Yuma, the great railroad bridge and the government irrigation works at Laguna dam. The government itself had millions at stake, and the entire Yuma project of the Reclamation Service was menaced with obliteration. Immediate closure of the break was necessary to save a vast amount of public and private property, for reasons which will appear, and permanent control of the river was seen to be a condition precedent to the development of a territory nearly three times as large as the entire producing area of Southern California and conservatively estimated to be capable of producing $70,000,000 a year.

While Congress was hesitating to make any provision for control of the Colorado, the destruction was going on and the menace of irreparable ruin was growing more imminent every day. Even had Congress acted promptly and with wise liberality, the government could not have met the emergency. The President saw that clearly and declared in his message that there was only one agency equal to the task of controlling the river. At his request, the Southern Pacific continued the work at its own expense, and closed the break on February 10, 1907. Whether or not the Colorado will remain in its old channel during the coming season of spring flood is a question that no engineer will venture to answer at this time. Permanent control is a problem still unsolved.

The Colorado is not like other rivers, although it has some characteristics in common with the Missouri and the lower Mississippi. It has been said that "God made all other rivers, but the Missouri and the Colorado made themselves and flow where they please." From the headwaters to a few miles above its junction with the Gila, the Colorado is confined to a fixed course, flowing through rock cañons and gorges which it has cut for itself and from which it cannot depart. Below that point, low hills keep the river from breaking away to the west for a few miles, but from the Mexican boundary southward to the Gulf of California, the Colorado's channel is a shallow groove along the summit of a slightly elevated plane, which the river has built by depositing silt.

The Colorado carries a great deal of sand and earth in suspension, and when its normal velocity is retarded, it deposits the suspended matter rapidly. The normal fall of the river is thirteen inches to the mile, and the rate of flow at that grade is sufficient to hold most of the silt in suspension, and not rapid enough to cause much cutting or scouring. Where the river enters the Gulf, its flow is checked, and it drops its burden of sand. Since the river has been known to white men, it has extended its terminal sand bar, or ridge, six miles into the Gulf and so lengthened itself and disturbed the normal relation of length to grade.

The tendency of the river is to maintain a certain rate of flow. In order to reëstablish the normal grade, the channel has been raising itself by silting back from the mouth, and the mud banks on the top of the river ridge have become relatively lower. Therefore the danger of overflow of the banks in flood seasons is increased.

In 1891 the Colorado rise was unusually high, the river overflowed the west bank and a portion of the flood found its way to the Salton Sink through the channel of New River, creating the first "Salton Sea" of modern times. There were no settlements in Imperial Valley then, and Salton Sea was interesting only as a freak of the erratic river. There was no great depth of water in the sink, and the salt works were not damaged.

The river silted up the break and returned to its old channel without artificial aid, and Salton Sea soon evaporated and was forgotten. The plain warning also was forgotten or ignored by the engineers who cut through the river bank in 1904 to let water into the Imperial Canal, taking the chance that the inevitable spring flood of 1905 would not be high enough to overflow the banks. They gambled on a desperate chance and lost.

It is probable that the flood of 1905 would have repeated the performance of 1891 had the cut not been made, but the cut, unprotected by proper gates, was an invitation to disaster, and the flood deepened and widened the break until the entire flow of the river poured through and raced down the relatively steep slope into Imperial Valley and thence to Salton Sea.

The bed of the Colorado at the break is about 100 feet above the sea level; the Imperial Valley is 100 feet or more below the sea level, and the bed of Salton Sea is 278 feet below the sea. From the break to the lowest part of the Salton basin the distance is about 120 miles and the fall is 378 feet, or more than three feet to the mile. At the time of the highest flood, more than 40,000 cubic feet of water per second passed Yuma, and when that great volume took the steeper grade leading down to Imperial Valley, its velocity was tremendous and it began cutting a deep gorge back from Salton Sea through the alluvial lands of the valley.

The channel of the new river cut to 1500 feet in width and 60 feet in depth, and at times the falls receded up stream at the rate of half a mile a day. Farms and towns crumbled into the gorge and were swept away in the turbid flood, and the roar of destruction could be heard miles away. The Salton basin filled up rapidly, submerging the Southern Pacific's track and the salt works and creating a great lake in the most arid desert on the continent. Three times the railroad was moved to higher ground, and still the lake rose and washed away the grades.

In the fall of 1906, when grass was growing in the abandoned bed of the river, Salton Sea was a body of water covering an area of more than 400 square miles and more than seventy feet deep in the middle, and it was steadily increasing in size. If the inflow of the river should continue, the basin would be filled up to the old beach line, thirty feet above sea level, and Salton Sea would be 120 miles long, thirty-five to forty miles in extreme width and more than 300 feet maximum depth. The whole Imperial Valley would be submerged.

The immediate danger was the cutting back of the gorge in flood seasons to the old channel, and the continuation of the process up the channel to the Laguna dam, which is built upon sand and would fall into the gorge, wrecking the government's irrigation project. The up-stream end of the eroded gorge is now only fifty miles from the break in the river bank.

The Southern Pacific undertook the task of catching the runaway river and returning it to its old bed, and devoted its resources without stint to solving the problem. The river was discharging, at flood stage, about 40,000 second feet, or 2,000,000 miner's inches of water through the break, and the task of the railroad engineers was to throw across that torrent a barrier strong enough to hold it and force the river back into the old and higher channel.

A mat foundation was laid upon the sand. Forty miles of steel cable, 10,000 cable clips and 2200 cords of brush were used in weaving the mat, which was 100 feet wide and 800 feet long. Rock and earth were dumped upon the mat from bridge trestles, forming a dam 170 feet wide at the base, 30 feet on the crown and 55 feet in height at the deepest places in the break. In length, 600 feet of the dam was of rock construction and 2400 feet of earth and gravel. Earth levees extended the barrier southward.

There were times, during the building of the Hind dam, when failure was imminent, and the yellow monster seemed to laugh at the puny efforts of man to stop its onrush.

A slip of rock lowered the crest of the half-completed barrier at one point, and the water rushing into the angle threatened to sweep away the work of weeks. The heaviest mass of rock at hand, a piece of granite weighing, perhaps, a dozen tons, was rushed out to the danger point and rolled from a flat car into the angle to serve as an anchor to hold carloads of smaller rock. The big rock rolled and slipped downward, forced by the tremendous impact of the torrent, and it was doubtful that it would lodge in a position to be effective.

Col. Randolph saw the possibility of disaster, and ordered a mogul engine to be moved upon the trestle to a point opposite the dangerous angle. He placed jack screws under one side of the engine and ordered men to stand by with levers and blocks. When the men realized that he was preparing to dump one of the Southern Pacific's biggest locomotives into the breach, they thought his mind had given way under the strain and that he was stark mad.

There was no madness in the move. It was pure nerve, and if the men had ever seen Epes Randolph in a poker game they would have recognized the trait. If the rock would not hold, a hundred-ton engine would stay put and serve as an anchor. Randolph watched the rock, ready to give the order to heave over the engine, but at last the rock settled firmly and the mogul was spared.

The break was closed on November 4, 1906, but in December the river rose suddenly and found weak places in the levee, and the flood got in behind the dam and started again toward Salton Sea, through a break 1100 feet wide. Another dam was built without a mat by dumping huge rocks from trestles directly upon the sand bottom.

On February 10, 1907, the second break was closed, and a feat without precedent in engineering was achieved. It was unique in that the methods adopted were so unconventional that engineers of high standing condemned them in advance and predicted absolute failure of the attempt to turn the flood back into the old river channel.

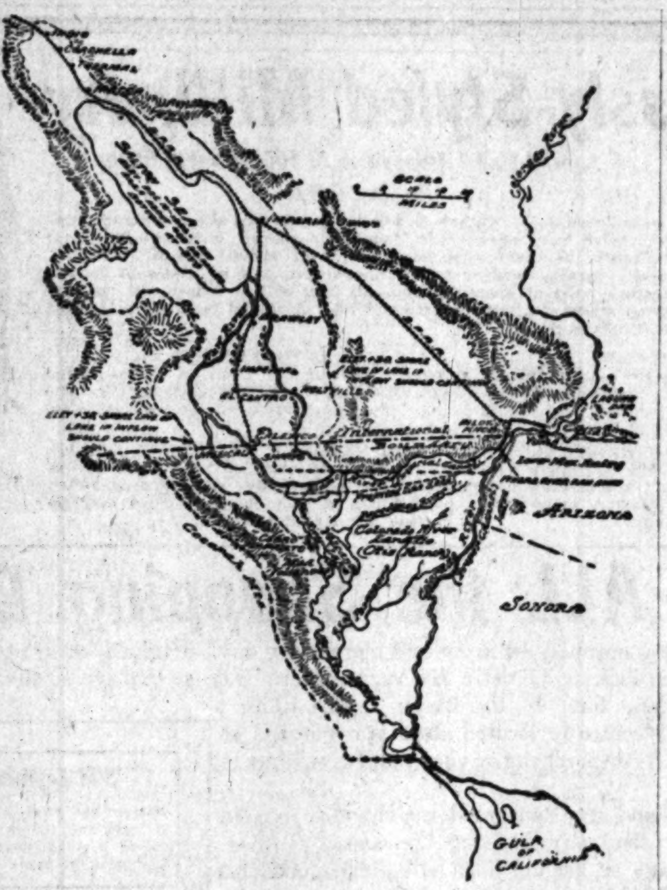
The feat was achieved by railroad men of the western type; men in the habit of doing things with any material available.

It has cost about $500,000 to close the break and build the levees, and as security for that sum and $1,500,000 loaned to the California Development Company, the Southern Pacific holds in trust a majority of the company's stock and is represented on its board of directors.

The California Development Company, which owns the canals of Imperial Valley, is preparing to expend $1,750,000 in reconstruction and extension of the irrigation works. President Roosevelt urges that the Imperial Valley Irrigation project be taken over by the Reclamation Service and virtually attached to the Yuma project, and that the cost of protection works on the Colorado be charged against the lands of Imperial Valley.

The settlers owning land and water rights in the valley are not averse to having the irrigation system placed under control of the Reclamation Service, provided their equities are preserved and they are not compelled to bear the burden of the excessive cost of the Yuma project. The Yuma project, of which Laguna dam is a part, has cost so much more than was estimated that the charge for water rights on land under the canals must be virtually prohibitive, and in order to save the project the Reclamation Service desires to distribute the cost over the Imperial Valley. The California Development Company has declared its readiness to turn over its enterprise and assets to the government, provided the government will assume its liabilities.

Owners of land in the valley argue that the government should not charge against them the cost of controlling the Colorado River below the Mexican line, but might properly expend money for levees as public works on the Colorado, as on other rivers declared to be navigable. It seems to them that there is at least as good reason for including the Colorado River in the Rivers and Harbors Bill as for spending public money on New Jersey creeks in which trout choke to death on the dust stirred up by their tails in summer. They assert, with plausibility, that if the Colorado were east of the Rockies, there would be no thought of compelling owners of land a hundred miles from the river to pay for building and maintaining levees to keep it in its channel.



The fertile empire about the lower Colorado River and Salton Basin.

Reclamation of the Imperial Valley is the largest irrigation project that has been undertaken in this country. Already more than 100,000 acres are supplied with water and under cultivation, and the productiveness of the soil has amazed the most sanguine proponents of the project. Enormous crops of alfalfa and other forage plants are produced with the minimum of cultivation, and vegetables of all sorts are grown to perfection. The soil is of unknown depth and of inexhaustible fertility. Development of the region has only begun, and there are yet only about 10,000 people settled in a territory said by President Roosevelt to be capable of supporting a population of half a million. Much of the land is still a part of the public domain, and if it shall be placed under control of the Reclamation Service, individual holdings will be restricted to 160 acres.

IN OLD MEXICO.

Below the Mexican line, in the valley of the Colorado, is a tract of similar land, readily subjected to cultivation by irrigation, comprising about 700,000 acres, which is included in the million-acre ranch owned by Gen. H. G. Otis and his associates. The California and Mexico Land Company, of which Harry Chandler is president, and the Colorado River Land Company, incorporated under the laws of Mexico, Gen. H. G. Otis of the Los Angeles Times, president, are the corporations holding this land. The ranch covers the triangle between the Colorado River, the Cocopah Mountains in Lower California, and the boundary line, excepting a strip along a part of the line owned by the California Development Company, and extends south to the head of the Gulf of California, the ancient Sea of Cortez. There is a "panhandle" to the ranch extending across the line into California, and a projection of 8000 acres into Sonora.

The Imperial Canal, which takes water from the Colorado River and carries it through Mexico for a distance of fifty miles and back into California, runs for twenty miles through the lands of the California-Mexico Land and Cattle Company, and by concession from the Mexican government and by contract with the California Development Company, the ranch has rights to water for irrigation of its arable land. About 200,000 acres of the northern portion of the ranch can be irrigated from the Imperial Canal when the necessary lateral ditches are constructed. At present, between 5000 and 6000 acres on the Mexican side are irrigated and cultivated, and half of that area is in alfalfa.

Crops proved to be peculiarly adapted to soil and climate conditions are alfalfa, Egyptian corn, maize, millet, barley, sorghum and garden vegetables. Soil experts of the Agricultural Department have reported that the land also is fit for the growing of tobacco, cotton, sugar cane and sugar beets. If the agricultural land were subdivided, it would support a large farming population. The pastoral lands, fertilized and watered by the annual overflow of the Colorado, are rich in forage growth and will carry from 40,000 to 50,000 head of cattle when supplemented by alfalfa.

The stock now on the ranch comprises 7000 cattle, 600 horses, 200 mules, 2000 sheep and 2000 hogs. Many of the cattle were bought from Governor Terrasas, of Chihuahua, one of the largest landowners and stock-raisers in North America, but of late stock has been brought in from New Mexico and Texas and the grade of cattle has been raised by importation of blood stock. The beef raised on the ranch is of superior quality and finds a ready market in Los Angeles, only 200 miles away. Steers weighing 2000 pounds are seen, and the average weight of cattle shipped is 1000 pounds. The new line of the Southern Pacific from Yuma to Calexico runs for thirty-eight miles almost in air line through the ranch, affording shipping facilities for stock and produce and placing the ranch at the very back door of Los Angeles. Among the improvements on the ranch is a $5000 barn, the best building of its kind in the Republic of Mexico.

The southern half of the ranch is well watered and heavily timbered with cottonwood and mesquite, and a million cords of mesquite firewood can be cut readily. In the vicinity of Volcano Lake is a thermal district as unique as the Yellowstone or Rotorua, containing hot springs, mud geysers and mineral baths. The country is full of game birds and animals; deer in the bosques, wild hogs in the tules, big horn sheep in the mountains, ducks, geese and swans along the water ways, and millions upon millions of quail everywhere. And for eight months in the year the climatic conditions are perfect.

It is the ambition of Gen. Otis and his associates to make of this rich territory the finest stock ranch in North America; and a good beginning has already been made in the task of achieving that proud ambition.

of the surgeons, have commented that. Two of Smith and Dr. have been at dif- of carelessness.

Aside from these instances there has been no direct or indirect charge of incompetency. Dr. Smith, who is one of the two chief surgeons, is seen in the Receiving Hospital perhaps once in two months. Dr. Quint serves his hours on watch in or about the Central Police Station. The same is true of Dr. Freedman and Dr. Bonynge. There are on the police department now probably 150 men, and very possibly 200 men who would not know Dr. Smith by sight were they to see him. As things now stand one chief surgeon runs the hospital for twelve hours and another for the same time out of the twenty-four.

Owing largely to the fact that Dr. Smith has not been present in the hospital a surgeon who is not on the regular staff has been among those who do the work. This man is Dr. Tibbetts, a graduate physician. He has served during intervals when Dr. Bonynge and Dr. Freedman were on watch, and at such times has attended to minor cases. When cases of major operations have come in he has called either Freedman or Bonynge, according to which of the two belonged on watch.

Tibbetts has been paid by Freedman and Bonynge, the former giving him $25 and the latter $15 a month for his services. He has always been in the Central Police Station during his hours of work and has always been attentive in his care of patients.

In addition to attending all emergency cases which come into the hospital the surgeons have to treat the sick city prisoners, and any disabled policemen or firemen. The 2518 cases enumerated does not include these last two classes; of the prisoners there is an average number of ten cases a day during the winter.

INJURIES GRAVE.

The character of the operations which are performed in the Receiving Hospital is surprisingly grave. For instance, there were among other things last year 45 amputations, 67 stab wounds, 77 gun shot wounds, 144 fractures of limbs, 194 lacerations of the body, 292 lacerations of the head, 37 fractured skulls and 18 severe internal injuries. The great number of street car and automobile accidents in the city is, according to statistics, the main reason for this gravity of operations.

NO POLICE LOAFING.

The charge was recently made at the City Hall that policemen had a penchant for loafing about the hospital while women were undergoing operations, and watching such spectacles with curiosity. There is in the police department a rule to the effect that no person save the surgeons, the matron and the absolutely necessary help in the way of attendants shall enter the Receiving Hospital during the presence of a woman patient. And that rule has been strictly enforced. During the recent agitation about the institution other charges were bandied back and forth. And during that same time it has been an open secret about the Central Police Station, that all manner of political pull has been exercised by men who opposed surgeons now in office and by men who were friendly to them.

The foregoing are facts. And their knowledge is something which any one who comes in frequent contact with the institution must acquire. To the eye of the layman the Receiving Hospital is as clean as a place of its size and situation can be. To the eye of the man it is small, improperly equipped and maintained on a pitiful allowance. All of which makes the place sometimes look like a shambles and smell like a kennel. In connection with which, it is perhaps no more than just to them at this time to mention the fact that surgeons in charge have begged the City Council to give the hospital larger quarters, separate from the jail, to furnish money for nurses and to put it in charge of one executive head.

OPENING UP OF SINALOA.

GEORGE W. PARSONS TELLS OF HIS TRIP THROUGH REGION.

Vast Farming Lands Owned by Los Angeles Corporation Good for Raising All Kinds of Products. No Trade With This City Now but It Is to Be Tributary.

George W. Parsons has returned from Sinaloa, where he has been inspecting land, which he has acquired from the Sinaloa Land and Water Company of this city. It is right in the heart of the vast territory which will be opened and rendered tributary to Los Angeles by the building of the big extension of the Harriman lines down the Pacific Coast of Mexico.

Mr. Parsons went from Los Angeles to Guaymas by rail, there took steamer to Altata and proceeded by the only railroad in Sinaloa now in operation to Culiacan, the State capital. Here he met and conferred with Mr. Mundy, the resident manager of the company, and then started north by buckboard and team across a country soon to be opened, but so far unpenetrated by the iron horse. For a short distance he had one companion, Dr. Brown, but the latter left him soon, and he drove nearly 200 miles alone, stopping at little villages, zigzagging hither and thither, until Topolobampo was reached, from which point steamer was taken home.

The returned wanderer is enthusiastic over the country through which he traveled, and declares that it will undoubtedly become the best section of foreign lands near the United States to be had. He will organize a company on his land amounting to some 10,000 acres.

"In my opinion," said Mr. Parsons yesterday, "this country is to become one of the best farming sections. It is not mountainous, but along the border of Sinaloa, Chihuahua and Durango there is a range running parallel with the coast. This is about ninety miles back from the ocean, and the intervening land is a rolling plain. Eight or ten rivers all flow to the west from the mountains to the sea, and bring down valuable deposits of silt to enrich the plains.

"Here may be grown every kind of fruit or vegetable that we have, and many we have not. Oranges, lemons and all kinds of citrus fruits, corn, beans, garbanzos, sugar cane and vegetables of many kinds. Some of the most delicious tomatoes I have ever tasted were raised there. Tropical and semi-tropical products are easily grown. Many valuable products now grow wild.

"At Los Mochos and Aguila to the northern part of the State the United Sugar Company, a Chicago corporation, has two mills of 800 tons capacity. They get 82 per cent. of syrup. The product is used in Mexico.

"One crop can be raised a year at least without irrigation. For others there is an abundance of water for irrigating. The climate is salubrious. During the summer months it is, of course, hot, but not excessively so north of the Tropic of Cancer, which crosses the State just south of Culiacan. The land in question all lies north of this point.

"The country is untouched by modern ways. It is peaceful in the extreme. No one has the slightest need for weapons traveling for, as is not the case in some other Mexican States more developed, there are no desperadoes lurking along the road. There are few resident Americans. Culiacan, the capital, is a typical Mexican city of 20,000 people. The railroad to Altata, forty miles long, runs a train every other day. It is owned and operated by natives. Antiquated cars and old wood-burning engines are used. Our steamer arrived on an off day when there was no regular train, so the crowd had to pay $200 Mexican to get a special.

"There is already a large rich trade, but Los Angeles gets none of it. Much goes to San Francisco, which has long had relations with the merchants, and has built up a system of long-time credits, which are absolutely necessary to do business in Spanish-American countries. There is also the advantage of direct steamship connection. The Germans, too, have a large and growing trade. Their merchants have representatives on the ground, and bring their goods direct from the old country via Panama. They have spent years building up business.

"I did not spend any time on mining this trip, but back in the range along the State line there are, I understand, excellent mineral propositions, and I heard that some forty companies from Los Angeles alone have entered the country and are working. Where I went and where I am speaking of there is no mining.

"At present the company that has these tracts under concessions from the Mexican government is not doing much, but when the railroad gets in lands will be placed and colonies established on them. Within the next two years great developments may be expected."

A. J. Wallace is president of the Sinaloa Land and Water Company, R. P. Probasco and R. W. Keeny, vice-presidents. A number of leading Los Angeles capitalists are interested.

15 MINUTES TO BROADWAY VIA THREE CAR LINES

Forest Park

Next Door to Wilshire-Westlake District

Is it worth anything to you to live in a favored spot? Nature favors Forest Park in many ways; humanity has favored Forest Park in other ways; between the two we have the ideal spot suitable for magnificent homes.

Forest Park affords a variety of building sites. You can select a lot on one or two car lines; you can have pepper and palm trees, if you want them. You can go one block from a car line or three blocks from a car line. You can locate on an eminence or on flat ground; but in either case you have a magnificent view of the mountains, foothills, valley and city, and you are above the fog and frost of winter. The sun shines in Forest Park when it is cloudy in lower portions of the city.

Spontaneous Building

We no more than announced the improvements to be made in Forest Park when a number of houses were projected, and since then a large number of fine homes have been started or contracted for.

Forest Park seemed to jump into popularity; its growth has been spontaneous. There is every reason for this rapid advancement—the only thing that has not advanced is price. We are selling lots lower than is asked in surrounding neighborhoods. The city has grown all around Forest Park; magnificent residences are being erected on all sides and in the Park. The whole section, including the Park, has adequate building restrictions, thus insuring the best class of homes.

Buy a lot in Forest Park for investment if you are not ready to build; there is no better opportunity offered. Easy terms can be secured if you want them.

If you are ready to build, we can save you money on both the building and the lot. One reason for the spontaneous growth of Forest Park lies in the unusual building inducements which we are offering for a short time. Why not take advantage of them?

Let us show you the Park, or you can go direct to the tract office, corner of Commonwealth avenue and Second street. Take Bimini Hot Springs or Interurban Westlake car.

Mining News of the Week.

MAINTAINING OPEN CAMP.

BISBEE MINES STILL PRODUCING NORMALLY.

Discharge of Thousand Men Does Not Affect Supply of Ore for the Douglas Smelters—Copper Queen Has Large Reserves—New Smelter to Be Built This Year.

BISBEE (Ariz.) March 9.—The production of copper at the Douglas smelter during February was about normal. The Copper Queen turned out 9,150,000 pounds compared with 9,500,000 for January. The Calumet and Arizona Smelter produced about 4,000,000 pounds which is about the average. The daily average in February for the Copper Queen, however, was about the heaviest every known. On the last day of the month the product was a record breaker, weighing 240 tons. About 400 tons of custom ore are received by the Copper Queen daily, including 150 tons from the Imperial mine at Silver Bell, Pima county. About 300 tons of slag are coming from the old smelter dump at Bisbee.

The discharge of 1000 men from the mines at Bisbee appears to affect the supply of ore very little, as many as 100 carloads a day being shipped from this point to Douglas. It is understood that the discharge of the men merely means the suspension of development work and the concentrating of the force on the stoping of ore. In addition to this, the Copper Queen has many thousands of tons of ore heaped in the reserve piles near the smelter. The Calumet smelter is getting considerable ore from Cananea, as well as from a half dozen of the newer Bonanza Circle properties at Bisbee.

Improvements are continually made around the smelters at Douglas. A tenth furnace is about completed in the Copper Queen and it is understood that a new stack and new buildings are contemplated for a still further enlargement of the plant, already one of the largest in the world. Improvements made around the Calumet and Arizona smelter during the present year, as projected, will cost not less than $200,000.

During the year it is expected that Douglas will have a third smelting plant, to be built by the Shattuck & Arizona Company of Bisbee, which now is shipping several hundred tons of ore a day to the Copper Queen furnace.

The Shannon Copper Company's smelter at Clifton is running at full capacity, after a short shutdown, owing to an accident in the compressor machinery.

The Chase Creek Copper Company, which has been driving a long tunnel above Clifton for several years, has struck its first ore, about eighteen inches of low-grade sulphide at a depth of 1600 feet, 800 feet below the surface. It is expected that the main ore bodies aimed at will be encountered within a couple of months.

IN SONORA.

A 200-ton furnace is to be built by the Promontorio Company, sixty miles east of Moctezuma, Sonora. The mines carry high-grade copper and silver ore, some of which has been shipped with profit to the Douglas smelter. Most of the ore, however, will not stand shipping and it has been determined to erect reduction works this year.

On the Rosa Amarilla property, twenty miles from Moctezuma, has been found a new body of copper ore of very high grade. This property was sold a few months ago by Dr. R. C. VanDoran of Cumpas to an eastern company for $500,000.

G. W. McBride has been appointed manager of the Sierra del Cobre mines in Sonora, as well as manager of the Phelps-Dodge interests in the same section.

About 100 men are employed by the leasers, Smith and Swatley, on the old Commonwealth property at Pearce, Cochise county. Thirty stamps of the mill are being operated and the tailing dumps are being worked over with cyanide.

Ten miles from Benson four large copper ledges have been found by O. W. Banta. The ore is carbonate in character and low grade, but is convenient to transportation and could be worked at low cost.

YUMA COUNTY BOOM.

Scores of New Companies Formed to Work Mines in District Opened by Railroad.

PHOENIX (Ariz.) March 9.—March 15 has now been set for the date of starting the Mitchell smelter, near Globe, ore now being received, as well as large shipments of coke. The converting plant will not be in place when the smelter is blown in, but matte will be produced, to be refined in the Old Dominion converter.

Ore has been struck in the vertical shaft being driven in the Iron Cap mine near Globe, a property considered of large promise. The shaft has been sunk to strike two inclined ledges, the first of which is believed to have just been encountered, at a depth of 450 feet. The property is owned by residents of Arizona and Los Angeles, but the development is being done under a stock contract by the National Mining Exploration Company of Boston.

The San Juan mine, near Safford, is making carload shipments of concentrates to the Old Dominion smelter.

Joseph Bowyer of Phoenix has found a copper mine nine miles from the Colorado River in Northern Yuma county, on which the first development work done has found, at a depth of ten feet, fifty-five inches of ore that assays 40 per cent. copper, as well as $4 a ton in gold.

Scores of new companies have been organized to work mining properties in the district lately opened up by the Arizona and California Railroad in Northern Yuma county, and shipments of mining machinery are being received daily. A gasoline hoisting plant has been placed on the property of the Copper Pride mine, owned in Los Angeles, and superintended by S. L. Blatchley. This property has a working shaft sunk to a depth of 120 feet. Copper ore is being shipped from the Osborne-Waddell mine from a depth of 200 feet. High-grade copper has been found in the tunnels of the National Gold Copper Company's mine.

Mining machinery valued at $12,000, being floated down the river from Needles by Tom Brennan, was lost in the river within a short distance of its destination.

The Corona Copper Company of Pittsburgh has purchased the Chicago group of mines from Samuel Butler and is putting in a hoist and erecting camp buildings, preparatory to extensive work.

A Lane concentrating mill is to be erected on the property of the Glorioso Mining Company in the Harcuvar Mountains of Northern Yuma county, a property that has been under development for many years. The main ore deposit is said to have seven feet of $25 gold ore, with considerable copper.

A concentrating mill has been completed and a test run made on the property of the Monarch Mining and Smelting Company near Wickenburg, better known as the "Three Black Buttes."

Complaint has been made by stockholders in Wickenburg that the Electra Mining Company has allowed its property near that point to be jumped and appropriated by a combination of stockholders, who have formed the Unida Company.

George Norton, a pioneer resident of Yuma county, has sold a group of gold claims in the Kofa mining district to Charles Fay and R. K. Humphreys, the same individuals who lately purchased the rich Mayhew property in the same vicinity. Mr. Norton and his associates are to receive $150,000, payable within three years. The Rattlesnake claim, between the Norton and Mayhew groups, has been sold to Fay and Humphreys at $25,000 by D. Ortega, George Downey and E. B. Haines. It is understood that all the purchases have been made in the interest of David Heyman of New York.

The Rescue Copper Company, which has operated a smelter in the Ajo mining district, south of Casa Grande, has been absorbed by the Cornelia Copper Company, thus consolidating most of the mining claims of the locality. The stock of the Cornelia Company has been increased from $1,000,000 to $3,000,000, to provide funds for the purchase. The Ajo district is the first worked by Americans in Arizona, and there are evidences of extensive development, done by the earliest Spanish explorers.

The Arizona-Apache Company has purchased from Frank L. Foran twenty-three claims, generally known as the Keystone group, on the eastern slope of the Catalina Mountains, ten miles distant from the San Pedro River. It is understood that $100,000 will be paid for the property, and that arrangements have been made for the building of a railroad to connect with the Phoenix and Eastern road, which now ends at Winkelman. The purchasers of the property are mainly residents of Butte, Mont.

MINING FOR A METEOR.

Sinking Shafts in Canyon Diablo Crater to Find an Enormous Aerolite at Great Depth.

PRESCOTT (Ariz.) March 9.—Work is to be resumed at once on the exploration of the Cañon Diablo "crater." Operations have been suspended since last September on account of lack of water. A company of wealthy Pennsylvanians is expending an immense amount in an attempt to definitely locate the presence of an enormous meteor believed to be hidden far down in the earth, buried by the force of its own impact. Drill holes sunk at various points to a depth of 1600 feet have shown the presence of meteoric iron in large amounts. Four of the holes have passed into unaltered sandstone, demonstrating that the hole was not made by an volcanic outburst or eruption. A development shaft sunk from the bottom of the crater, 600 feet below the outside surface of the ground, proved unsuccessful on account of the peculiar ashy, yet water-laden character, of the ground penetrated. It is probable that permanent mining operations will have to be conducted by means of a shaft sunk in the unaltered country rock, from which the crater can be drained and drifts run to strike the iron. The meteoric iron will be extremely valuable, capable of being made into the finest of nickel steel.

A magnificent body of coking coal has been found in southern Navajo county, ten miles west of Pinedale. A considerable part of the coal is on the White Mountain Apache reservation, the entire belt being ten miles wide and twenty miles long. Indian Agent Crouse has recommended to the Interior Department that permission be given for the location and development of coal mines on the reserve.

On the 300-foot level of the Little Jessie mine at McCabe has been found three feet of sulphide ore, sampling over $200 to the ton in gold. The mine is known as one of the richest in northern Arizona and has a record of a production of $800,000.

Charles W. Clark, general manager of the United Verde mines, and William McDermott, lately appointed manager of the Twin Buttes mine near Tucson, have bonded a group of claims in Mayer district from Vernon Slink ard. It is locally believed that they have secured a valuable property. The croppings run high in copper.

A strike of gold ore has been made by John Thomson in the Mascot mine in Hassayampa district. There is a pay strike eight inches in thickness, sampling $100 to the ton. The Mascot is an old location.

Carload shipments of ore from the Lone Pine to the Humboldt smelter have returned over $50 per ton value. This mine is "making good," though it has been idle for several years, following an unfavorable report by an eastern mining expert.

ARIZONA COMPANIES.

Annual Meetings and Elections of Officers—Butte Capital in Catalina District.

TUCSON (Ariz.) March 7.—Butte capitalists have secured a valuable group of mines in the Catalina district, situated north of Tucson, which were sought by Pittsburgh and New York parties as well.

The properties are known as the Foren group and were acquired for $100,000 by the Butte capitalists, who have incorporated under the name of the Arizona-Apache Copper Mining Company, with a capital stock of $2,500,000. The officers are as follows: President, W. W. Adams of Butte; A. P. Pohndof of Butte, vice-president, and W. J. Guthrie of Butte, secretary and treasurer. The property is located but ten miles from the Santa Fé branch extension in the San Pedro Valley. Tom Safford, who has had charge of the Butte and Arizona development work in the Huachuca Mountains, will have charge.

The capital stock of the Twin Buttes was increased to $2,000,000 at a special meeting of the stockholders held here this week. It was announced that the new stock issue is to secure additional funds to further more rapid development work, and for the extension of the Twin Buttes railroad to Calabasas and the construction of a smelter. Announcement was made at the meeting of the selection of Capt. William McDermott as the new general manager to succeed D. S. Rose, who still retains the presidency of the company. Capt. McDermott has been with Senator W. A. Clark as superintendent of the United Verde at Jerome.

The annual meeting of the Coast Line Copper Company has been held in Nogales and the following officers were chosen: President, John T. Cave; vice-president, Winfield Scott; secretary and treasurer, Judson A. Elliott; general manager, John Henderson. The company has a gold property at El Oro and a copper property at Caborca, Sonora.

The annual meeting of the Fortuna Gold Mining Company, which is developing properties near Magdalena, Sonora, was held this week at Nogales. The following officers were elected: President, Claude M. Acklen of Washington; vice-president, A. N. Conrad of Nogales; secretary, W. R. Moore of Kansas City; general manager, J. N. Purcell of Washington.

San Diego, Pasadena and St. Louis parties have acquired the old Santa Bibiana mines in Sonora. They have incorporated under the name of the Escondido Company. The officers of the company are: President, F. A. Garretson, San Diego; vice-president, J. A. Horrell, Pasadena; treasurer, J. S. Garetson, St. Louis; secretary, Thomas Ellis, Magdalena, Sonora; general manager, J. C. McKnight of San Diego; superintendent, John S. Hurst, Nogales.

GOLDFIELD.

Three Million Dollars Raised for a Smelter at Tidewater—Evidences of Rapid Growth.

GOLDFIELD (Nev.) March 7.—The Legislature of Nevada will probably enact laws limiting the scope and the baleful influence of wildcat mining propositions. It is to be hoped that such legislation will prove effective in the abolition of unscrupulous operators, whose game is to gull the public by well-worded prospectuses and confidential letters. There are so many legitimate and meritorious propositions all over the State that there is no need to chase wildcats.

Another big smelter project is being backed by J. R. Davis, R. O. Hobson, G. H. Hayes, W. O. Manson, Al Myers, E. H. Wedekind, M. J. Monette and W. H. Whitmore. They have raised three million dollars and will erect an enormous smelter, probably at San Pedro. All the projectors are Goldfield miners, who have made their money in Goldfield mines.

The Goldfield postoffice is again to the front with an official statement, which is proof of the growth of this camp. Postal receipts for January, 1906, came to $4966.04. Postal receipts for last January amounted to $9,468.57, an increase of almost 100 per cent. in one year.

There is no longer any doubt but that Goldfield will be incorporated as soon as the necessary details can be worked out. Following incorporation will come free delivery, and such other advantages as go with metropolitan cities.

Cleanliness in Goldfield is following Godliness. A number of new churches are being built, and now comes the announcement that a large bath-house will be erected at once.

With the building of several new lines of railroad, all headed for Goldfield, much notice has not been taken of the official announcement that the Utah and Nevada Telephone Company is to stretch its wires from Salt Lake to Goldfield, but such is the fact. With Goldfield as a central station, lines will run to all neighboring camps.

There has passed the Nevada Assembly a bill authorizing a bond issue for the construction of a $100,000 Courthouse in Goldfield. The erection will soon begin.

One little evidence of the way they do things in Goldfield comes in the form of the purchase outright of a stone quarry by a mining man who is building a $150,000 block on Columbia street. The owner was harassed by vexatious delays in obtaining material, and solved the problem by buying the quarry.

President John S. Cook of the Cook Bank says that the financial condition and future outlook were never brighter for Goldfield. He anticipates a substantial rise in the stock market for the next two months, and there is every indication of a very large investment business, both foreign and local.

Another new club has been organized. The promoters of it are leasers who have accumulated fortunes from Goldfield ores, and are banding together for social and business benefits.

GOLDEN AURORA.

Strikes of Free Gold That Show Old Esmeralda to Be Nevada's Richest Field.

Recent strikes of high grade gold ore in the quartz mines of Aurora, Nev., are holding out and improving with depth, demonstrating that the old Esmeralda district is one of the richest mining fields in the State. There is a greater body of proved ore in the Aurora ledges than any other mining camp on the Pacific Coast can show, but the recent strikes have created but little excitement outside, for the reason that the mines are held by close corporations or individual owners able to work them, and no stock is on the market.

The Wide West, a claim once owned by Mark Twain, has a four-foot vein of ore averaging $300, with a twelve-inch streak of $3000 quartz. The Prospectus has at the 250 level a ledge sixty feet wide, carrying a two-foot vein of bonanza quartz running up to $10,000 a ton. A drift is being run along the ledge toward the end line, which divides the Prospectus from the Eva, and the owners of the latter are sinking to prospect for the vein from which the Prospectus leasers are now taking $15,000 a week.

Specimens of high grade ore, showing free gold, from the Wide West, Durand, Prospectus, Eva, Monarch, Seminole and Table Mountain claims are shown at the office of the California Exploration Company, 300 Severance building.

DUPLEX RETURNS.

Searchlight and Eldorado Canyon Properties Have Good Showing.

SEARCHLIGHT, March 9.—The fine ore that the Duplex mines, adjoining this town, has been taking out of their Fraction claim, has recently also been found in their New Year's Gift, both from the 200-foot level. A fair assay runs $30 in gold, 25 per cent. lead, 5 per cent. copper and sixteen ounces of silver. Mine operators consider that this grade and character of ore has no superior anywhere. Sinking now continues on the Fraction below 200 feet. Work will soon be resumed on the Good Hope, which adjoins the Quartette and which has not been worked since the Brockman management. Several carloads of special ore are sacked for shipment to the smelter as soon as the Santa Fé road is completed to this point, which will be inside of fifteen days.

Regarding Searchlight's leading mine the Boston News Bureau recently said: "There is a dividend-paying mine in Boston which is, of late, becoming quite prominent, namely, the Quartette Mining Company, the stock of which is now selling around $19 per share and on which bi-monthly dividends are being paid. About nine years ago a gold-mining prospect was acquired by a party of Boston people, among whom were George G. Crocker of the Boston Transit Commission, who is president; Andrew W. Preston, president of the United Fruit Company, and Charles A. Hopkins, the insurance man."

The Quartette is making daily shipment of ore via the Salt Lake route of ten to twelve tons. It is of the famous copper-stained variety found in the lower workings, and will average in the neighborhood of 15 per cent. copper, 25 per cent. lead and better than $100 a ton in gold.

The 900-foot level is opening up in a bonanza-like fashion. The main ore body has not been reached, but 300 feet in from the shaft bunches of exceedingly rich are, some of the best ever found in the mine, are being extracted and milled. The shipping ore comes from between the sixth and seventh and the seventh and eighth levels. Much of it is specimen ore, showing quantities of free gold to the naked eye and values often soar up into the picture cards.

A large flow of water has been struck in the Venus mine of the Black Hawk Company at El Dorado Cañon, at a depth of 300 feet. No recent gold strike has created more excitement, as this is the first in quantity, and for some time the water problem has taken precedence over the finding of ore. A ten-stamp mill will be installed at once. A large hoist and other machinery for extensive work is already on the way. The El Dorado mine, in the same district, also tapped water about the same time, but the quantity will not be known until the pumps, which have been ordered, get to working.

The Lloyd-Searchlight Company, at the new camp of Thurman, fifteen miles south, has made a test run of four tons at the Duplex mines of this place. Thursday the button, or miniature brick, was sent by express to the head offices of the company at Santa Barbara. The ore averaged $65 to the ton, and as only 65 cents of this amount was in silver, practically the full value was saved on the plates.

The ore milled came from development work above the fifty-foot level, below which the ore is turning base. This in itself insures the future of the mine, as the values remain and tests of concentrates have run over $5000.

At the Parallel mine, on the western edge of town, a new shaft is being sunk 600 feet north of the old one, and in the short depth of fifty feet at least 100 tons have been taken out that return an average assay of $22 per ton in gold. This property is on the flat and the ledge as yet is in a broken-up condition, but the values here, taken in connection with those at the old workings, where work was temporarily suspended on account of excess of water, means that the Parallel will soon again take its place among the regular producers.

Tailings.

Miners of the Tejunga district have organized a Protective Miners' Association for the purpose of protecting legal claimants against claim jumpers and preventing the clouding of titles and long drawn out litigation.

Net Daily Income Over $3.00

Will Be Produced at Mines Owned by Strong Syndicate.

Owning two of the richest mines in the wonderful Sonora gold district near Hermosillo, this syndicate was handicapped because of insufficient mill machinery. This difficulty is now overcome, as the syndicate recently purchased equipment for three five-foot Huntington mills. These in addition to the ones already at the mines, will produce a carefully estimated net income of from $300 to $400 per day. With 400,000 tons of free-milling ore already blocked out, the syndicate has one of the strongest propositions in the mining world. To increase milling capacity, the syndicate invites the public to participate in the profits and purchase treasury stock, same to be duly registered by the Merchants' Trust Company of this city. The syndicate is thoroughly reliable, and all information as to officers and directors, as well as the purchase of stock, can be had by addressing Y, box 61, Times Office.

[AUTHORIZED ANNOUNCEMENT.]

NEW CALIFORNIA COPPER DISTRICT

High Grade Ore of Wondeceful Value

Santa Fe Cutoff at Amboy Will Tap the Mines—Idaho, Nevada and California Operators in This Field.

Los Angeles mining men formerly operating in the Coeur d'Alenes have discovered a new mining district in the Whipple mountains of southeastern San Bernardino County, California. The showing there in gold and copper, in what is known as the Copperfields, is said by those who have seen both districts to greatly surpass that of the best properties in the Greenwater district. Assays of ore exceeding $100 per ton excite no surprise among those familiar with the district and values in the red metal alone from surface ores run in the shipping grades from $75 to as high as $269 per ton. Accompanying gold values often run as high as $20 per ton. The extent of the mineralized district has not been determined, but prospecting and exploration work has been carried on quietly for a number of years in such a degree as to prove a metalliferous area of twenty or thirty square miles and extending from the Turtle mountains on the west in a belt three or four miles wide to the Colorado river, forming a belt with a northwest and southeast trepd.

Discovered by Capitalists.

Until within the past year the knowledge of the great mineral wealth of this district was confined almost solely to the few prospectors owning claims there, the fact of the district being on the desert forty miles from the nearest railroad, with no prospect of better transportation facilities acting as a bugbear to otherwise interested capital into seeking copper mines.

The astonishing rise in the price of copper in the last few months and the building of the Santa Fe cutoff, which leaves the main line at Amboy, and bears south of the Turtle and Whipple mountains and crosses the Colorado river near Parker, Ariz., running within a few miles of these properties, has so changed conditions as to make them most attractive.

Three Los Angeles companies are already at work developing mines there against the arrival of the railroad, which is now completed on the Arizona side to within ten or twelve miles of the Colorado river. The roadbed is being most substantially built, with a 1 per cent. minimum grade, and furnished with seventy pound steel. Good station buildings are being constructed alone the road to meet the requirements of a main line route.

Real Commercial Importance.

The real commercial import to Southern California of this move of the Santa Fe can best be appreciated by the few mining men cognizant of the splendid metallic wealth of the Whipple mountains awaiting means of transportation to proper reduction works. With this railroad once in operation nothing but 10 cent copper or the arrival of the millenium can stay an intensive development of the district. The two important quantities of the economic mining equation have been found here already through exploration work, viz: The establishment of the fact of rich commercial quantities of ore on the surface in the alteration forms of carbonates and oxides and the more important fact of unaltered sulphides at permanent water level.

Not only can the Copperfields district surpass the Greenwater district in the quantity and value of surface ores, but in what is more consequental to mining capital, affords the demonstration that the deposits are vertically continuous to depth required to make permanent producers.

American Eagle Property.

The American Eagle property has just crosscut their veins with the result of thirteen feet of high-grade copper sulphide and only one wall in sight. The shaft is down 100 feet and makes daily from 1000 to 1500 gallons of water, which is strongly impregnated with copper sulphate.

The district is wholly volcanic and reveals evidence of several successive flows of the commoner extrisives, such as rhyolite, andersite and diorite with porphyries of various kinds. The deposits occur along simple fissures, which have a southeast and northwest trend. Many of these fissures occur comparatively close together, forming zones of parallel fracturing. The dip is usually at an angle above 45 degrees. The ore seems to occur as a replacement of the enclosing formation, the metasomatic interchange being more complete generaly on the hanging wall side of the fissure.

Samples on Display.

On the property of the Whipple Mountain Gold and Copper Mining company eight distinct veins of good proportions show ores on the surface of a shipping grade, some of it having a copper content equal to matte. Besides the unusually high metal content, the ores, both of sulphide and vadone zones, possess good slag-making materials, a feature of great advantage in their smelting. Samples of the ore taken from the Whipple Mountain Gold and Copper Mining Company's property and weighing 150 pounds may be seen in the window of the Herald office.

This ore, as it is taken from the ground, is worth 7 cents per pound. Assays show it to have a copper value of $106.50 or 21.3 per cent. The chunk of ore was taken from a piece weighing more than twice as much and too heavy to handle by hand.

The excitement at the Needles already presages great activity in mining operations. Sleeping accommodations are inadequate and means of transportation to the various new strikes is out of the question. People now in the Needles are shipping in outfits from various points.

MINING STOCKS

We want you to know something of a new Copper District that is now being opened up, which is very near home, which can be personally visited and investigated in three days' time which would cover the trip to and from the property. The district known as

"THE COPPERFIELDS"

In San Bernardino County, Cal.

Heretofore we have confined our interests to the great mines in the Coeur d'Alenes of Idaho, one of the greatest mining centers of the world, the production for this past year being over $22,000,000. The past week a party of six experienced mining men of the Coeur d'Alene visited "The Copperfields," the newly opened district above referred to. We went particularly to inspect the property of the Whipple Mountain Gold and Copper Co.

After a thorough investigation these thoroughly practical experienced mining men purchased substantial blocks of the stock of the "Whipple Mountain Gold and Copper Mining Company." The specimens of the ore which we brought back with us assayed as high as $269 to the ton. These specimens are to be seen in our office. This is worthy of your investigation and we want to give you an opportunity to become interested in so excellent a property. This stock we are offering at 15c a share. Work is to be commenced at once on the property and the values on the surface are such to insure that little work will have to be done to make the property self-supproting.

We Handle All Coeur d'Alene Stocks

Coeur d'Alene stocks generally are gradually regaining strength, and it is only a question of a very short time until these stocks, which we have recommended to our clients as good buys, will be selling at greatly advanced prices. The outlook for a good market this spring is very promising and handsome profits will be made by those who get in now.

Have made more money for people who have invested in mining stocks than any other mining promoter in Los Angeles. At the present time I have the best opportunities for the mining investments that have ever been offered to the public.

CHILDREN'S AWFUL DEATH.

The work of the Lees in Calcutta is conducted under the name of "Lee Memorial Bengali Mission," in memory of their six children, who were destroyed by a landslide in the mountains of India, in September, 1899, the eldest having been 17 years of age, and the youngest 6 years. The family had gone to Darjeeling, a mountain resort, to spend the hot months, and the parents returned to Calcutta in advance, leaving the six children to follow later. The heavy and frequent rains in India occasion great landslides in the densely populated mountain districts, and it was one of these that overwhelmed the Lee cottage, instantly killing five of the children and only sparing the life of the sixth long enough to tell of the calamity. In all, five or six other white people and about 5000 natives lost their lives during that one night.

When Dr. and Mrs. Lee began their individual work in India, they preferred to be independent, and their success has been marvelous. Beginning with nothing, they now hold property valued at $80,000, and conduct a general mission work, with day school, training school and orphanage.

Dr. Lee has general supervision of the spiritual work and conducts a training school for boys; Mrs. Lee is principal of the girls' training school, and is assisted by three consecrated young women from the Chicago training school—Miss Alice Cooper, Miss Mabel Eddy and Miss Shaw. During the absence of the principals at the present time, their places are filled by Rev. W. D. Beal and his wife.

There are now congregated at the mission about 200 Bengali girls and sixty boys, and in addition to this central work in the city of Calcutta, they have ten other day schools in the towns and villages surrounding, conducted by native trained workers from their school, and also qualified by passing examination by the British government. Dr. Lee now seeks an evangelistic lady educator to return with him to India and superintend these native schools.

In peopling their mission at the outset, the Lees secured 200 starving children from the famine district in the interior, mere living skeletons, most of them, and of these 150 lived. One hundred are still in the school under training, and fifty have been sent out either as workers in the cause or as followers of some useful occupation.

The upper picture shows three of these who are now educated teachers.

Dr. Lee has lived in advance of many educators in more enlightened countries, for he long since adopted the principle of polytechnic education as the proper one to enable boys and girls to best learn to make their own way in the world. In connection with his school he has shops where carpentering and machine work is taught, as well as other useful occupations; a dairy, where the hygienic principles of milk and butter production are instilled; rooms where the girls are taught to sew and to perform the duties of the household. He has gone yet farther, and has a limited dental college, where boys are taught dentistry.

BRIGHT BENGALI GIRLS.

The group of young women in the accompanying picture are Bengali girls taken into the school twelve years ago, and Miss Cooper, a trained kindergartner of the mission, one of their teachers. The girls are now teachers, also, having graduated from the Lee training school, and afterward passed the requisite examination under the educational department of the British government. So well pleased were the British officials with the preparation of the girls that they have pledged one-third of the cost of the new building Dr. Lee hopes to erect pon his return to the field next fall.

Mrs. Lee, who is principal of the school, is devoting her life to uplifting and saving the women of India. She is the deadly enemy of child-marriage, which is the curse of India, and she has saved many children from the hateful alliance, educating and fitting them for the different walks in life. She has also been able to secure many child-wives and widows, educating them for teachers and Bible women.

They have seven old buildings in which the work is conducted at present, and the valuable ground upon which they stand in the heart of Calcutta is all paid for. They now plan to erect a large new building at a cost of about $23,000, and hope to be able to return to India with the necessary cash in their possession, and now actually have $6000 of the required amount. It is over this new building they will fly the flag presented to them by the ladies of Stanton Relief Corps on Friday night. The building will be a memorial to their children, lost in the Darjeeling disaster, and rooms will be dedicated and marked with a tablet to the memory of such persons as furnish the means for their equipment, running from $300 to $1000 per room.

After leaving Los Angeles, the address of Dr. and Mrs. Lee will be Mountain Lake Park, Md., until November 1, after which it will be No. 13 Wellington Square, Calcutta, India.

Mrs. Lee's book, "The Darjeeling Disaster," is in its third edition, while her "Indian Princess" is in its sixth edition, and has been translated into fifteen different languages.

All the teaching in the schools of the Lee mission is in the Bengali language, and for that reason they have been able to reach thousands of men and women who otherwise would have shunned them and possibly opposed them in many instances. By using the native language they have endeared themselves to all who know them in India, and there is almost no limit to their usefulness, especially in their efforts to elevate the womanhood of that country.

Mrs. Lee tells some thrilling experiences she has had among the "jogees," or devotees, during their annual pilgrimage to bathe in the Ganges River, when she and others of the party were able to do much to relieve sudden illness among the natives.

"The effect of this work among the sick," said Mrs. Lee, "was wonderful. Those who jeered us when we sold our books came to us for medicine, and the jogees, who reviled us, now bowed their heads as we passed to and fro. I came away confirmed in the conviction of years, that in medical missionary work is a power to reach and save these people, as yet unrecognized by the church."

This is in line with what has been said in some of the Los Angeles churches by B. C. Bonnarjee of this city, a young high-caste Hindu, who, while well educated, is not always able to make himself clearly understood. He advocates sending no missionary to India who is not also skilled in medicine, for the very reason given by Mrs. Lee.

THE OIL INDUSTRY.

FIVE MILLIONS THE DECREASE.

Curtailment of Output; California Still Leads.

Increase Insured This Year; Is Harriman Selling.

Associated-Espee Alliance May Be Dissolved.

From the figures gathered from all the fields in the State the oil production for 1906 is found to have 30,538,000, a decline of 5,133,000 barrels from that of 1905, the highest recorded. As Texas and Louisiana, whose combined production alone exceeded that of California in 1905, declined from 40,000,000 to less than 25,000,000, it will be readily seen that California still leads.

With the Kern River and Los Angeles districts, the decline is due wholly to deliberate curtailment on the part of the producer, owing to low prices.

At Kern River, the low price had something to do with the fall-off, although it would have been very great even though more drilling had been done. The Kern River field is still a great producer, the foremost in the State, and one of the biggest in the world, but it has declined 6,500,000 in two years, or about 33 per cent. In the Los Angeles field the decline was not in any sense to curtailment. So far from this being the case development has been rushed steadily through in the effort to get more oil. The figures speak for themselves as to the success obtained.

These figures are as nearly exact as it is possible to gather without getting figures from the boks of every producer in the State. They are the first to be given this year, as the California Petroleum Miners' Association, whose figures always appeared in January of each year, has been out of existence since the San Francisco fire.

Field stocks show a decline of 2,000,000 barrels, Kern River alone having any to speak of—14,000,000 barrels being the amount claimed by the Standard and generally supposed to be in the big reservoir. For other fields the total is less than a million.

The following are the figures for 1906 and for several years prior:

OUTLOOK FOR THIS YEAR.

For 1907 it is practically certain that Fullerton will show a big increase, two millions not being considered an excessive estimate. The Columbia's big well has proven excellent territory in which the Santa Fé, Graham & Loftus and the Fullerton are all drilling. The Murphy's find in the Coyote hills is likely to result in a big extension that way. At Whittier the work of the Central and Murphy is likely to bring a considerable increase in production.

The flowing well brought in by Pitcher & Garbutt and the Union west of the city and the deep drilling operations that may be carried on in the city render it impossible to make a forecast of much value as output for 1907.

As to Coalinga and Santa Maria the increase is likely to be anywhere from 50 to 100 per cent.

In Ventura county the outlook is for a large amount of drilling as well as the reopening of old wells long shut in.

The fields on the west side of Kern are likely to add something for half a million up according to how soon the Standard is ready to take oil out.

Associated-Espee Alliance.

There are not lacking signs that the Associated-Espee alliance may go the way that the alliance of the Standard and the combine has gone. That this is practically off seems to admit of no doubt. That the Standard would for a minute oppose the wishes of Harriman with the whole power of the Espee at his back is hard to believe.

Following the sales of stock by persons more or less in touch with the local Harriman interests, it is now reported from various sources, and reiterated with the utmost persistency, that Mr. Harriman is endeavoring to unload. Just where or how he is managing this it is hard to see. Los Angeles and San Francisco would hardly absorb enough of his holdings to make a drop in the bucket and the stock is not listed in the East yet, although it is expected to be.

It is further reported, indirectly from Espee circles, that it is extremely likely that the contract between the combine and the railroad will not be renewed, when it expires, which will be some time the latter part of this year or the first of next, and that the railroad will enter the field as a purchaser of its own oil direct from the producer, besides increasing its own output by further development.

Color is lent this report, accepted as very probable by some well-informed people, by the fact that the combine is purchasing much of the oil which it supplies to the railroad. The latter may very probably believe that it can buy from the consumer as cheaply as can the Associated, and thus avoid having to pay the latter a profit over and above. It is possible that with the changed conditions in the market the Associated itself may not be over-anxious to sell too much of its oil at such prices as the railroad insists upon and the whole business may be the outcome of a deal between the two. The present upward course of the stock looks very much like a movement to bear the stock to enable some one to unload.

Besides the lands it is holding at Kern River and Coalinga and working the railroad company owns several sections at Coalinga where there are excellent producing wells leased under conditions giving the railroad an option at market prices on the output. No contract can be made for disposing of it without the Espee's consent. These include 1, 21, 7 and 13. Wells on these lands are operated by the Union, Coalinga, Pacific, Commercial Petroleum, Confidence, California, Monarch, Cypress, Fresno-San Francisco, Pennsylvania, Coalinga Petroleum, Porter & Scribner, Section Seven and Zier.

These reports of rupture of the alliance, of course, seems to be a contradiction of the report printed that the two intend to jointly operate a pipe line to the bay, but this may be more apparent than real and all part of a deal.

Flowing Wells Again.

The Pitcher & Garbutt-Union well west of the city has been flowing again at a lively rate within the last twenty-four hours. This is another of its periodical outbreaks after sanding up for a time.

The report that this well is not much below 3000 feet in depth, yet produces an oil that is lighter than any found in the Amalgamated wells, some of which are below this, if correct, indicates, it would seem, the existence of a new formation and practically a new district south of the Amalgamated.

The owners of this well have acquired land on both sides of the Los Angeles-Pacific Railroad, thus indicating an intention to later extend operations to the south.

Union Drills in Ventura.

The Union is drilling in Adams Cañon near Santa Paula, where it already has twenty-five producers. The new well is to be a test hole, going below 2000 feet. The present wells are from 1500 to 2600, and give a product of about 28 gravity.

Coalinga Notes.

The Standard has commenced its first well on the newly purchased Twenty-eight property at Coalinga. The well is on the southeast quarter.

Four thousand barrels a day is the amount which the California Oil Fields (Ltd.,) is selling to the Associated under its one-year contract. It is a lighter product than the combine has usually handled. It is said that the price is about 25 cents a barrel.

Devil's Den Assessment.

The Visalia Oil Company, composed of Visalia people, with property in the Devil's Den country in Kern county, has just levied an assessment of 7 cents a share due March 30. This is assessment No. 9. The property has never paid, no oil having yet been commercially developed in that region.

NOVELTY FOR BUCKEYES.

The Ohio people are anticipating a gay time at their reception Tuesday evening in Fraternal Brotherhood Hall. The feature will be a box social and banquet. The ladies of the society, whether members or guests, will take boxes of eatables, which will be sold to the highest bidder, not to exceed 98 cents. After the sale the purchasers and owners will repair to the banquet room, where hot coffee will be served.

BIOGRAPHICAL MEETING.

The biological section of the Southern California Academy of Sciences will meet at the Pacific College of Osteopathy Monday evening. Profs. Ulrey, Gilbert and Whiting will discuss the "Physiology of the Cell." The public is invited.

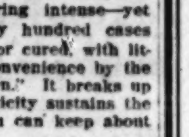
EYEGLASSES NOT NECESSARY

Eyesight Can be Strengthened, and Most Forms of Diseased Eyes Cured Without Cutting or Drugging.

That the eyes can be strengthened so that eyeglasses can be dispensed with in the great majority of cases has been proven beyond a doubt by the testimony of hundreds of people who publicly claim that they have been cured by that wonderful little instrument called "Actina." "Actina" also cures most cases of sore and granulated lids, iritis, etc., also removes Cataracts and Pterygiums without cutting or drugging. Over 70,000 "Actinas" have been sold, therefore it is not an experiment, but an absolute fact. The following letters are but samples of those that are received daily:



Mrs. M. E. Champney, 242 West 135th Street, New York City, writes: "The 'Actina' cured me of Iritis, after the doctors said there was no cure outside an operation. I have been entirely well for over four months, can see to read and sew as well as before. I can honestly recommend 'Actina' for all afflictions of the eye."

Miss E. F. Tucker, of 2941 San Antonio ave., Alameda, Cal., says: "I am more than pleased with the 'Actina.' When I received it I had been wearing glasses for more than 3 years for Astigmatism. I immediately discontinued their use and have not had them on since. It is wonderful. I consider it worth its weight in gold. I have recommended it to many of my friends. I would be pleased to have a few circulars to hand to friends as they may understand more of it, price, etc."

E. R. Holdbrook, Deputy County Clerk, Fairfax, Va., writes: "'Actina' has cured my eyes so that I can do without glasses. I very seldom have headache now, and can study up to eleven o'clock after a hard day's work at the office."

"Actina" can be used by old and young with perfect safety. It is impossible to do harm with one. Every member of the family can use the one "Actina" for any form of disease of the Eye, Ear, Throat or Head. One will last for years, and is always ready for use. It will be sent on trial, postpaid.

If you will send your name and address to the Actina Appliance Co., Dept. 85N, 811-813 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive, absolutely FREE, a valuable book—Professor Wilson's Treatise on Disease.

The next element is that attachment for the sweet and gentle Ophelia which entwined itself so intimately around his heart. Here was to be the solace of his days of toil. The gentle, caressing touch of that soft hand was to still the throbbing of an overtaxed brain in performing the life work of the man, to smooth out the wrinkles of care upon his brow.

At this period, how bright life seemed to our Hamlet! What a glorious world he lived in! How bright the firmament spread above him! How noble the attributes of his fellow-man and how sweet the image of Ophelia to his mind! He stood surrounded by that most excellent canopy, the air. He gazed upon the brave, o'erhanging firmament; he gloried in the majestic roof fretted with golden fire. He studied that piece of work, a man, noble in reason, infinite in faculty, in form and moving express and admirable, in action like an angel, in apprehension like a god, the beauty of the world, the paragon of animals.

Here we reach the third element in the life of Hamlet. His own heart, with all its voices, whispering from the innermost recesses of his soul, the call of his race upon his sympathies and the inspiration of heaven all drew him to the work for which he seemed to be destined, an apostle of intellectual freedom and moral enlightenment for the world. To that career his footsteps turned with all the alacrity born of youth and enthusiasm. But lo! there rises up before him an awful shadow. No wonder he turns to the right hand and to the left, like Balaam's ass in the narrow defile where the angel with the drawn sword seemed set to stop his way. His father cruelly murdered, his mother disgracing that father's memory by a sudden and incestuous marriage with his uncle, that uncle a cut-purse of the empire, who had stolen the precious diadem from the brow where it belonged and put it in his pocket as a robber would a dollar. The low social conventionalities of his time called upon the philosophical leader of the human race to forego the enjoyments of his love for Ophelia and to turn aside from the career which the finger of Providence was pointing out to him. And for what? To abandon these high ideals, to forego the path of so glorious a career, to become a policeman, to lay aside his books, his studies, his ambitions, to doff his student's garb and put on the uniform and star of a policeman, to arm himself with a policeman's club, to surrender the charter of his high ideals from heaven and to accept the commission of a sheriff, to exchange his philosophy for a hangman's rope and become the executioner of a murderer.

Oh, cursed spite it was indeed that such a man should have been set to right such transient wrongs at the sacrifice of a career so lasting and so noble. It was but the effort of a moment for Hamlet to put his heel with crushing ferocity upon his own heart and crucify his own affections. It was easy to tell Ophelia to get herself to a nunnery, but to carry out the hangman's commission and be the executioner of his uncle, the avenger of his father's death and memory, was a task so hard that the philosophic soul naturally shrank from it more than from the cup of poison or the envenomed point of the rapier. So reluctant was the philosophic soul to turn aside from his ideals, give up his life ambitions and perform so ignoble an act, that in the end the action of others was necessary to enmesh him in a net by which the execution was accomplished rather by chance than by intention. The hangman's duty performed, the sheriff's commission fulfilled, Hamlet himself with his dying breath tells the failure of his career, the disappointment of his dreams and high hopes, as he says in four last words, "The rest is silence." His friend and companion in his studies, sympathies and aspirations, Horatio, expresses the verdict and the prayer of mankind for 300 years: "Now cracks a noble heart. Good-night, sweet prince, and flights of angels sing thee to thy rest."

How many Hamlets have lived since this Prince of Denmark who might have been intellectual or moral Moses to the race, but who have turned aside from the high ideals to which nature and Providence seemed to have destined them, to sacrifice their lives in conforming to the low social conventionalities of the time in which they live. There have been many men who might have done much to deliver their race from the darkness of an Egyptian midnight of superstition or error, who might have uplifted countless numbers of their fellow-men from degrading vices, slavery to their passions or devotion to low ambitions, who lost sight of these high ideals, failed to grasp with resolute mind and firm hand the real work of life, and have put a full stop to a glorious career by giving themselves up to a task as unworthy as Hamlet's when he consented to be a policeman at Elsinore and the executioner of the kingdom of Denmark.

A CYCLE OF SONNETS.

XIX—DAFFODILS.

Fathered by March, the daffodils are here.
First, all the air grew keen with yesterday,
And once a thrush from out some hollow gray
On a field's edge, where whitening stalks made cheer,
Fluted the last unto the budding year;
Now, that the wind lets loose from orchard spray
Plum bloom and peach bloom down the dripping way,
Their punctual gold through the wet blades they rear.

Oh, fleet and sweet! A light to all that pass
Below, in the cramped yard, close to the street,
Long-stemmed one flames behind the palings bare,
The whole of April in a tuft of grass.
Scarce here, soon will it be—oh, sweet and fleet!—
Gone like a snatch of song upon the stair.

—[Lizette Woodworth Reese.

PRACTICAL ETHICS.

PEOPLE, JUST PEOPLE.

SUPPOSE we meet a friend who has just returned from an extended trip abroad, and on plying him or her with the usual questions as to the nature of the traveler's experiences, impressive sights, valuable encounters and so forth—we receive the seemingly trite response: "Oh, I saw people, just people." "Just people," the surprised listener utters to himself, "why, surely, for such uninteresting diversion as that no need to risk one's life on the high seas, for there are plenty of people, "just people" here at home.

The trouble with most of us is, however, that we make but slight, if any, effort to come close to the heart of our own people, hence we are ever searching for that which as an essential part of humanity is everywhere—in specially remote quarters of the globe. Still, having gone afar in quest of quickening interests and stirring experiences no fairer lot can fall to those thus seeking after either a healthy stimulus or refreshment, than to meet the right kind of people, just people!

We make much of a "change of air;" we speak in glowing terms of the prescriptions which we hold and which are included in a course of treatment, ranging all the way from blood tonics, remedies external and internal, gymnastics and dietetics to frequent change of sensorial vibrations, but all the while forgetting the remedial agency of good-fellowship; the bracing tonic of upright companionship, the vim and vigor imparted to our mental, moral and physical nature by a wholesome association with life-giving, and tone-imparting people. Aye, all sorts and conditions of people, no less than the "picked product," serve as restorative means, "each after his kind," if we only know how to apply that which they have to offer.

Because people are so profusely scattered throughout this thickly-populated planet, are we therefore to despise them, or to belittle their value individually or collectively? What is there commensurate in this earth-life with the tremendous moving power and shaping influence of a monumental personality? What inanimate object, be it ever so beautiful, so fascinating or awe-inspiring, can compare with the exquisite transport of one soul through the action of another? What force more compelling or more determinately bending the will to admiration and veneration than the high-born thought and impulse out of the best in human nature—out of the noblest source of persons in particular, and persons in general—the people?

If ever there was a time when the spheres were singing together, it must have been when harmony reigned among the people; when the people lived in actual bonds of fraternity. The spheres, however, will not resume their sweet symphony, until the people, once "babes and pupils" of a common family, grown strong and self-reliant, made "heirs of the ages" and become founders of government, once more approach in kindred spirit, with open hearts and helpful hands to unite loyally in behalf of the family anew—the nation.

Ah, "people, just people!" let us not deceive ourselves in the belief that there is anything greater, or more supremely worth while. In whatever natural environments we move, we cannot escape, nor is it desirable we should flee the touch and influence of the people. Of what avail our graphic descriptions of places of note in foreign countries, if we fail to assimilate the personal presence and psychological significance of the people! We may live in Paris, frequent the famous resorts of the world's metropolis of gaiety and fashion and therefrom draw our conclusions about the people of France; yet neither the high seats of pleasure, nor the life of the Parisian constitute a just criterion by which to judge the true spirit of the real Frenchman. So, too, with visitors to London, Berlin, Rome. We may learn much of England through her history of struggle and conquest, her forward march in trade and commerce; we may become intelligent on the mode of her government, and informed on every point of interest in Great Britain both artistic and natural, and still fall far short of comprehending the gist of the character of the genuine Englishman. Likewise it is not enough, when professing to know Germany, to have strolled in Berlin "Unter den Linden;" to have turned away with a shock of disgust from the jovial company of men and women in a public "bier garten," firm in the conviction that all the Germans cared for was the inordinate indulgence in the so-called national beverage of hops and malt. Or, perhaps another reason for their conclusive opinion of Deutschland may lie in the fact that they have seen the living Emperor himself on some formal occasion. All of which nevertheless, affords no intimate acquaintance with the inner workings, or the heart and soul of the German people.

Hence it is not the routine inspection of places ancient and modern, in world-renowned cities, or the sojourn in a capital sought as the center of a given nation, that brings us into direct touch with the people. Thus the sentimental loitering amid ruins, poring over musty volumes in dusty libraries, however appealing to the spirit of romanticism and the tendency toward erudition, will yield a relatively small advantage in learning the habits of the existing people, or in obtaining clear conceptions of their respective states of mind, which have given rise to their peculiarly distinguishing characteristics.

Then bravo! to the travelers at home or abroad, who have not been content with a cursory glance at things however attractive, but have looked back of the things to find the people whence they came. For "people, just people," are, and ever must be, of preëminent interest to all thoroughly humanized observers, whether they be in our own United States or in the farthest ends of the earth.

SPLENDORS OF TLEMCEN.

RUINS OF CITIES WHICH WERE GREAT 500 YEARS AGO.

From Our Own Correspondent.

TLEMCEN (Africa).—Come with me and be my Mohammedan dragoman, Mustapha, and take a walk this bright Sunday morning through the Delhi of North Africa. We are in a city which was famous when Agra was at the height of its glory, and one which has mosques and tombs containing Moorish decorations which will compare in their beauty with those of the famed cities of India. There are doors of bronze in the Mosque of Sidi Bou-Medin as beautiful as those at the entrance to the Capitol at Washington, and equal in their fine workmanship to those of Ghiberti at Florence. There are temples of Mohammedan worship hundreds of years old, which have a beauty greater than the mosques of Cairo and Constantinople, and all were constructed when Europe was still semi-civilized and a hundred years or so before the New World of America began to be. Not far from these mosques are the remains of a ruined city, which surpassed Pompeii in extent and glory, and in another direction is the tomb of the man who built that city, with the Arabs praying in and about it today.

The Ruins of Tlemcen.

All this is not in Italy, Greece or India, the countries to which we look for the monuments of the past. It is in this black continent of Africa, on the edge of savage, turbulent and warring Morocco, thirty miles south of the Mediterranean and about 100 miles from Oran, the chief seaport of western Algeria. It is so far out of the line of travel that strangers seldom come here, but it is one of the most interesting places on the continent.

The Tlemcen of today is a city of, perhaps, 25,000, situated in a beautiful valley, at an elevation about as high above the sea as the average height of the Alleghenies. It has behind it great bare, rugged mountains, which are capped with huge rocks, making them look like fortifications thrown up by the gods, and their strength as fortifications was probably one of the reasons for the site of these ancient cities.

Another reason was the valley and plains lying below. They are among the richest in Algeria. Standing upon the walls here, as far as the eye can reach there is nothing but vineyards and orchards and rich fields of grain. There are hundreds of thousands of olive trees loaded with fruit. There are rich gardens and fields of potatoes making a patchwork of green of different shades which extends out on all sides below the city until it meets the hills on the horizon. White roads cut here and there through this expanse of green, all lead up to the walls of Tlemcen.

A Fortified City.

The city is entered by gates. It was a fortified town in the past, and the French have fortified it today. The high walls have portholes at every few feet, through which rifles and other guns can be thrust, companies of soldiers are always moving to and fro through the streets, and the citadel, where the Sultans of the past had their gorgeous residences many centuries ago, is now a barracks, prison and hospital for the Algerian troops. Its old walls and gateways still stand and the minaret of its mosque, ninety feet high, overlooks the rest of the city. About 500 years ago this citadel contained some of the wonders of the world. It had a clock which was celebrated two centuries before that on the Strasburg Cathedral was made, and in one of the galleries, which was paved with marble and onyx, stood a solid silver tree upon which were many species of singing birds made of gold and silver.

Within a stone's throw of the citadel, surrounded by buildings which would not look out of place in any country town in France, rises the mighty mosque Djama el Kebir. It was built in A. D. 1136, but it is in as good condition today as when the Moors first worshiped in it 870 years ago. The buildings of this mosque cover about an acre and the roof is supported by a vast number of columns which end in great arches hung with many chandeliers. The buildings run around the court, in the center of which is a fountain of onyx, about which, as I passed through, the Mohammedans were sitting and washing themselves before going in to pray. We were allowed to enter the mosque, but had first to put on slippers, and we walked about through the worshipers, who were kneeling on their prayer rugs and bowing again and again as they looked toward Mecca.

Built to the Ghost of a Candy Man.

When Tlemcen was in the height of its glory it had seventy mosques. One of the most famous was built in honor of a confectioner saint who preached to the children as they gathered around his candy stall and whom, I doubt not, he attracted by giving them sweets. He became so popular that the Sultan made him a tutor to his three sons. This angered the grand vizier, and he had the candy saint condemned as a sorcerer and beheaded outside the gates. Shortly after this the ghost of the candy saint appeared before the Sultan and made a complaint, and the Sultan tied up the grand vizier hand and foot and threw him into a vat of cement. As the cement hardened, the grand vizier hardened with it, and

It was impossible amid such surroundings to rebuild, even in imagination, the immense edifices, the magnificent palaces, the great houses and the gardens traversed by streamlets as described by the historians, but the scenes recalled to me some of the verses of Omar Khayyam, the great Persian poet, about the evanescence of all things earthly. Yakoub's soldiers finally conquered Tlemcen, but he himself was assassinated just before its surrender. After that the city of Mansoura began to decline, and its greatness was soon swallowed by Tlemcen.

Among the Natives.

But let me describe the Tlemcen of today. A live dog is better than a dead lion, and the Algeria of the present is more interesting than that of the dead centuries of the past. I like the swing and go of this French colony, the jaunty air of the soldiers as they strut about in their fat, red pantaloons and short jackets and their caps of blood red; the stately walk of the Arabs as they go on slippered feet through the streets; and above all the long gowns and tall hats of some of the native tribesmen of Tlemcen. We think $5 much to pay for a derby and $8 a big price for a black silk tile, but these Tlemcen natives pay quite as much for straw hats. Their hats are, however, gorgeous beyond description, and they stand from twelve to eighteen inches above the crown of the head. They are made of straw as finely woven as a Panama and of several different colors. The brims are covered with silk embroidery, and extend for six inches out all around the hat., These hats are large enough to be worn over turbans, so big that I was able to put one over my cork helmet, while my photograph was taken with my guide Mustapha standing beside me.

One of the industries of Tlemcen is making such hats. The town is quite a manufacturing center. The natives —both the Berbers and Moors—seem to be all engaged in home industries of one kind or other. I went through street after street lined with little shops, lighted only by the doors at the front, containing men and boys weaving hats, embroidering caps for women and hats for men, working on slippers and shoes and working at the various other trades of the country. The weaving is all done with native wool upon rude hand looms. In the poorest of shops the most beautiful of white burnouses are made, and little round caps covered with velvet and embroidered with gold and silver are turned out in dens no better than dog kennels.

The whole of the native quarter is a mixture of the gorgeous and the squalid. A man will wear an $8 hat and at the same time have bare feet and legs bare half way to the knee and a dirty white gown. A woman will go along wrapped in a white flannel blanket much the same for wear and on her head will be one of these gold embroidered caps, just about as big around and of the same shape as a tin funnel such as is used in our kitchens. The cap will be hidden by the blanket and she will keep it so tight about her face that only a hole the size of a postage stamp can be seen. Through this peeps a liquid black eye, and it is only when she stumbles or when the amorous wind tears open her garments that you see any other part of her person. The little girls are often so draped, although some show their faces.

A Land of Queer Costumes.

I wish I could tell you American girls just how your well-to-do sisters of this side of the world are dressed. If you saw a party of them on the street you would think they had picked up their bed blankets and started out for a good masquerade. If you were a man you could not possibly get near enough to examine them, but one of my lady friends has told me how they are dressed. Under those blankets they wear baggy trousers which come about half way to the knee and above these, jackets of embroidery with silk vests under them. They wear sashes about the waist and undergarments of fine gauze.

In the house the ladies either go barefooted or wear slippers of velvet embroidered with gold. They plait their hair in long braids, and tie it up in knots behind the head. They wear the little gold caps I have already described and tie them on with cords of gold thread under the chin. Those who can afford it are loaded with jewelry. They have bracelets and anklets and some have gold rings in their ears. Even the children wear jewelry. I see little girls with earrings almost as big around as the bottom of a tin cup, and anklets of silver as thick as their own little fingers.

The Arab men have gowns of white woolen material trimmed with silk bound in by sashes at the waist. Under this they often wear baggy trousers and over it a white woolen burnoose of fine texture. The richer Arabs sometimes have a sort of an overcoat of fine broadcloth embroidered with silk and made in the shape of a burnoose which they wear over the other garments. Some of the men wear stockings and some on horseback have instead long, red boots of the soft Morocco leather, which are almost as soft as silk. Over the foot they have a shoe covering the foot to the ankle, and to this shoe a spur is attached. The poorer Arabs wear hiacks, long gowns of a night shirt shape, made of camel's hair and wool in white and black stripes.

Most of the native garments are made in Tlemcen. The town has long been noted for its good workmanship, and its laces, hats, shawls and blankets are famous. Among other garments are some made for the Jews, especially the bright red shawls which they use in mourning.

The Tlemcen of today is largely composed of new French buildings. The streets are French streets. There is a square in the center of the town where the people meet to walk about, and there is a park which is filled with great plane trees and wild olive which is known as Tlemcen's Bois de Boulogne. About six years ago the city was first reached by railroad, and it now has two trains each way every day.

On my way here I stopped at Sidi Bel Abbes, a French settlement of 19,000 people, which has grown up within a few years. Sidi Bel Abbes is named after a Mohammedan saint, and it has its Arab quarter today. The city is built in the shape of a rectangle with great walls about it, and like most of these Algerian towns, it has its military quarter. This is inhabited by several companies of the foreign soldiers employed by the French to defend Algeria. They are composed of Swiss, Poles, Germans and such other riff-raff as can be enlisted at a few cents a day. The troops there vary in number, at times reaching as many as 6,000.

Sidi Bel Abbes has its regular concerts by the military band; it has a theater where they are now playing "Box and Cox," and also a "Café Chantant," where the songs and dances are even more wicked than those of Paris itself. Indeed things are moving fast in this French section of the African continent.

Water Routes.

Boston Architects. Consider a Question of Importance.

From a Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, March 4.—A report by a committee on municipal improvements of the Boston Society of Architects which has just been made public is, in the main, of more local than national interest, for it involves an elaborate series of recommendations for the greater Boston, which, if carried out, would, as it is believed, create in the northeastern part of the United States the most perfectly organized city in the western hemisphere. One section, however, of the report is of much more than New England concern; it is, in fact, absolutely in line with the proposal which the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, a non-partisan and nonsectional body, is agitating at Washington and which is likely within a short time to result in a great improvement of our national routes of water communication, if the desired appropriation of $50,000,000 a year is secured from Congress.

This is a chapter of the report under the heading of "Communication by Inland Waterways," which indicates the extent to which every community of this country is affected by the question of water transportation. Most Americans, certainly, particularly those of the central, western and southern sections, do not think of Boston, situated on the outer rim of the country, as being particularly concerned in the development of the more inexpensive type of freight transit that is represented by canals and improved rivers and estuaries. This document, however, of the Boston architects shows that in a broad sense the New England capital is as directly interested in the upbuilding of facilities for transporting freight by water as is New York, Chicago, New Orleans, St. Louis, or any other municipality.

One of the projects of this nature that immediately concerns New England is, of course, the Cape Cod Canal, which, it appears, New York capitalists are about to build. This will shorten the trip from Boston to the metropolis and at the same time will enable vessels to avoid the dangerous fogs and currents off Cape Cod which are such a cause of dread to summer yachtsmen and still more to steamships and coal schooners in their passage round the long sandy projection.

Another enterprise on foot in Massachusetts, one which would encounter few natural obstacles in its construction, is a canal from the southerly side of Boston Harbor by way of Fore River and the Taunton River into Narragansett Bay. Such a canal as this would serve quite a different purpose from that across the narrow neck of Cape Cod, in that it would primarily enable towns and barges, propelled probably by electricity, to bring coal and other supplies without breaking bulk from the original ports in Pennsylvania or Maryland to Boston, passing through an interior country which already without these aids is a prosperous manufacturing region and which may easily become a practically continuous manufacturing town.

A third project, which also would mean a great deal to Boston, as the commercial center of New England, is one looking toward improvement of navigation facilities on the Merrimac River, the big manufacturing towns of whose valley are an important part of the prosperity of the whole section. Lawrence, Lowell, Nashua, Manchester and Concord are dependent upon railroad facilities for the coal which supplements the limited water power developed by the river. Of conditions in this valley the report of the architects states: "Most of our citizens live in summer on the shores of Salem Bay and see numberless tows carrying thousands of tons of coal constantly to Salem. There the coal is dumped in great piles on the ground. Thence it is distributed to cars and pays tribute to the Boston and Maine Railroad before it is landed at the boilers in Lowell or Lawrence. Many must wonder at this costly and primitive method of attaining an end. If we were in Germany, surely the Merrimac River would long ago in some way have been availed of to carry not only coal, but other supplies, to these towns, and all the district around them."

The example of what these three projects, if successfully carried forward, will mean to one of the largest centers of population in the United States is evidently regarded by the committee of Boston architects as proof that the permanent prosperity of the whole country is largely conditioned by cheap transportation. The report in its more general passages comments on the remarkable circumstance that the railroads during these latter years have so entirely absorbed the attention of a country traversed by rivers like the Mississippi, Missouri, Ohio, Hudson, Connecticut and Merrimac. In days when the Father of Waters was full of snags and shoals and unlighted by the government it carried immense freights. During the War of the Rebellion it proved a very useful channel and bore northern gunboats to signal victories. During the war, in June, 1863, a great national ship canal convention was held in Chicago expressly to discuss the very subject which now agitates the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, for the question was then up for discussion of uniting the Gulf of Mexico with the Atlantic Ocean by a system of waterways navigable for gunboats, the ultimate object being to augment national wealth, to attract population, to facilitate transportation, and to secure military defense in any national contest on the lakes. There had recently been disagreement with Great Britain and it was feared that the English might place gunboats on the Great Lakes through the Welland Canal at a time when it was absolutely impossible to get American gunboats into them from the Mississippi or Ohio. The possibility of increasing the size of the Erie Canal was also considered then.

This whole scheme of national improvement of waterways, which is now so seriously contemplated and part of which is already in execution, is referred to by the Boston architects' report as a belated carrying out of the plans of 1863. "When the circuit is complete," so it is stated, "it may become as profitable to carry freights up as down the Mississippi, and there will be something gratifying to national pride if it ever does become possible to thus carry cargoes without transshipment from New Orleans through the interior of the continent and on to the Atlantic Coast. The opinion that there is a future for such American inland waterways is shared by many people. President Roosevelt says: "One of the effective methods of effecting railways rates is to provide for a proper system of water transportation," and James J. Hill says: "There has been no project before Congress in twenty years which interests so many people and will prove so great a benefit to the entire basin of the Mississippi and Missouri rivers as a fifteen-foot channel or canal from St. Louis to the Gulf of Mexico.".

No publication on waterways improvement would be complete if it did not refer to the magnificent work in this direction which is being done in European countries. The report of the Boston Society of Architects quotes with particular approval from Elzbacher's recent book, "Modern Germany," a passage summing up the advantages that canals have been to Germany.

"Germany's industrial success is doubtless due to a large extent to the assistance received from her waterways. In 1902, notwithstanding the marvelous growth of the German merchant marine, its inland shipping has grown to be 150 per cent. larger than the tonnage of its sea shipping, and this increase is to a great degree in vessels of large size. The average size is from 200 to 400 tons on minor gateways; on the Elbe, 1000 tons and upward; and on the Rhine, barges of from 2000 to 2350 tons may be seen. The Rhine-Elbe Canal, the Danube-Oder Canal, and the Danube-Elbe Canal are enterprises which would require an outlay of about $50,000,000 each. The Rhine has been changed from a tourists' river to a channel of commerce, $5,000,000 having been spent on it during the last twenty years; and Cologne, which is 150 miles from the sea, now runs thirty-four steamers to England, Russia and Scandanavia, and on the canals and rivers in Germany commercial and industrial activity is developing with marvelous rapidity."

In line with the policy of spending money for the betterment of harbors and rivers which now prevails to such an extent in European countries the Boston architects recommend for their harbor the creation of a series of very long docks, capable of accommodating vessels of from 800 to 1000 feet in length. They also urge further plans for the improvements of the great fresh-water basin which is being created at the mouth of the historic Charles River, one of the suggestions being the establishment of an island, with business blocks and public structures just to the south of the new West Boston Bridge.

The renewal of interest in New England in a matter of waterways improvement, which is popularly supposed to be a matter of concern chiefly to the Middle West and the South, is in line with the early history of the section. In the first era of canal building, before the railways came in artificially to check the natural development of waterways, the Middlesex Canal, connecting the Merrimac River with Boston, was one of the earliest and most important transportation routes of the nation. Extending across country from the junction of the Concord and Merrimac Rivers, it brought to the seaboard freight and passengers from the New Hampshire towns and logs from the forests of the White Mountains. It was intended in the early part of the nineteenth century, when the expansion of railroads could not of course be forecasted, to connect Boston with the Connecticut River by way of Springfield, so that commerce might thus go down the Connecticut and thence to New York City. There was also a scheme for extending the canal westward along the Connecticut to Albany and the Erie Canal by tunneling under the Hoosac Mountain—a feat which was later accomplished by the Fitchburg Railroad.

Idyllic Life of Indians.

ABORIGINES ALONG THE BIG HORN HAVE FEW TROUBLES.

From a Special Correspondent.

CROW AGENCY (Mont.) Feb. 28.—If one is in search of strange contrasts in life; if he wants to see the process by which the Indian is learning the intricacies of civilization; and if he wants to come under the spell of the most contented people on earth, half barbarian, and half up-to-date, he should spend a few weeks on the Crow Reservation.

For instance, you see an Indian and his family drive up to one of the big general stores at the agency. The horses are fine animals—not scrub Indian ponies, but big steeds that show good blood and excellent care. The rig is a brand new wagon, as shiny as a new piano; strapped to the back seat is a saddle that could not have cost less than $75. The Indian driver is a big, fine-looking Crow, dressed in white man's clothes, and wearing a pair of faultless boots, with cowboy heels—the kind that cost you at least $12 a pair. Only the hair, in two braids, and the eagle feather trembling on the brim of his Stetson hat, smack of the Indian. Yet this up-to-date chap, who has played football on the Carlisle team, who can speak English far better than the average resident of a city slum, and who has a farm that would be the envy of any white man, will drive his smart rig back to a tepee and will stable his horses in a house erected by Uncle Sam. And he has a wife who is as well educated as himself, and who knows the ins and outs of "domestic science," as taught at college, yet who wears a blanket and moccasins, and who never fails to put a bright stripe of crimson down her scalp line when she parts and braids her hair in the morning.

For the Indian is adopting civilization by degrees. He will go far along the road, but he will not sacrifice the eagle feather in his hat, nor will his wife dispense with the vermilion mark down the part in her hair. Nor do they take kindly to the houses which the government aids them in building. They can hardly be blamed for preferring the tepees of the forefathers. A government house made out of rough boards, is an ugly thing beside a graceful tepee. Then, too, it is poorly ventilated. The windows are small, and the Indians cannot sleep in the stuffy rooms. So they cling to the tepees which are at once the snuggest and the best ventilated homes on earth.

Put the squaw in a tepee and she is the neatest of housekeepers. Everything in one of these big, roomy tents, is in apple-pie order. The blankets are neatly rolled and stowed away under the edge of the tepee, leaving the center clear. Bright-colored blankets and fine fur robes are spread about, and a wonderfully beaded dance drum hangs from one of the poles.

But, on the other hand, put a squaw in a house, and she is anything but a success. Go into one of these frame houses and you will find the mattresses laid along the floor, and the whole family sprawling thereon. The cracked cookstove will be in the middle of the floor, with anything but agreeable odors coming therefrom while the meal is in progress. Outside, the bedsteads and springs will be used as chicken roosts. But the squaw doesn't let her housekeeping shortcomings worry her. When she puts on an elk-tooth robe, valued at anywhere from $1500 to $3000, and rides to the fair or to the agency on a Sunday, astride a beaded saddle, she is a picture of contentment that any of her white sisters might envy.

As a farmer the Indian is making headway—the Crows in particular since they have the stimulus of an annual fair. It was hard work to prod them into taking care of their farms each season, until the agent, S. G. Reynolds, thought of getting up a show on the plan of the old-fashioned county fair. The fair has been held three years now, and great rivalry has developed among the Indians of each district to carry away the prizes for the best crops. A few more years and the raising of good crops will be a habit. That is the secret of dealing with the Indian—you must interest him as you would a child, and then the rest is easy. In this the Indian is not so different from the white man, who works much better when his work becomes a game.

There are "boss farmers" appointed by the government to supply the Indian farmer with seed, to teach him the rudiments of plowing, seeding, harrowing and thrashing, and to instruct him in the science of irrigation and "dry farming." These "boss farmers" are persuasive chaps. It takes a rare gift of eloquence to convince an Indian buck that he should work on a lazy day in summer, when the meadow larks are making liquid music, and when the trout streams are babbling and the game in the hills is fairly begging to be shot. But the "boss farmer" pleads and threatens and cajoles and bullies, and eventually he gets the laziest Indian started at the work of raising a crop, and the results at the end of the season would astonish the man who thinks all poor Lo is good for is to eat government rations and emulate the American tramp in dodging anything that looks like work.

Then, too, the Indian is doing wonders as a stock raiser. The Crows have always had more horses than any other nation of Indians. Their reservation consists of many square miles of ideal grazing ground. But the scrub mustangs are being sold off at $5 and $6 a head, and their places are being taken by a bigger and finer kind of stock. There are cattle on a thousand hills—and prime cattle at that—every steer and cow and calf bearing the big brand "I. D.," [illegible] rior Department.

There is hard work each spring and [illegible] the colts and mavericks and calves. [illegible] Indian roundup outfits on the reserva[illegible] skinned cowboys work hard and faith[illegible] Crow Indian takes as naturally to [illegible] duck takes to water, as every member [illegible] born horseman. Even the squaws [illegible] though to see them bobbing along [illegible] padded "squaw saddles," one would [illegible] could stay on anything less mild than a [illegible]

Like all the rest of his red-skinned [illegible] Indian dearly loves the dance. An Indian [illegible] haying in the face of a thunderstorm [illegible] and a squaw will forget all her hifalutin [illegible] cation at the prospect of keeping step to the [illegible] ing of those tom-toms. The music of the [illegible] sents the summons of the ages—it is the call [illegible] which the Indian cannot resist. The [illegible] dustrious succumb to its wiles. Old Plenty [illegible] big chief of the Crows, whose pride is [illegible] same white man," cannot understand why the [illegible] ment will not allow the Indians to dance [illegible] gone to Washington several times to [illegible] his tribesmen for more dances. But his [illegible] similar requests from many other tribes [illegible] turned down. The government is trying to [illegible] dancing on all the reservations, for the [illegible] Indian will do nothing but dance, when he is [illegible] rein.

After his harvest is in, there is little for the [illegible] do. He may work a little on a house, or [illegible] fences, or ride out on the range to look after [illegible] but in the main the long, golden days of [illegible] the bright, crisp days of winter are spent in [illegible] nomadic fashion. A little group of Indians [illegible] along the road that skirts the solemn hill [illegible] by the Custer Monument, and soon there will [illegible] city of tepees in a bend of the Little Big [illegible] fires glow through the dusk, and there is [illegible] of Indian dogs, and the happy shouting of [illegible] dian children. Blanketed squaws stroll to [illegible] side and dip water for the evening "bath[illegible] a buck in garb half wild, half civilized, [illegible] of ponies down that the animals may [illegible] camp the old squaws are getting out the [illegible] sun-dried meat, and the young squaws are [illegible] cuits in dutch ovens. LONDON, Feb. 21.—Whenever there is an enterprise too risky for a man to undertake in these days it generally happens that a woman can be found to [illegible] it. Such an enterprise is the journey lately made by a slight, delicate-looking woman from Tangier to [illegible] through a bandit-infested region of Morocco by tortuous roads known only to the natives, and without [illegible] escort of any sort. It is as though "Lady Cecily" had stepped out into real life from Bernard Shaw's [illegible] comedy, "Captain Brassbound's Conversion," in which Ellen Terry is now touring in the United [illegible]

The heroine of this daring exploit is Mrs. Frances Campbell, the author of that fascinating novel of child life, "Dearlove," and of a book of singularly fanciful [illegible] delicate essays under the general heading "The [illegible] of Life." Her husband, who died some five years ago, was a cousin of the great Duke of Argyll, King Edward's brother-in-law. By marriage she is related to most of the other distinguished Campbells who fill more columns of "Who's Who" than any other family in the United Kingdom. But it is from her own an[illegible] she gets the heroic strain in her blood, for she is a descendant of Owen Roe O'Neill, a prince of Ulster and a famous rebel in his day.

Last summer Mrs. Campbell's health broke down after [illegible] of finishing her "Dearlove," and she went to Tangier to recuperate. While there she made the acquaintance of most of the diplomats who are finding [illegible] one of the most interesting places in the world.

[illegible] A large party of men and women had been [illegible] to visit the court of the Sultan of Morocco at [illegible] alarmist reports were received that Raisuli was on the warpath and that Moorish brigands were [illegible] seeking rich captives to hold for ransom. In consequence all the members of the projected [illegible] backed out save two—two women—Mrs. [illegible] her friend, Mrs. Mansell Pleydell.

[illegible] the wife of Col. Pleydell, an Englishman [illegible] sport has caused him to sojourn long in [illegible] the Sheerefian Sultan. There he made the [illegible] of Raisuli, the famous Moorish chief, who [illegible] depicted as a cut-throat brigand living on [illegible] plunder. Col. Pleydell formed the opinion [illegible] a much-maligned man, and became a warm [illegible] of him. He earned Raisuli's gratitude by [illegible] his cause with the British government [illegible] was an outlaw with a price upon his head. [illegible] heard that the colonel's wife and her [illegible] bent on going to Fez, he pledged his word [illegible] far as lay in his power he would see to it that [illegible] befell them on their journey. The descendant [illegible] wild Irish prince pinned her faith to the word [illegible] wild Moorish chieftain, though all the diplomats [illegible], including the American representative, did [illegible] to dissuade her from undertaking such a hazardous venture. Her trust in Raisuli was well repaid. [illegible] by his name, more potent and respected [illegible] wild tribesmen than that of the Sultan, she [illegible] companion made the journey in safety. Many [illegible] befell them, but no man's hand was raised [illegible] them.

[illegible] were accompanied by seven servants, without [illegible], and took with them no armed guards, an un[illegible] thing in the wild region which they tra[illegible] where no man ventures without an escort of sol[illegible] Furthermore, they broke the record for Moroc[illegible]. Avoiding the beaten track and riding hard [illegible] to sunset over boulder-strewn by-paths, they [illegible] journey from Tangier to Fez in five days, and [illegible] little longer returning. The German legation [illegible] to do it, traveling over much better roads, [illegible] American legation, so far from maintaining the [illegible] reputation for hustling, were six weeks on the [illegible]

[illegible] Campbell, who has just returned to England, told [illegible] of her adventures today, and gave me a glimpse of the inside of the situation in Morocco rather different from that which has reached the world through official channels. She saw Raisuli, to whose protection she and her party owed so much, only once during the journey, but he made a profound impression upon her. It was on the second morning after leaving Tangier, when they were preparing to break camp. The ass on which the cook rode had bolted and so much amused had Mrs. Campbell been watching his efforts to catch the beast that she had not noticed a small party riding along the river bank until it was nearly upon them. "The leader, a tall man, riding a beautiful Moorish barb, was the most arrestive personality I have ever seen," she said. "In his immaculate white robes and dark blue sulham floating round him over the crimson, green and vermilion of his high-peaked saddle, he looked like nothing so much as the reincarnation of some prince of the ancient Roman empire revisiting the land his race had found such a rough handful in the buried past. A tall man, with an ivory-white skin, flashing dark eyes, thin, straight brows, high, aquiline features, thin as a cameo; beautifully perfect. The mouth was hidden by the soft silken beard, as was the chin, but the outline showed hard and resolute through the close-cropped hair. He sat his horse as if he were a part of it, the reins dangling carelessly, his feet outthrust in the huge Moorish stirrups. The regal air, the easy dignity and simplicity of him made me wonder.

"He uttered a salutation as he passed, the severe beauty of his face breaking up with a smile. There was no subtlety in the face, only great power and reticence—and ambition. I was not surprised when the servants ran to him as he passed, kissing his hand, his sulham edge—even the toe of the outthrust yellow slipper.

"'It is Mulai Hummet!' cried one of the servants, racing up to me on horseback, breathless with delight. 'He has questioned me. He will send his head man with his friend's friends until we are past Borien.' Mulai Hummet is the name by which Raisuli is known throughout Morocco."

"But why did not this paragon of cavaliers tarry to exchange greetings with you?"

"It was due to no lack of courtesy on his part," said Mrs. Campbell. "Raisuli is an orthodox Mussulman, and as such is forbidden to hold converse with 'Nazrini' women. He is true to his faith as he is to his word."

"You have a very high opinion of him?"

"He deserves it. No man has been more lied about and misrepresented. He has been described as a cattle lifter, a highwayman, a merciless, greedy bandit. He is nothing of the sort. He is a heroic man, and above all things, a patriot. He is the Robin Hood of Morocco, and the only man in the country fit to rule it. He was the Kaid merely of the little hill village of A'Breize when he first became famous. The Sultan's soldiers pillaged and plundered the village and the district round about. They killed Raisuli's uncle, robbed Raisuli's men, burned their houses, stole their horses and cattle, outraged their women.

"Raisuli appealed to the Governor of Tangier in vain. He sought redress from his lord the Sultan, and it was denied him. Then for the sake of his dependents he took matters into his own hands and compelled the Sultan to act. He abducted Mr. Perdicaris, an American millionaire, and thereby brought a hornet's nest of diplomatic complications about the Sultan's ears. He demanded as the price of his captive's life a free pardon for himself, the release of his men who were imprisoned in Tangier, the dismissal of the Governor of Tangier and the payment of $40,000. It was a case of the end justifying the means. The Sultan yielded because if he hadn't an American warship might have been sent around to collect a still heavier bill from him. Raisuli made good use of his money and power. He recompensed the ruined villagers. He made his district peaceful and prosperous and safe for travelers. He established justice."

"How comes it, then, that he has acquired such a bad reputation?"

"That is part of the diplomatic game which is being played in Morocco. Raisuli is a power there. The Moors esteem him because of his lineage—he is a prince of the royal house of Mulai Idris and a direct descendant of that famous saint—and still more do they admire him because of his character, his courage and patriotism. He is the greatest obstacle in the country to foreign domination. He will hold no dealings with the French or Germans. He stands for Morocco for the Moors.

Mrs. Campbell found that Col. Pleydell's name was also one to conjure with among the Moors. As an intrepid sportsman he has won their respect and friendship. They call him the "Inglesi Crony." Soon after entering the Borien territory, the hotbed of rebellion, the cavalcade came across a new-made grave in the middle of the track over which they were traveling. It was rendered the more horribly suggestive by the sudden apparition of four great giants of mountaineers, each armed with a gun. They laid hands on the foremost horses of the party, demanding to know who they were and whither they were going.

"Raisuli's head man, imperturbable as usual, came forward," said Mrs. Campbell. The tallest of the Moors drew back at sight of him and salaamed. 'No evil,' he said humbly; 'we did but desire to know why these ladies travel without soldiers.' 'This is the household of the Inglesi Crony,' explained Raisuli's man quietly, 'the Crony who comes pig-sticking to Borien.'

"The Kaid threw up his right hand to the edge of his turban. 'Oh, Seyid Abdullah, they will be safe with me,' he said dramatically. 'The Crony is my friend even as he is the friend of Mulai Hummet.'

"'It is well,' responded Seyid Abdullah, 'I leave them to your care.' And forthwith, turning his horse about, he rode away, leaving us in the hands of the four men. Fierce and terrible as they looked, they were very kind to us. They wanted the Crony to come again and kill a great boar that was ravaging the cornfields. That night their chief came to our camp and laid a pair of chickens and a basket of eggs at our feet. 'I have brought you a gift,' he explained briefly. 'I would have desired it greater.' And he was gone before we could thank him."

On one occasion Mrs. Campbell owed her life to the chivalry of the Moors. Crossing a ford, her horse was swept off its feet, and she ran great risk of being drowned. A party of Moors were passing along one of the banks. Instantly the cry was raised among them: "Save the stranger! Save the Nazrini woman!" Five of them—one a magnificent Kaid—plunged into the steam and Mrs. Campbell was speedily rescued. To them she was a member of an accursed faith—"a dog of a Christian"—but they rendered her prompt assistance. The incident presents a striking contrast to what happened only the other day in one of the London parks. Four men stood on the banks of a little pond and saw a woman drown without making any effort to save her.

Mrs. Campbell and her companion were, of course, objects of great curiosity to the Moors, especially their women folk, most of whom had never seen a European woman before. Mrs. Campbell has light-colored hair, which is regarded as a terrible affliction among the Moors, although they will tolerate red hair. At one place where the party stopped, the daughter of a Kaid paid the ladies a visit. "Allah be merciful!" she cried, when Mrs. Campbell slipped off her veil. "What a misfortune to have hair like that! You will never get a husband!" She advised Mrs. Campbell to lose no time in dyeing it. When told that Mrs. Campbell had married years before, and had a daughter, the Moorish maiden refused to believe it. "Verily," she remarked "it is easy for the Nazrini to lie—who would wed a woman with hair like that?" But her doubts concerning Mrs. Campbell's veracity did not cause her to neglect the Moorish law of hospitality to the stranger. She left behind her a gift of fresh milk and eggs which were exceedingly welcome.

A strange and wonderfully picturesque people are the Moors as Mrs. Campbell describes them. She is convinced that by some mysterious method, akin to telepathy, they disseminate intelligence among themselves. Two days out from Fez she was stricken with a fever, but continued on the journey at undiminished speed. Forty miles from Fez they were met by some horsemen who had been dispatched from the city with medicines for her.

"Everybody in Fez knew that we were coming, and everybody there knew also that I was ill," she said. "Yet it was impossible that by any ordinary method tidings of my condition could have reached them so far in advance of our arrival as to admit of relief reaching us forty miles from the city."

Sun Spots and Earth.

PROBLEM BEING STUDIED BY MANY AMERICAN INSTITUTIONS.

By a Special Contributor.

UPON this vexed problem of sun spots—what they really are and how they affect earth, and man—our astronomers and solar physicists are now at work, hammer and tongs.

The United States naval observatory, the United States astro-physical observatory, the various United States magnetic observatories, and the United States weather bureau's new research observatory are all attacking the question with an indefatigability which augurs well for an early solution. The Carnegie Institution of Washington has launched a floating magnetic observatory which is to ply the oceans and make measurements throughout an entire sun-spot cycle of eleven years, and has commenced a systematic study of the problem at its new solar observatory on Mount Wilson, California.

Every sun spot visible in Washington for more than nine years has been carefully photographed at the United States naval observatory by George H. Peters, in charge of the photoheliograph—or what we might call the solar camera—of that institution. After hearing of the appearance upon Mr. Peters's negatives of the great spot, which now has the world by the ears, the writer applied at the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey and asked if its magnetic observatory at Cheltenham, Md., had observed any unusual phenomena. From the superintendent of the survey he obtained the statement that soon after the great spot had come well into view from around the eastern edge of the sun "a severe magnetic storm" had been observed by the instruments at Cheltenham, and that it had continued for nearly two days. The maximum disturbance lated continuously for about five hours, during which time the magnetic needle fluctuated about one-half degree on either side of the normal, and the range in the intensity of the magnetic force during the storm was about 1 per cent. of the total of the earth's magnetism in the region of the observatory. All of the other magnetic observatories of the world will probably report similar phenomena. At the time of the last great sun spot visitation—October, 1903—the writer obtained a similar report from the coast survey—that its Cheltenham station had observed an unusually severe magnetic storm lasting over four days.

This big solar camera, daily employed in the government's search for sun spots, stretches out, north and south, over the lawn of the Naval Observatory Park, and covers about fifty feet, over all. Its box is a sung little cottage—more pretentious than many an abode of man. Inside there is a dark room where, upon a pedestal, stands the holder, daily renewed with the photographic plate which reproduces the image of the sun. This image, entering a five-foot lens at the north end of the structure, is projected through a long shingled shed which has the function of the bellows of our portable cameras. The lens receives the sun's image from a movable reflector of unsilvered glass mounted upon a pier of masonry and directed toward the sun.

By courtesy of Rear Admiral Asa Walker, superintendent of the naval observatory, the writer is enabled to reproduce with this article a photograph made directly from Mr. Peters's best negative of the sun spot now so much in the limelight. Examination of the negative shows that the great spot is really a great cluster of separate mottlings. This cluster, taken as a whole, measures about 130,000 miles long by about 50,000 miles wide. In other words, a vast cross made by placing six earths side by side in one direction and sixteen earths end to end in the other direction would fit snugly into this space.

But we were speaking, too, about the magnetic phenomena which accompany these eruptions upon the sun's face. In the past few years the government has erected magnetic observatories upon Mount Weather, Va.; Vieques Island, P. R.; Oahu Island, Hawaii; at Sitka, Alaska, and Cheltenham, Md. That at Mt. Weather is an adjunct of the new research observatory of the United States Weather Bureau lately erected upon that crest of the Blue Ridge Mountains, while the others named are maintained by the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Measuring Magnetic Storms.

In these observatories delicate instruments are constantly making record of that fluctuating, pulsating, magnetic climate which bathes earth and which is distinct from the "weather" of the meteorologist. Of these instruments the magnet is the sensitive hand, as it is in the compass. In one the magnet, delicately poised to move horizontally—like the needle of the mariner—measures the magnetic variation from the true north and south. In another the magnet, poised to seesaw upon a vertical plane, measures changes in the magnetic intensity of the earth. Each of these magnet bars, however balanced, carries a minute searchlight, which reflects a sharp beam upon a moving sheet of photographic paper. As these little spots of light travel across the paper they leave black paths behind them. Since the paper is renewed at a given hour every day, the record of the earth's magnetic climate is to be kept as perpetually as were the fires in the Temple of Vesta. Where these paths appear straight upon the paper the earth's magnetism has been uniform, but where they appear jagged and zigzag there is evidence of a magnetic storm—not a thunder-storm or "electric storm," but one of those silent visitations of "earth currents" which disturb the mariner's and surveyors' compasses and frequently cause trouble on telegraph lines.

Studying Weather Effects.

The influence of sun spots upon weather is being very carefully studied at the United States astrophysical observatory, Washington, by C. G. Abbott, in charge of that interesting institution. Mr. Abbott's observations up to date indicate that general climatic changes upon earth may be regulated by the increase or decrease of sun spots as well as by changes in the haziness of the sun's atmosphere, and in the extent of the little bright spots called "faculae"—which are scattered over the sun. Soon after our previous great sun-spot visitation in 1903—the astrophysical observatory noted a fall in the sun's radiation of 10 to 13 per cent. This was the sun-spot appearance which seems to have caused the great magnetic storm similar to that accompanying this present sun-spot visitation. It will be of interest to see whether this observatory's instruments show a similar falling off in the sun's heat, following the present sun spots and the magnetic storm which came with them.

Should the present spots cause the sun's radiation to fall off, as did those of 1903, earth would not feel the change for a week or more. The sun being such an enormous body, it would not recover from a loss of 10 per cent of radiation in probably three or four months. If the sun-spot effects of 1903 are to be repeated a cold spring will result this year.

Prominences, Not Holes.

Sun-spot study in still newer fields is being carried on by the Carnegie Institution at its new solar observatory on Mount Wilson, Cal. A very ingenious instrument installed there automatically rings an electric alarm whenever a magnetic storm commences and summons the astronomers to the solar telescope. Just as astronomers can obtain the rainbow band, or "solar spectrum," by passing a sunbeam through the prism of a "spectroscope," they can obtain a spectrum of the rays from a sun spot taken singly. This work is being done at the solar observatory upon an elaborate scale. The astronomers find sun spots surrounded by extensive cloudlike masses of vapor from boiling calcium which sometimes overspread the smaller spots and hide them completely. Heretofore astronomers have measured the force of sun spots by the total dark area of sun spots, but Prof. Hale, director of the solar observatory, thinks that their disturbances can be measured better by the extent of these masses of calcium vapor described. He is comparing the area and brightness of these with the history of magnetic storms on earth. With his great 60- and 100-inch reflecting telescopes—which will be the two most powerful in the world—Prof. Hale will search the red stars for sun spots. If he finds thereon, as suspected, a greater number than appear upon the sun he will prove that as our sun grows colder and advances toward the condition of these red sister suns the spots on its surface will also increase in number.

"The true cause of the darkness of sun spots is not understood, and it is even uncertain whether they are hollows or elevated regions," says Prof. Hale.

Sun spots were seen by the naked eye before the invention of the telescope, and were supposed to be planets passing between the earth and the sun. That they increase and decrease in cycles, reaching a maximum frequency once in every eleven years, was first discovered by Hofrath Schwabe, magistrate of a little German town. With a small telescope he counted the spots every clear day for forty years, commencing in 1826. Eminent astronomers throughout the world had with more powerful instruments observed the sun for a long while without making the discovery which rewarded this obscure but industrious amateur. At first he was not believed, but when the records of the ... were obtained they bore him out, and he was given ... credit.

Deductions.

The controversy as to how sun spots affect the earth has waged with increasing heat since the announcement of this magistrate's discovery. About all the phenomena affecting earth and man have been reduced to charts and "curves," and compared with the sun-spot schedule. On the basis of such statistics attempts have been made to hold sun spots directly responsible for fluctuations in the price of wheat, for business panics, cyclones, visitations of Asiatic cholera and numerous other conditions and catastrophes. Of course such industrious statisticians, by throwing out the years which do not happen to fit their sun-spot theory and by using those which do happen to coincide with it—as some are sure to do if one but hammer sufficiently long—are able to thus demonstrate startling things. They may show perhaps that in maximum or minimum sun-spot years there is a relative increase in the birth, marriage or divorce rates; in suicide or crime; in the success of the Republican or Democratic parties; in wars, earthquakes, famines, conflagrations; or in epidemics of many diseases, all the way from ticdouloureux to the pip or housemaids' knee.

NO PANGS IN STARVING.

People write a lot of nonsense about the pangs of hunger and the extreme suffering that accompanies starvation. It is all poppycock. The Advertisement.

CHARLES EDWARD BECOMES HEIR TO A RICH PERSON.

By a Special Contributor.

WHILE Lady Angela busied herself with the tea things the discussion went on and broadened as it went. What Lady Angela wanted to know was what her husband would do if he were suddenly cast upon the world without the income or the occupation which resulted from his connection with Austin & Co., bankers, of New York City.

"I should make my wants known in the newspapers," said Charles Edward, looking up from a page apparently consisting entirely of advertisements. "I should apply for a position."

"As what?" asked Paul Cary, their guest.

"That doesn't seem to matter. I should decide on something very comfortable and profitable. You can apparently get anything you want. At least the people who advertise them seem to think so."

Charles Edward meditated.

"I believe," he added, slowly, "that if one hadn't a penny in the world one couldn't do better than become heir to some very rich person."

"This is an inspiration, Charles Edward," cried his wife.

"Tomorrow, my darling Angela, I advertise."

"And I'll bet you $25," began Paul, "that you don't get an answer."

"I'll take it," came from the prospective advertiser, "and if you like I will bet another twenty-five that I become an heir."

The appeal which Charles Edward inserted was perhaps not unprecedented, but it was at least unusual. It ran as follows:

"In Earnest.—I wish to be heir, partially or wholly, to some rich person. A payment on account desirable. If in London could arrange a personal interview."

The advertisement was to appear for three days running. Three days passed with no result. When the letter came. It is still preserved among the most valued archives of the Austins. It said:

"Sir: If you have not already made your arrangements with some one else, I should be glad of an opportunity of talking with you in reference to the possibility of your becoming my heir, a plan which it seems to me might be to our mutual advantage. If it should be fine on Monday afternoon, I will sit in the Kensington Gardens upon a bench near the fountains at the head of the Serpentine, holding a copy of the Times in which your advertisement shall be marked with red ink. I hope it will not discommode you to meet me there. In case you cannot come on Monday, I shall, if the weather allows, be there on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday.

"I am, dear sir,
"Yours most faithfully,
"FELIX ARNCASTLE."

The little formal garden lay baking in the August sun. The sun had scarcely begun to sink, yet one tall tree to the west managed to stretch out its shadow and just touch a bench on which sat a gentleman across whose knees was spread carefully a copy of the Times. He appeared to be about 70 years of age, with gray hair and mustache. As the clock of a neighboring church struck 5 a young gentleman attired in gray flannels, with a Panama hat shading his eyes from the glare, stepped into view near the farthest fountain. He paused, looked around, saw the old gentleman with the Times over his knees, and caught the flash of red ink in the sunlight.

"You are Mr. Arncastle, I presume," said he, when he had advanced to the bench.

"I am," was the reply, "and you are——?"

"Charles Edward Austin. I am an American, as you have undoubtedly noticed, but I have married an English girl. I am 25 years old, and—I don't know—I should like to be your heir, I think."

Mr. Arncastle looked Charles Edward shyly over. "You don't," he said, hesitatingly, "you don't—well, what I mean is, are you in great need?"

"Of course, in any case, one would try to keep up appearances. No, I suppose I don't look very poor."

"I suppose I don't look very rich," said Mr. Arncastle, rather sadly. Then he added: "Of course it's only fair, is it not, that the heir should help me in some ways? There are so many things to be done, and it is very strange and very fortunate that you should be an American. Because it is your government that has my money. When they pay me what they owe me I shall be a very rich man. Of course, in the meantime I must see what I can do about arranging for you and your expenses."

The last was said with a quaint and pathetic dignity. Charles Edward thought of the house in Fifth avenue, the cottage at Lenox and the bungalow at Cookham, and wondered rather shamefacedly just what part of the expenses of these establishments it was likely that Mr. Felix Arncastle could conveniently bear. For it was gradually dawning upon him that instead of being a very rich man, his benefactor was an extremely poor one.

Something like 150 years ago a branch of the Arncastle family went out to America. Contrary to the usual rule, the American branch died out, and to Felix Arncastle came in due course that forlornest of forlorn hopes, one of the French spoliation claims. The history of these claims is a rather unhappy chapter in American records. The French, exercising the right of search over which there was so much controversy in those days inflicted great losses upon American merchantmen, among them, upon the brig Eleanor sailing under the command of her owner, Capt. Thomas Arncastle. Later the United States was in a position to exact reparation from the French government for the injuries done to American citizens. And a large sum of money in satisfaction of all claims was actually paid from Paris into the treasury at Washington. There it unfortunately remains, and neither entreaties nor threats have availed with Congress to induce the government to disgorbe its ill-gotten gains. The affair is now so old that almost no one takes it seriously.

"And what do you do to prosecute the claim?" asked its prospective inheritor.

"I write to America, to the President, to the Secretary of the Treasury, and to some of the Senators. And I often try to see your Ambassador here. But it's a long time since I have managed to see any one except a secretary—five years, I think. Then other people have tried to help me, but they have never done any good, and they have cost me a good deal. There was a Capt. Trevelyan once, a retired army man, who was living in the same place that I was in Bayswater. He was said to have some special influence through relations of his who were in the government. He spent 100 pounds in necessary expenses, so of course I repaid him. He left our boarding-house just then and he forgot to give me his address."

"Ruffians!" muttered Charles Edward, and said aloud: "That is a pretty expensive business unless you have a good bit besides the big fortune."

"I had more once than I have now. My son took most of my money when he went out to Australia. He was to invest it. And while he was alive, he sent me 50 pounds a quarter. Then when he died—he was killed by a horse—it seemed that he had invested it badly, or hadn't invested it at all, I could never quite make out. At any rate it was gone, and besides, I was alone. That is why I thought of an heir when I read your advertisement. What do you think of the plan?"

It is almost unnecessary to say that Charles Edward accepted with alacrity, even though his inheritance seemed to consist merely of responsibilities and the 20 pounds he would win from Paul Cary.

Mr. Arncastle then held out his hand to Charles Edward. There was a golden sovereign in it.

"The payment on account," he said with an apologetic smile trembling on his mouth. "I hope it is enough for the moment. I must arrange something more at once."

Charles Edward took the coin silently. It is the same sovereign which now hangs on his watch chain.

The following morning the heir and his wife came up to town and Charles Edward had a consultation with the law firm of Henderson & Henderson, who have so extensive an American connection. He was scarcely surprised to find that they considered the payment of the French spoliation claims among the three or four most remote possibilities in the world. Upon learning this, he drove straight from Lincoln's Inn to the Carlton, where he met Lady Angelia. They lunched, and afterward Charles Edward was conveyed by a hansome direct to the corner of the very street in which Mr. Arncastle lodged.

Keeping the sketch of his morning's movements in mind, it is a little difficult to see how he had found time to do some of the things of which he told his benefactor. For Mr. Arncastle was led to understand that a talk with the American Ambassador disclosed the fact that there was a growing feeling in Washington that something ought to be done about these long-neglected claims. More than this, it appeared that the Bank of London and New York had such confidence that something was sure to happen that it was willing to advance Mr. Arncastle 50 pounds a quarter upon the security of his claim, payment to continue until the bill passed Congress, at which time the money was to be repaid with interest at 10 per cent.

"My dear boy, this is wonderful!" burst from Mr. Arncastle.

"It's jolly good business for them," was the reply. "Ten per cent. is big interest."

"I could never have arranged."

"That is why you needed an heir."

Mr. Arncastle gets his 50 pounds a quarter regularly. The French spoliation claims bill is still unaccountably delayed in Washington, although his heir writes him often from America, and it is always "to report progress."

THE AGILITY OF RABBITS.

Interesting figures on the relative agility of hares and rabbits are given in a recent volume by J. G. Millais. "When running at ease," he says, "the length of the hare's stride is about four feet, but under conditions of fear its leaps extend to ten and twelve feet, while some authors claim that it can jump ten ditches twenty to twenty-five feet in width. Perpendicularly, a hare can jump on to a five-foot wall, but seems to be nonplussed by one of about six feet. The stride of the rabbit is about two feet; when necessary it can make leaps of six or seven feet horizontally. About three feet is the highest that a rabbit can attain to even when helped by the asperities of a stone wall." Mr. Millais tells how rabbits swim—when compelled to: "They swim with the head held as high as possible, while the hocks of the hind legs appear above the element at each stroke. The shoulders and front part of the body are buried beneath the water, while the rump and tail are high and dry."—[New York Tribune.

Manila as a Tourist Town.

OBJECTS OF MUCH INTEREST THAT ARE SELDOM SEEN.

By a Special Contributor.

JAPAN and the Chinese cities of Shanghai and Canton have been so successful with their tourist-winning displays that Manila has been thought to be an uninteresting old town not worth going to see. This idea has been encouraged by the officers of some of the trans-Pacific liners, who have lost no opportunity to warn the traveler against the dullness and misery of the "city of fever and mosquitoes." The fact that the steamers in question do not call at the port of Manila is not always given its full significance by the uninitiated tourist.

Manila is one of the most fascinating cities of the world for the man who likes to hunt out for himself scenes that are new and strange. He can have all the zest of original discovery in a field that has not been mined out and devastated by globe trotters and professional guides. In the walled city alone there is a vast wealth of things of high historic interest to the antiquarian. There are enough old churches and convents and libraries and chapels and sacristies and organs to make any place famous round the world if once they are labeled and guide-booked. There are monuments and shrines and relics enough to scatter over a continent, and there are the walls and the gates and Fort Santiago. When these places become known and their history is rescued from their present limbo of old Spanish documents, Intramuros will come to its own.

These things must be found out. Bare walls of mud and mortar are not inspiring, and thousands of Americans in Manila have for years passed daily these dumb exteriors that hide things of rarest historical values, if once explored.

The obscurity of these points of interest is their chief drawback. The idea of a Filipino guide makes the American resident smile. The extent of the things that the average "cochero" does not know past belief. No one knows the whole them know only the principal streets heard of Malabon, Malibay and other has heard of heaven, for that matter, all in the same place for all that he kn se, señor," is the stock answer to the tions.

If Manila could be set down in ticketed and guide-booked, it would the tourist would be led about by a while he looks like a sucker and feels ing to the cut-and-dried formula human phonograph who points out the hand while he reaches for a tip with the

The very life of the streets is full of who in the love of humanity holds inner forces. If some district of Manila in America it would be a tourist resort would gaze at the narrow streets, houses, the traces of Spain everywhere, carretelas, with the little pony trying feet on the ground; the one-mile-per- brown children dressed in nature's own; kets, the crooked "esteros" with water-side laundries; the straight-sh footed women; the picturesque nipa laneous tiendas, and everywhere the contented native, apparently waiting turn him up by running over him! would be of interest in Europe, they Manila.

Useful Boy, Useful Calf.

HOW STREETS OF AN IOWA TOWN ARE CLEARED OF SNOW.

From a Special Correspondent.

RICEVILLE (Iowa) March 5.—To the genius and enterprise of a fourteen-year-old boy and the strength of a yearling steer, is due the fact that the sidewalks and crossings of this town have been kept clear of snow this winter.

At daylight every morning following a snowstorm Vincent Vance has crawled from a warm bed, poked his way to the barn, harnessed "Jerry," his yearling steer, hitched him to a scientifically-constructed plow, planned and built by the boy, and gone out to battle with drifted sidewalks. By the time the people, generally, were getting kitchen fires built, the sidewalks of the town were clean and "Jerry" was munching his reward of oats in the barn.

A year ago this spring, Vincent's father, who buys cattle, gave the boy a calf, pedigreeless and scrawny. In two months the calf, in harness, was hauling the boy about town in a home-made wagon. Last fall the boy had an opportunity to sell the calf to a party who had been attracted by the outfit, at double the price of unbroken calves.

Vincent hesitated to part with his useful bovine motive power, even at a fancy price, until his father told him he could have an undersized yearling steer he had just brought to town with a bunch picked up in North Dakota. And so Vincent sold the calf and put the money in the bank.

When the boy came to interview the yearling steer, he found a wild-eyed "critter" about as tame as a wolf. The steer's life had been spent on a Dakota ranch, and it had never known any restraining agency, and was in a state of constant terror. This was the animal Vincent Vance was to "break" and domesticate.

How he did "break" the steer, even his parents cannot explain, but this much is true, that inside a week "Jerry," as he was named, was pulling the home-made wagon about town as calmly as the calf had pulled it a few weeks previously. Mr. Vance sneaked out to the barn one day when Vincent was giving "Jerry" a lesson, to note, if possible, the secret of the boy's success in removing the "wild" from calves, and found his son with his arms around the steer's neck, talking to the animal as he would have talked to a playmate.

Vincent, himself, does not appear to regard the breaking of a wild yearling Dakota steer as much of an accomplishment, and thinks he could tame one every week. He says his method is simply to get the confidence and good will of the animal—after that it is easy. As soon as the steer learned that the boy had no designs upon his person and had become familiar with the barn and the stall, Vincent showed him the bit and bridle he was expected to wear. After some persuasion he induced the beast to allow the bit to be inserted into its mouth. Here the lesson stopped for an oat lunch. Later in the day the bit was again slipped into the steer's mouth, and then came more oats. In the course of a day or two the bridle was put on and left on for a time. The day following a portion of the harness was fastened on, and the next day the harness was all adjusted and left on for a couple of hours.

After a month of experience the steer is as eager for the harness and snow plow or wagon as a fire-engine horse to get into the street after the gong sounds. When Vincent opens the barn door the calf tosses its head, frisks about and indicates in every possible way except by the use of language, that it is ready for business.

The entire outfit is the work of this 14-year-old-boy operating practically with nothing but an old knife, saw, hatchet, some boards and worthless straps. He also built a large sled with a brake of such ingenious design that men declare it to be entirely practicable for large bobs or cutters. By touching a lever a spring is released which throws out iron points, bringing the sled to a sudden stop.

In addition to keeping the sidewalks free from snow this winter the boy has made considerable money delivering goods for storekeepers and people. The steer can be driven up to anything, stops instantly when "whoa" is spoken, and stands without hitching. This spring and summer Vincent expects to make a snug sum of money plowing and cultivating gardens. The steer seems to have a personal interest in all that is to be done, and when the load is heavy, it gets right down and digs like an old horse. It has been of great help to Mr. Vince this winter is loading cattle into stock cars, Vincent driving "Jerry" to the point desired and the cattle following.

Vincent attends school regularly, and keeps up with all his classes, working mornings and nights. Since he was a small child he has been very fond of animals, and is of a constructive disposition. VINCENT VANCE AND HIS STEER.

END OF A THRILLING RACE.

But if seconds were centuries in the repairing work the reverse applied to the approaching Italian car. It seemed but the fraction of a moment before a vague speck appeared two miles away on the course. It swiftly became a cloud, then a dreaded outline, and with a sudden rush and roar Lancia thundered by and was gone. Added to this depressing knowledge, an awkward mechanic placed the new rim on wrong, and my brain began whirling. Four hours or more in a vehicle careening at the rate of a mile a minute had destroyed not only my continence but my sense of perspective. I tried to assist in the repairing, but adjudged distances so poorly as to grasp the air many times in trying to catch hold of the tire. The seconds lengthened into one, two, three interminable minutes before the repairing was finished. Then, refreshed by the beverage, with all numbness gone and with still a glimpse of hope beckoning vaguely, we were away again, this time with every ounce of power in play, with care and caution thrown to the winds and with everything hazarded in a genuine death gamble.

There as no more stopping or slackening at turns, no further fear or concern over the reckless crowds that, by this time, were pressing so far on to the course that for many miles there was only a narrow lane open between staring human walls. And the climax?

A mile from the finish it became evident that the dense mass of spectators was beyond control. Daredeviltry was in the atmosphere. Lancia, of course, had finished. But how long ago? We had started ten minutes after him and hence had that much time to our credit. Had it been overcome by Lancia or had we a fighting chance? Evidently, from the cheering of the vast throng. As in a trance a bugle sounded, and the next moment, with a flash and volley, the Darracq was over the tape—a winner, on the time limit, as the roar of greeting announced plainer than words. Vive la France!—[Louis Wagner, in Outing Magazine.

The King of Cananea.

HOW COL. GREENE RULES THRONE OF HIS OWN CONSTRUCTION.

By a Special Contributor.

AN American king in a foreign land—there is a flavor of fiction in the very thought of it. But if any there be who doubt, let the skeptic journey down to the Cananea district, State of Sonora, Mexico, and there behold a native New Yorker seated, in a figurative sense, upon a throne of his own construction.

This person of kingly consequence is Col. William C. Greene—and yet, a glance into yesteryears reveals a time, not so very long ago, when the regulation cowboy wage of "forty dollars a month and keep" appealed to him convincingly.

In Wall street, Col. Greene is known as the Cananea copper king; in Arizona and elsewhere in the Southwest adown the Rio Grande, old-timers still regard him as the cowboy king; while over the line in Mexico, the natives salaam and mention his name along with Porfirio Diaz, and be it known that while Diaz is nominally President of the republic of Mexico, he is in fact and practice, looked upon by his people as a ruler after the fashion of European bureaucracy. The strong personality of Diaz bends the will of his subjects into cheerful and reverential conformity with Diaz ideas—and as Diaz rules over all Mexico, just so in relative measure does Col. Greene rule over the Cananea district.

No need for the romance writer to delve into the realms of fiction in search of picturesque characters, when there is in real life such a man as Col. Greene. He has two homes, one in New York at a fashionable hotel, where his apartments are engaged by the year, and another at Cananea. Whether astride a Mexican broncho galloping across Sonora's cactus plains, or steering his automobile along its wheezy way through Central Park, New York—it makes no difference which—Col. Greene is equiponderant in either role. Versatility is a dominant Greene characteristic, and the colonel is clearly an international figure, fit either for a New York evening dress dinner party or a Yaqui Indian fight in Mexico.

Many a man who lost an arm in a thrashing machine or by some other accidental and prosaic means, has been dubbed "colonel," but "old Bill Greene," as they still call him in Cochise county, Arizona, and thereabouts, won his title away back in the early 80's when he organized and led an expedition against the Apache Indians. Of Col. Greene's record as an Indian fighter, volumes might be written, but after all, it would simply be a story of fierce hand-to-hand conflict, much the same as any other story of early-day Indian warfare. Arizona pioneers aver in kindly reminiscent way that in addition to the Indian scalps that have dangled from the belt of Col. Greene, there is at least one "white man notch" on his gun—but that story is told in whispers in Arizona, for Col. Greene does not relish it, and despite his melodramatic experience as a frontiersman, he has, it is said, never regarded human life as a cheap thing to be taken on slight provocation.

Cananea, where Col. Greene is king, is located in the State of Sonora, forty-five miles south of the Arizona line which marks the boundary between the United States and the republic of Mexico. It is the site of a group of copper, silver and gold mines, the aggregate annual production of which, with reference to copper, is quoted in fabulously large figures. The principal mines of the series are the Cobre Grande, Veta Grande, Oversight, Capote, Elisa, Puertocico, Ellenita, Henrietta and Chase. Col. Greene is the head of the Greene Consolidated Copper Company, which corporation is the hub around which all Cananea revolves.

Cananea has now attained the dignity of a metropolis. The population, much of which is transient, numbers about twenty thousand—as hetereogeneous a mass of humanity as ever was huddled anywhere. Every nationality of the world has representation in Cananea. Natives of the United States and other English-speaking people constitute, perhaps, half of the total population. The ubiquitous Jew is well to the forefront in matters mercantile, and the sign of three gilded balls is much in evidence.

Vice stalks rampant through Cananea, fully half the town stays up all night, and the dance halls and saloons are always open. The proporietors of these places are classed as "business men," and so they are, if banking transactions may be taken as an index to commercial status, for each afternoon these "business men" carry bankward plethoric canvass bags of currency—to Banco de Cananea, for that is the leading bank, and the branding iron of the erstwhile cowboy has imprinted its mark upon the bank, newspaper, railroad, in fact upon almost every enterprise of influence or magnitude in Cananea.

Every man is essentially his own policeman in Cananea, but the system seems to work admirably, for murders and other serious crimes are scarcely more prevalent there than in any city of similar size in the United States. No ponderous tomes of legal writ burden the Cananea judiciary, for the greater part of the law is of these unwritten statutes, his life and his property are as safe in Cananea as in Pasadena, Riverside, or any other well-ordered town of the States. In the dance halls there are music and drinking—and there was gambling, too, until the recent ukase of the Sonora Governor put a quietus on gaming. The music, as a rule, is thumped from a squeaky piano, while an American girl of uncertain age, much face paint and chemical hair, warbles in strident discord, "My Old Kentucky Home," "On the Banks of the Wabash," or some other hackneyed air, drinking glasses the while clicking in rhythmic consonance.

It must not be inferred, however, that Cananea is entirely given over to revelry. On the contrary, the hum of industry throughout Col. Greene's kingdom may be likened to the proverbial bee hive. Originally, all houses in Cananea were of the adobe type, but a more ornate and modern style of architecture is now being introduced. Cananea is of mountainous topography and the city is a series of hills and cañons, the latter being mainly given over to business, while residences dot the hills. The mines, with their thirty-three miles of underground transit way, give employment to 8000 men, besides an army of executives, clerks and messengers. Two thousand five hundred tons of crude ore are taken out daily, aggregating in the refined state, yearly output of approximately $9,000,000. This immense industry requires great furnaces with smoking stacks, mammoth ore bins, extensive foundries, electric light, ice and water plants, a telephone system, a railway, hospital, big mercantile establishment, hotels and other adjuncts of a prosperous industrial community.

Such is a glimpse of the Cananea of today.

Back a few years, the picture was vastly different. Prior to the advent of Col. Greene into Mexico, the present site of the Greene mines was a vast hacienda known as "La Cananea," and was owned by Señora Pesquira, widow of a former Governor of the State of Sonora. For many years it had been noised about that gold and silver existed there, and in the primitive way of the natives, some perfuntory effort had been made in the direction of development. Col. Greene, then an Arizona cowpuncher, realized the possibilities. He saw copper, while the natives had seen only the more precious metal, and he foresaw such as to make it of more moment than the combined. His trained eye revealed to wealth, for he had been a prospector in Safety at Sea.

SYSTEM OF ACCIDENT PREVENTION WELL WORKED OUT.

From New York Evening Post.

WITH every mechanical, say rather auto-mechanical device in perfect working order; with plates and beams and frames and rivets contributing equally to that element which naval architects call structural strength, there is not the slightest reason why the most timid person should take passage aboard a modern transatlantic liner with any deeper misgivings than he would feel in boarding a limited train for Chicago or a crowded local for the suburbs.

There is really not so much reason for apprehension, in defence of which assertion it is but necessary to suggest a comparison of the mortality tables covering railroad disasters in the United States for the year 1906, with the loss of life through shipwreck. Allowing for the vast numerical preponderance of travel by railroad over travel by sea, and taking averages on a purely comparative basis, the ocean voyager has much the better of it.

The strides in the science of shipbuilding in the past twenty years, not alone as regards size, speed, and luxury, but above all, safety, repay consideration. The modern liner is practically unsinkable, and the question of future disasters, as in the case of the ill-fated Prinzessin Victoria Luise, resolves itself into a question of the frailty of humankind. The might of the worst sea ever experienced shipbuilders have set at naught; collision bulkheads have done away with the fear of the lurking derelict; the modern automatic sealing of compartments offsets the puncturing of a hull through a collision and the danger of destruction by fire.

The point is that the great liner which is lost in the future will be lost through the mistake of her navigator. No shipbuilder in all the ages to come, it seems, will ever build a craft that will hold together in pounding on rocks or stormy shoals, but even this danger is being lessened through the beneficence of wireless telegraphy and the "sunken bell" system.

Until the early eighties, passenger steamships below decks were to be regarded simply as huge boxes, presenting, from stem to stern, one unbroken space. A hole in the hull below the water line involved, of necessity, the filling of that hull with water and consequent sinking. Such a disaster to the Collins Line steamship Arctic, the transatlantic queen of the fifties, marked the beginning of the downfall of a company of which Americans were justly proud. Groping her way through the fog on the Grand Banks, the Arctic was rammed by the French steamship Vesta. So calmly assured of the strength of his great steamship as to render the thought of the loss of his vessel a remote consideration, brave Capt. Luce ordered Gourley, his first officer, overside in a small boat to ascertain the extent of the damage to the Vesta, and to offer all assistance needed. Gourley never got back to the Arctic, which filled and sank like lead.

Thus it went from 1854 on through the sixties and seventies, until when the plans for the new Guion liner Arizona were drawn, the owners of the line, Williams & Guion, gave ear to the assertions of a marine engineer and contracted for the installation in their new boat of a system of water-tight compartments. This system may best be described by suggesting the various rooms of a house, each room of which is hermetically sealed by the closing of the door which leads to the adjoining room. Naturally, the structural strength of these rooms, compartments, in the Arizona was supplied in accordance with facts obtained from tests of water and air pressure. There were seven or eight of these compartments in the new Guion liner, beginning with a collision bulkhead some thirty feet abaft the bow, and continuing through the various holds to the stern.

The bulkhead doors were closed by hand; certain members of the crew were assigned to each door, their duty being to assemble there upon signal and seal the compartment without loss of time. This system, by the way, was not long in proving its worth. For one cold morning on the Banks the Arizona crashed bow on into an immense iceberg caving in her plates as though they were cardboard. The collision bulkhead saved her. She made port a trifle down by the head, a forehold full of water, but every other part of the hull dry as a bone.

No new greyhound was built thereafter without these water-tight compartments. The drawback to this system was the fact that it was necessary that the doors be closed by the hand of man. Man is fallible on the sea, as elsewhere. More than one grim disaster since the bulkhead system was applied has gone to demonstrate that fact. There was the French Line steamship La Bourgogne, for instance. No vessel afloat was fitted more adequately with great steel water-tight bulkheads than La Bourgogne was. Yet it appeared that in the excitement attending the puncturing of her hull by the bark Cromartyshire the crew failed to close the bulkheads, and she went to the bottom, as the Arctic went twenty-four years previous.

The bulkheads of the White Star Line steamship lying at her pier several years ago were naturally open. She was listed because of ice coating her decks and rigging, water flowed in the open cargo ports, and down she went to the bottom of the North River. A fine opportunity for a test of the bulkhead system was thereby lost, but scientists, from a study of her decks and interior after she was raised, gained valuable data as regards water pressure.

Obviously, the hand-closing compartment system, which still obtains on many great transatlantic vessels, had its serious defects. German shipbuilders seemed to feel this more strongly than those of any other nation. What was wanted was an invention whereby the presence of sailors at every door in event of disaster was unnecessary. In their quiet, unemotional way, the Teutonic constructors took up the problem, and studied it year after year. The result was the installation of the Doerr system of automatic door-closing, first applied in the construction of the North German Lloyd Line steamship Kronprinz Wilhelm. Through this invention the captain standing upon the bridge was able to close compartment after compartment as fast as he could move his hand from lever to lever. Those who, in the first days of the Kronprinz, were privileged to stand on the bridge and watch the captain pull the levers, with little red lights springing to life over each lever, notifying that the door corresponding was closed, were impressed with emotions not of the everyday sort.

But this was not enough. The Germans, not content with what had already been done, pressed onward. The frailty of the sailors had been provided for; how about the frailty of the captain or whatever officer chanced to be on the bridge? This was worth thinking about, and the Germans did think about it, and not without practical result. On the most modern liners now, should the officer on the bridge fail of his duty in time of disaster, the bulkhead doors will close automatically when the inrushing water has attained a height of two feet in the holds. Surely the contention of the modern shipbuilder that his boat is now unsinkable would seem to warrant belief. Through this system it is not necessary that a leak be discovered. A hidden inflowing of water checks its own entrance once it has risen to the danger point, two feet.

This isolation of compartments may be used effectively to prevent the destruction of the vessel by fire, while in event of explosion in the boiler or engine-room, doors close automatically to prevent the exit of steam and fire. If a light on the masthead or in any other part of the vessel goes out, an annunciator in the wheelhouse warns the captain of the danger forthwith.

Wireless telegraphy keeps a vessel in touch with the shore, either one shore or another, throughout, or very nearly throughout, her entire passage. Cape Sable sends her warnings of the bleak gray rocks upon whose fangs so many vessels have perished; ships in distress may hurry out their recalls for assistance over a radius of hundreds of miles, and the case is on record of a steamship on the English coast, the name of which escapes memory, which in sending out her request for assistance, giving, of course, her exact latitude and longitude, brought two vessels to her side.

One wild night at South Wellfleet the writer stood beside the operator, no less than Marconi himself, as he talked with a transatlantic liner, which told of a heavy sea that had swept her not an hour before, happily with no damage or loss of life. This same vessel, before the days of wireless telegraphy, was once overdue many days without a sign of her, and the impression of just what this new system of telegraphy had achieved in robbing the sea of its terror was overwhelming.

But there are thousands of reefs and shoals against which wireless telegraphy cannot guard. Within the past year this danger has been met by the "sunken bell" system, a system which is obtaining recognition throughout the civilized world. Hanging from the bottom of lighthouses and lightships are bells constantly tolling. A telephonic receiving apparatus placed against the hull of the vessel below the water line carries the sound of the bell through many miles of water, with the result that fog, defective compass, magnetic attraction, so-called, and what not are thus set at naught. This submerged bell system has passed far beyond the tentative stage.

Rear-Admiral Evans tried the submarine bells on the Alabama and Maine with satisfactory results, and it was found that, unlike the doubt which exists in the case of aërial signals transmitted through a fog, it is possible in the case of submarine signals to locate the source of sound to within one-half point of the compass.

As the receiving and transmitting devices already have been placed on all the lightships on the Atlantic Coast, it is believed that when the naval vessels are properly equipped they will be able to keep in touch with these ships from Maine to Florida when off the coast, thus reducing largely the chances of stranding and of collision.

Experiments conducted by the Lighthouse Board in this country, the British Admiralty, and the Danish government, supplemented by some smaller tests made by Rear-Admiral Evans, have satisfied the Navy Department of the value of the system of submarine signalling by means of bells to indicate the approach of a ship, in thick weather or nightfall, to the shore.

The sound of these bells has been heard ten miles away, and a person below the water line, with his ear at the receiver, catches the muffled notes as plainly as a person standing upon a hill some quiet Sunday morning. Last March the Kaiser Wilhelm II, feeling her way toward port in a dense fog, caught the notes of the Sandy Hook lightship bell through her bow plates, the port bow, twenty feet aft. The course of the vessel was altered until the sounds came dead ahead, and then the liner went straight, finally gliding under the stern of the shrouded light vessel. Another captain, a tugboat man, trying to make Boston Harbor, remembered that they were testing the submerged bell system on the Boston lightship. He went below, and placing his ear to a stopcock was able to pick his bearings and make the harbor. Unlike whistle and bell notes in the air, the clanging of the submerged bell always carries true, not being subject to the deflection of air currents and other atmospheric conditions.

Once reefs and crags and hidden shoals are thus "belled," the record of lost ships will unquestionably show a decided decrease. L. P.

A Friend in Need.

How Innocent Peter Came to Inglorious Grief.

From Manchester Chronicle.

It happened last Saturday, and Henry Shepherd didn't find it out till he had put twopence down on the bar to pay for one more each for himself and Peter. Then he went through all his pockets again and turned rather faint; there wasn't so much as a copper left in any of them. He had been refreshing himself all the afternoon and most of the evening, and, somehow, he must have paid away a sovereign somewhere in mistake for a shilling.

"What am I goin' to tell my missis?" he reiterated [illegible]. "I tell yer I dussent't go home, Pete."

"Why not tell her," suggested Peter, suddenly inspired, "that you've bin robbed?"

"Think she's a mug?" demanded Henry scornfully. "She wouldn't believe it."

"It depends how you told her," Peter insisted. "I'll bet I'd make her believe it. Easy."

"You come on wi' me, then," Henry took him up [illegible], "and have a try."

"All right, so I will. As a pal I will," cried Peter [illegible]. "You double up, an' do some agony and [illegible] back me, and I'll soon put this little job straight [illegible] you see if I don't. Come on!"

He was so pleased with himself, and so keen on showing Henry how to do it that he was in a hurry to be off. He [illegible] all the way, and foresaw a probability of Mrs. Shepherd being so moved that she would send out [illegible] for him, and make an invalid of Henry, and keep him in bed on rum and milk and pork chops for a [illegible], and he kept giving Henry fresh hints about what to do till they turned the corner into the street.

They climbed slowly to the third floor. Mrs. Shepherd was busy with some ironing when they went in, and looked at them a little startled.

"Don't be alarmed, missis," Peter began, soothingly. "[illegible] Henry's bin havin' trouble, but it ain't fatal. [illegible] better."

Mrs. Shepherd sniffed coldly.

"[illegible] agen?" she inquired.

"No, mum; cowardly assault from behind when he wasn't lookin'," Peter promptly explained. "Three men—you said, Henry, didn't yer?—three strong men [illegible] him down all together, and stunned and robbed [illegible]."

Henry sat down, and groaned aloud.

"[illegible] men," Peter went on with rising enthusiasm; "[illegible] out like tigers, near some waste ground, [illegible] Henry knows where he was he's unconscious [illegible], with all his pockets inside out, an' not a [illegible] left in any of 'em."

"You seem to know a lot about it," Mrs. Shepherd in[illegible] with a dangerous calmness. "Where was you? [illegible] didn't you help him?"

"[illegible] runnin' to," Peter protested, "but they'd cleaned [illegible] an' bolted before I could get to 'em. He had [illegible] three an' six on him, but they——"

"Do you know how much he had?" interrupted Mrs. Shepherd.

"He told me," gasped Peter, showing signs of [illegible].

"Who was the three men?" demanded Mrs. Shepherd. "Would you know 'em agen, Henry, if you seen [illegible]?"

Henry groaned, and shook his head.

"He was unconscious," began Peter, but Mrs. Shepherd stopped him.

"Are you sure, Henry," she said, "that this man here [illegible] of 'em hisself?"

"Henry knows I wasn't!" Peter exclaimed indignantly.

"Does he? He was unconscious. They attacked [illegible] and there might have bin only one for all he knows," she said fiercely. "How much did you say [illegible] Henry?"

"Three an' sixpence," he told her faintly.

Mrs. Shepherd turned, and fixed Peter with a cold [illegible].

"It's my belief," she remarked deliberately, "that if [illegible] the only one, you was one of them three, an' [illegible] Henry's money. Oh, yes, I dessay! It's all very well to say you haven't, but——" she stepped suddenly to the door, locked it, and pocketed the key; "now, you just empty your pockets out on the table, an' let me see whether you have or whether you haven't. That is, if you don't want me to do it for you!"

Peter [illegible], and used bad language, but she was firm; then Peter rounded on Henry, and said they'd made it up between them, and appealed to Henry to be a man [illegible] it, but Henry only groaned feebly as if he was [illegible]. She went and picked the poker out of the fender, [illegible], and stood near him playing with it.

"Empty your pockets," she ordered him threateningly; [illegible] and she was large, and the poker had a [illegible]. "If I has to arst you agen I'll turn you upside down by the feet, an' shake everything out of yer, [illegible]"

She made a move to do it, so Peter stopped talking in [illegible], shoved his hands into his pockets, brought all [illegible] out in a panic, and smacked it down on the [illegible].

Mrs. Shepherd stood and counted up, and made it [illegible] shillings and sevenpence ha'penny.

"What did I say!" she shouted. "All Henry's money and your own as well." And before Peter was [illegible] she jerked him aside, swept up the gold [illegible] pointing to the odd ha'pence cried an[illegible]: "There you are, you thievin' rascal, take yer [illegible], afore I hand you over to the police for [illegible] robbery and attempted murder."

Peter didn't want to go, but before he could properly collect his thoughts he felt torn up by the roots, and found himself locked outside on the landing; and presently Mrs. Shepherd pushed three ha'pence under the door, and said if he didn't take his money and go away quietly she should scream out of the window for the police. He didn't go till she unlocked the door, then he took three steps down two flights by the time she had opened it.

Mrs. Shepherd came back into the room, and put her bonnet on.

"I'm going out for some beer and a snack of something nice for supper, Henry," she said. "With your inside all damaged an' broken you won't be able to eat or drink tonight. It might kill yer, but you take care an' be in bed before I come back, and when I've had my own supper," she paused to stir the fire and put the kettle on, "I'll make you a hot poultice."

A. ST. JOHN ADCOCK.

After Navarino.

Extermination of the Greek Pirates—An Incident.

By a Special Contributor.

"I WAS a gunner on the 'Iphigenia,' and our captain was the youngest son of the Duke of Leeds. We had just failed, after a hard struggle with head winds returning from carrying dispatches to Malta, to reach the Bay of Navarino in time to take part in the engagement, and our captain measured the quarter deck with long, fierce strides in his rage. They were a fighting family, and the most noble duchess was in mortal fear for the safety of this son, as the heir was an invalid and the second son had been killed in India. The hopes of the family and the affection of a fond mother were wrapped up in this hothead who thought only of his disappointment in reaching the scene the day after the battle. Just cruising, without the prospect of a fight, was stupidly monotonous, and the crew were in full sympathy, as it meant no prize money as well as no fun."

The speaker was Aleck Brand, a sailor from Peterhead. Like ducks, all Peterheadsmen take to the water early. He had had some "schooling," was a strong mathematician, well up in Latin, much of a reader, and was, when telling this story, a schoolmaster in a log schoolhouse in the deep woods between the Ottawa and the St. Lawrence.

"In a short time," continued Aleck," we, all, from quarter deck to fo'c's'le, were reconciled, in a measure, as the Iphigenia was to remain in the archipelago to hunt down the Greek pirates that hung about the chief routes of merchant vessels trading between the west and the Levant. There was not much glory for the frigate, but no end of adventure for the junior officers and the crew. There was an uncommon grimness about this service. Every encounter was a battle to the death, if the cutthroats had any opening for a fight, and it was not easy to catch them napping. You see, under the treaty with the Sublime Porte, a bounty was paid by the Turk for every pirate captured or slain. The evidence of a pirate's death was the production of his head. Nothing less would convince the stupid Sultan. If taken alive, the pirate was turned over to the Sultan, who sent him into his army then fighting the Russians in the principalities. Death was quite as acceptable to the sea rovers as the alternative. So, we sometimes had a bag of heads only to offer his sublime unspeakableness, after sharp work in which we gave in exchange several good men, or had many heads broken.

"The work was mainly for the ship's cutters, the light, swift, lateen-rigged craft of the pirates easily eluding the frigate in shallow waters. We even had to house the upper spars as too easily seen, and to anchor the ship in hidden coves. Long pulls with muffled oars in the night in all sorts of weather were cheerfully undertaken when a brush with the pirates was reasonably certain. And, of course, failure to find them in their lairs, after such exertions, was doubly disappointing.

"A small island, not indicated on the chart, on the western margin of the Southern Sporades, was the rendezvous of a large band under one of the most cruel and desperate of the pirate chiefs. We could approach the island from the shelter of a larger island that screened us, where the frigate could lie hidden, and be within two knots' pull of the nest. Beyond the general direction of the cruise of the Iphigenia our captain took no active part in this war on robbers, leaving to the first lieutenant the details of the boat excursions. Being well up in Greek lore, however, he informed us that on our course to the pirates' island we would row over the scene of one of the ancient naval engagements fought nearly 400 years before the beginning of the Christian era; also that the classic heroes were little better than pirates, for piracy was considered among them quite respectable.

"The darkest nights were chosen for the attacks, for they were meant to be surprises. The party to make the descent on the pirates' roost were in four boats and consisted of sixty, all told, each man armed with a cutlass and as many pistols as he could hang about him. The first lieutenant was in command, with the second lieutenant and three midshipmen in charge of the different boats. The details of the attack would be decided after reconnoitering the island. As we came out into the open sea, the pirates' island could be seen rounding up against a glare of light on the farther side. They were awake and probably having off some choice piratic revelry. We could approach the island on its dark side, the first lieutenant's boat a cable length in the lead, to look out for any sentinel watching on that side. There was none, and he ordered a landing, and, with a sturdy midshipman, proceeded to get a nearer view. The pirates, fully forty of them, were holding a feast, seated about a large round flagstone raised on boulders and loaded with meats, bread and fruit, with huge pitchers of wine and decanters of spirits from which each reveller helped himself into gold and silver and other cups of all descriptions from the sacred altar chalices to common tankards. They were on a small plateau four or five feet above the beach, with one sentinel at the water edge keeping a lookout seaward. They did not for some reason fear a land attack, but their weapons were on the rock table inside the circle of dishes and pitchers. Tall, flaming torches driven into the ground lighted the picture with a rich, ruddy glow.

"Our commander decided to surround them, using boulders scattered about for cover up to a final rush. The sentinel was to be first secured. The second lieutenant, a man with the grip of a vise, and a good swordsman, volunteered for this service.

"There was a ribbon of beach along the east shore that would let us pass in single file with noiseless steps in the sand. The first lieutenant was to tackle the chief, and each other officer and man was to secure a pirate, alive if possible, but—secure him. We had to stoop as we advanced so as not to be seen above the bank. We halted at the first glimpse of the sentinel, when we were within twenty paces. The second lieutenant went on. A complete surprise or a fierce hand-to-hand fight were in the balance with us all, depending on the officer's securing his man without or with an alarm. We could hear the hoarse sounds of the carousal, indicating a pretty well-advanced stage of the potations. We heard snatches of ribald songs in many languages, even in our own tongue. But our interest was in the progress of our officer stealing on the sentinel, an Albanian still wearing the white tunic of his native land. He stood motionless, leaning on his long musket, apparently watching the stars that shone also over his native mountains to the north. We all had a thrilling sense of the difficulty of the officer's duty—to secure a strong, athletic, fully-armed man, without a sound!

"There was enough light from the torches of the banquet for us who were near to dimly see the struggle. The officer rose just behind the sentinel, and in a second had him by the throat. The Greek tore at the hand that choked him. Had he not lost all presence of mind, he might have thrust his yatagan into the officer, for his arms were free. Silently the struggle went on, the shifting feet making no sound in the sand. It lasted only seconds, but they seemed like minutes. We could see the Greek's head bending back until it was nearly at a right angle to his body, and then his arms dropped. The lieutenant sank to the sand with him. We found him in a dead faint and the Greek's neck broken. The surgeon who always went with these parties took charge of him. The lieutenant rarely spoke of this encounter, and as to the trick of breaking the man's neck he was silent as the dumb. Perhaps he thought it too dangerous knowledge for men given to brawling.

"The pirates were growing noisier as they drank deeper, and they drank seemingly in full confidence that they were secure from interruption. Our advance on them was a surprise to us as well as to them, for they were too drunk to seize their weapons before we had our pistols at their heads, all but their chief, whose head was harder. He grasped a scimitar that lay bare by his glass, and was on his feet before our commander could attack. Then it was cutlass against scimitar, the latter in the hand of a man with a wrist of hard cordage and flexible as a swivel joint. The keen weapon whistled as it circled rapidly so as to make an impenetrable guard. Out of the flashing whirl would come a fierce cut at the lieutenant's head, but it was met by the stubborn cutlass that seemed instinctively in the way of the oriental weapon. We would have gone to the officer's aid, but he ordered us to hold our men. 'This game cock will wear himself out,' he said. He was not watching the glittering black eye of the Greek, but his wrist, which changed its action to make a cut. The pirate was not a swordsman of the first order, though very formidable in a mixed mèlée. The end came when the officer slipped the point of his cutlass between the whirling scimitar and the wrist, giving a wrench that made the pirate's bones crack and his weapon fly off at a tangent. The infuriated Greek made a spring for the lieutenant, but was met by a stunner between the eyes with the hilt of the cutlass.

"'The irons, quick, men!'

"The reserve men brought them, and the pirates were all ironed. A rocket brought the frigate off the island, and they were soon between decks. There were forty-two, eleven of them deserters from British men-of-war.

"One of our men recognized in one of them a former shipmate, an Irishman with a high-arched Roman nose, a rare feature among Greeks. 'Why didn't they cut your nose straight, Pat, when you turned Greek?' the sailor asked. The pirate forgot he was a Greek, and replied in English with a rich brogue, consigning his questioner to a very warm climate for a meddling fool. They were all turned over to the nearest Turkish officer, British deserters as well as Greeks.

"The plunder on the island was a rare collection—rich fabrics of all nations of Europe, gold and silver money in boxes, gold and silver vessels and candlesticks, chalices and pyxes from Greek and Roman Catholic churches, plate of rare workmanship from private villas, jeweled swords, scimitars, rapiers, daggers, yatagans, elaborately mounted pistols, watches, jewelry, precious stones, in endless variety.

"Much of it was restored to owners when they could be found and what remained went into the prize fund."

Eccentricities of Dress.

THE VAGARIES OF MARK TWAIN AND OTHER MEN OF NOTE.

By a Special Contributor.

IT is the privilege of the famous to indulge in dress vagaries. Mark Twain, the veteran humorist, has established this fact rather startlingly within the past month. First in the dead of winter, with snow on the ground, and men and women muffled in heaviest furs, he startled the Senate chamber at Washington by appearing in a suit of light summer flannels of purest white. To those who questioned him, he answered that he had reached a time of life when he thought he had a right to dress as he pleased, and as white caught his fancy, he would probably wear it to the exclusion of everything else, till some new idea pleased him. Carrying this idea to its logical conclusion, he has just blossomed out in a still more surprising rig, a snow-white evening dress suit. Trousers, vest and coat are white, and in place of the conventional top coat the humorist wears a white cloak similar to those that are usually pictured on the shoulders of Spanish dons of the seventeenth century.

If any ordinary man took such sartorial liberties, all kinds of disrespectful comment would be made, but genius can safely step where mediocrity fears to tread.

Thus the political fame of Timothy Woodruff, former Lieutenant-Governor of New York, was largely made by the lurid waistcoats he wore when he went to the Philadelphia National Republican Convention of 1900, as a candidate for the Vice-Presidential nomination.

This was in the days before the colored vest had come to its present state of brilliance, but now John L. Sullivan, for twelve years champion prize fighter of the world, wears a vest that would shame the most gorgeous one that Woodruff ever knew. It is a bright green and white in bars. If any other man than the former champion let loose such a garment, the police would take action, but it is voted excellent taste on part of a celebrity like John L.

No man ranks higher in the world of swelldom than Harry Lehr. The lucky wine agent who went from Baltimore with more brains than money to marry into the wealth of New York, and take a position of commanding social prominence there, is the mould of fashion and the glass of form. Yet he does things that would be voted worse than bizarre in any ordinary man. The mixture of a straw hat and a tail coat is one of his mildest sartorial vagaries. He wears a chatelaine bag at his wrist. On one occasion with full dress he wore low shoes and trousers short enough to disclose his silk stockings of white clocks on the side. Recently when presented to the Emperor William, he got himself up in such an astounding costume that he incurred the grave displeasure of the German court.

David Belasco, successful playwright, has for his fad to look like a minister. No man of the cloth ever donned a more perfectly clerical make-up. The collar, the black coat and tie, the coat without a seam, and the hat, all make him look like some worthy Episcopalian dean or bishop. John Mitchell, the

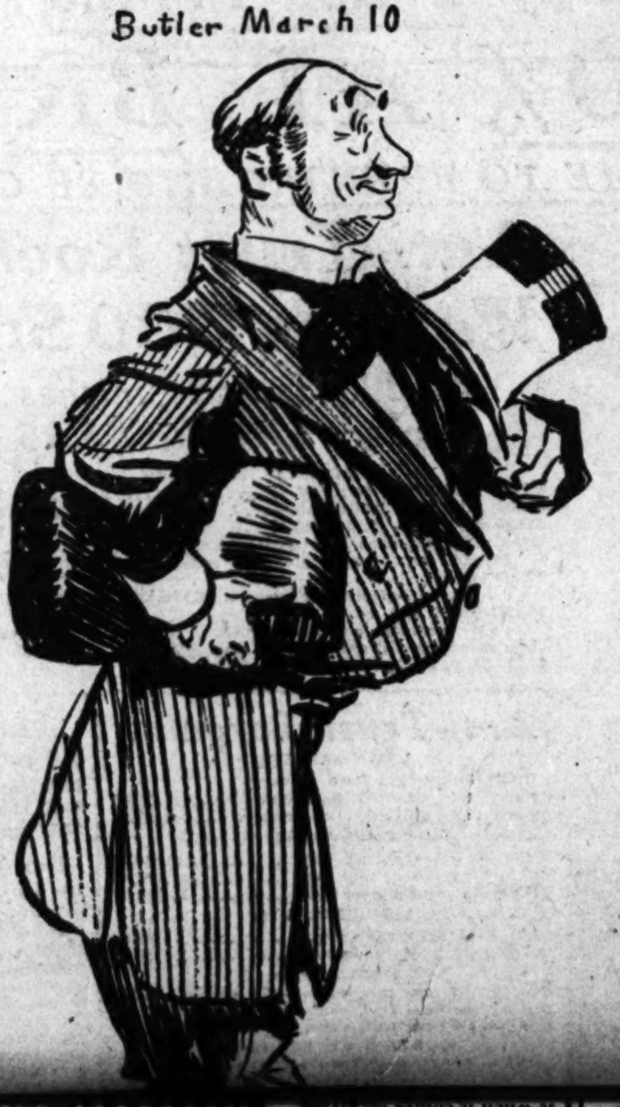
ELIPH' HEWLITT ON RACE QUESTION.

He Is Chased Up a Tree by a Dog, But He Tells the Ladies of the Sewing Circle of His African Experiences.

BY ELLIS PARKER BUTLER.
Author of "Pigs Is Pigs."



THE little man with the sandy gray side whiskers walked up to the porch with brisk little steps, and at that moment the dog, which had been visiting across the street, came home hurriedly, and, without waiting to be introduced, chased the little man up the ladder into the nearest apple tree. The dog danced madly around the ladder, and then tried to climb it, and, falling back, bit a piece out of the ladder, just to show his good intentions. He was a splendid watch dog and he sat down and watched the little man as he edged out onto a limb. The door of the house opened and the elder Miss Fliggis—the one with the side curls—came out, and behind her crowded the younger Miss Fliggis and all the ladies of the Iowaville Sewing Circle.

"There," said the elder Miss Fliggis, with vexation, "Tiger has got another book agent up that tree. That's the third this week, and pa has gone to Franklin' and won't be back till after dark, and I bet that before he gits home to call Tiger off that man will fall, like the others did, and git chewed up. There don't seem to be any peace in the world any more, with so many book agents around."

She shook the blue calico garment she held in her hand at the man in the tree and he shifted himself and tucked the oilcloth parcel he carried more firmly under his arm.

"Don't you dare come down!" she warned him. "The dog will chew you up if you do."

"You needn't apologize, ma'am," said the man, politely. "Is this the sewing circle? Blue calico shirts for the heathen, ain't they?"

"Yes," said Miss Fliggis, shortly. "They is, and we are, and we don't want no books, neither. We've got enough to do this afternoon without listening to no rigmarole about books we don't want to buy. I wish to goodness that dog had some sense, and he would chase book agents out of the yard and not tree them."

"Now, please don't worry on my account," said the book agent. "This ain't the first time I've been chased into a tree. No, ma'am. And I may say I've got so I don't seem to mind it much. Us missionaries git used to that."

"Missionary!" exclaimed Miss Fliggis. "Land's sakes! Are you a missionary? I thought you was only a book agent."

"I'll speak frank to you," said the man, smiling on the sewing circle "and say my name is Eliph' Hewlitt. Yes, ma'am. Book agent now, but once a missionary. Ah, how many times them heathen chased me into trees, just like this dear dog has! I here. I should have become a part of that heathen negro in the wilds of Africa. I stayed in that tree five weeks."

"Goodness," cried Mrs. Hartley, the minister's wife, "Didn't you starve?"

"I didn't come so near it as the heathen that was waiting to eat me did," said Eliph' Hewlitt. "With a copy of Jarby's Encyclopedia and Compendium of Literature, Science and Art handy no one need starve. I sat in the tree awhile, and when I see the heathen wasn't going away I got tired, and I turned to page 405 to see what it said about the pa'm tree. There I read how to strip the bark from the tender shoots, leaving a palatable and juicy core that is excellent food. I ate a hearty meal and looked at the book again, and it told how to draw the sap from the trunk, making a sweet and quenching drink. It got hot, and the book told how to make a tent of woven pa'm leaf strips and how to make pa'm leaf fans to waft away the heat. I done it. Then I turned to page 564 and read some of the 'Five Hundred Ennobling Thoughts from the World's Greatest Authors,' which cheered me up, and I opened the book to page 763, 'Texts, Biblical—Hints for Sermons—The Art of Pulpit Eloquence—Pulpit Orators—Golden Words from the Great Preachers—Comprising Selections from Spurgeon, Robertson, Talmage, Beecher, Brooks, Wesley,' et cetery, and I read a page of choice selections to the heathen. "Yes, ladies of the Sewing Circle," continued Eliph' Hewlitt, "I passed a happy five weeks in that pa'm tree, surrounded by every comfort of a home, and with a faithful audience of one sitting cross legged down below, waiting to be fed, but slowly soaking in the words of this noble book. At the end of five weeks he was weak, but converted, and I slid down the trunk of the pa'm tree and put upon him the first calico shirt he had ever had. He was a faithful friend, but lighter in color than most of the heathen in these parts, having eaten more Caucasians."

"What!" cried Miss Figgis, with the curls.

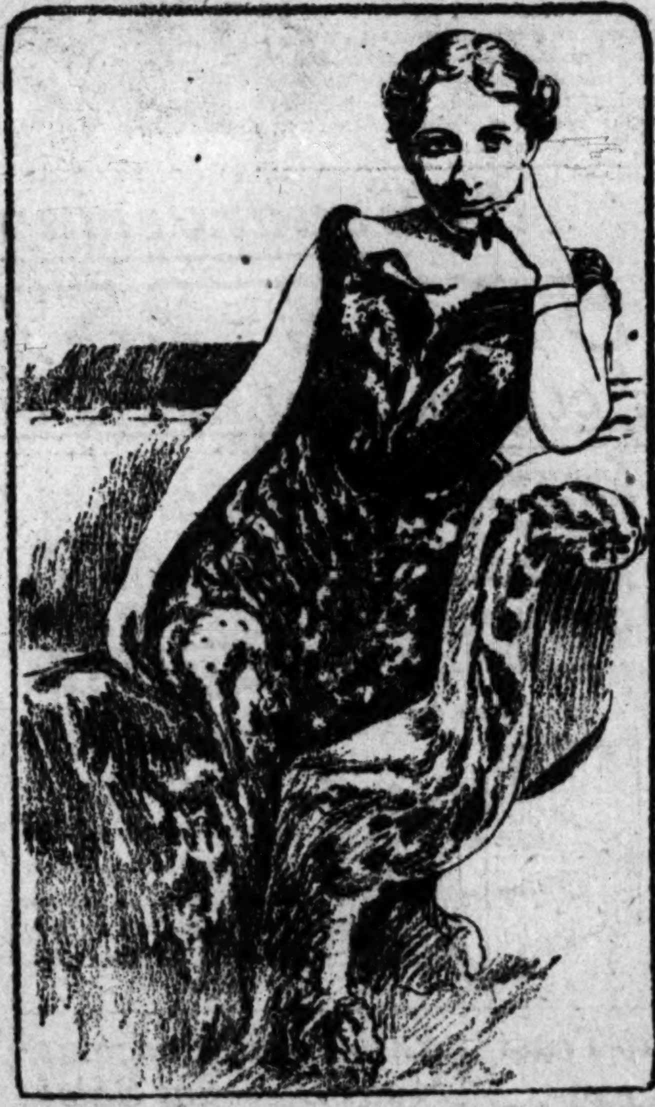
HER BEAUTY MAY HAVE INFLUENCE ON JURY.



MRS. MICHAEL C. M'DONALD.

CHICAGO, March 9.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] State Attorney Healy is expected home from Danville tomorrow afternoon to institute a vigorous detective inquiry into the case of Mrs. Flora McDonald, wife of "Mike" McDonald, who is accused of having shot and killed Webster S. Guerin, the artist, in his studio in the Omaha Building.

The negative verdict of the jury, which, after listening to all the evidence, said it could not determine whether Guerin shot himself or was slain by the [illegible] this is the real purpose of the so-called Sacramento Southern, which is projected southward from Sacramento on the east side of the river, ostensibly for a reach of twenty miles to tap an agricultural region. The Sacramento Southern will be a direct short-cut line from Sacramento to Antioch, in Contra Costa county.

"The Sacramento Southern," said one official, "is to be built to Antioch. The San Joaquin River comes in there toward its confluence with the Sacramento in Suisun Bay. A bridge will be built across the San Joaquin with ample draw space for the needs of navigation."

"All the right of way has been secured, I believe," said Tax Attorney Black Ryan. "The route of the Sacramento Southern to Antioch is along high land. I know the country well, as I was Assessor of Sacramento county back in the fifties, and was in the Assessor's office for ten years. From Sacramento down to a point opposite Antioch the line will be on high ground, nothing like that low, tule stretch that has repeatedly subsided slightly and given us trouble this side of Suisun."

The present main-line route from Sacramento to San Francisco is by way of Suisun, Benicia, across Carquinez Straits to Port Costa, along the bay shore to Oakland, and from the end of the Oakland mole across San Francisco Bay to this city, a total distance of ninety miles. Although the ferry distance across Carquinez Straits is scarcely more than one mile the time required in uncoupling a train and getting it on the big transit steamer and off and reconnecting requires from forty-five to fifty-five minutes, according to the size of the train and the promptness with which ferry connections are made. In other words, nearly an hour is spent in going a mile. Then at the Oakland mole all the passengers are compelled to get off the cars and embark on one of the big transbay ferries. The ferry run to San Francisco takes the boat twenty minutes, not counting fully five minutes consumed in unloading the passengers and getting them onto the ferry, always provided the ferry is in and ready for prompt departure. That makes twenty-five minutes consumed. The Benicia and the Oakland ferrying together, aggregating a distance of less than six miles, consume from an hour and ten minutes to an hour and twenty minutes of railroad time. In that time on a standard level track an ordinary passenger train is expected to travel between fifty-five and sixty miles.

The total distance of the future route without a ferry is 147 miles, or fifty-seven miles further than the present route by way of the Benicia and Oakland ferries.

This new main line will run, as shown in the accompanying map, from Sacramento to Antioch, through Concord and Walnut Creek to San Ramon, over what is now simply a comparatively unimportant side line running through Contra Costa county from Martinez to San Ramon. A new road is to be built across from San Ramon to Pleasanton. From Pleasanton the present route will be used to Niles. But instead of going round the bay from Niles to San José and up the peninsula, the Southern Pacific is now building its Dumbarton cut-off across from Niles to Redwood. This Dumbarton cut-off, with its trestlework and drawbridge across a narrow part of the southern end of San Francisco Bay, will effect a saving of just forty miles [illegible]

March Clearing Sale

The Second Week

begins tomorrow and we expect to more than overcome the handicap put upon us by last week's storm. We have provided extraordinary inducements in many lines.

This is a Sale with a legitimate purpose—not a trumped up subterfuge designed to deceive and mislead. The immense amount of business we do makes a frequent adjustment of stock imperative. We do business with over 400 factories and scarcely a day passes but we receive notices of the discontinuance of several lines—this means cut the price. Every day breaks suites—this means cut the price.

You will never realize the importance and magnitude of this sale until you come to the store and investigate. This we urge you to do, and that promptly.

All Stoves and Ranges Included

Every gas stove, every heating stove, every kitchen stove, every range is included in this sale at a reduction of 20 per cent. We consider this one of the dominant features of the sale, for you very seldom get an opportunity to buy stoves at a reduced price. It might be well for you to know that we carry the Acorn line—best in the world.

If You Want Credit

Instead of asking the regular prices we give a uniform discount of 10 per cent. This has a double significance when you consider that other stores add 10 per cent. to the regular price when you want credit. It means a saving of 20 per cent. to you, and even more, for it is a notable and well established fact that our prices are lower than all competition.

Our GENEROUS CREDIT PLAN has had more to do with our success than any other agency. Thousands of well furnished homes all over Southern California stand as evidence of our liberality and fairness.

The generous credit feature of this Sale is so exceptional that you really ought to take advantage of it.

Carpets, Rugs, Draperies Included

This is one of the great—and possibly the greatest—features of the sale. Carpets and rugs are sold on such a close margin of profit that prices are very rarely cut. But this is a Clearing Sale, and to make it general we have included Carpets, Rugs, and Draperies and the reduction is 20 per cent. Don't let this great chance slip by. You'll regret it if you do.

THE ROUND TABLE.

PEOPLE OF THE COAST.

Edgar Sutro, the wealthy son of the late Adolph Sutro, has recently married Miss Anna Fitzgerald, a beautiful cloak model of San Francisco. He had only been divorced from his former wife about one month.

John McLean, who arrived in San Francisco this week from Tahiti, brought with him $1500 worth of platinum, which he says he discovered in the South Seas.

John Riplinger of Seattle is seeking a return of health in Mexico, as the result of the strenuous campaign he waged for the Mayoralty last year. His illness is said to have resulted from his disappointment in the fulfillment of the promises of support in the campaign made by his friends.

Charles H. Butler of Oakland has a canary that is remarkable for its intelligence. It will answer to its name, "Heinie," take sugar from his master's lips, and will sing into the transmitter of a telephone when asked to do so for the edification of people at the other end of the line. He is allowed the freedom of the house.

Several capitalists of Seattle, Portland and Vancouver have organized a fruit and transportation company for the purpose of developing a 200,000-acre tract of land in Mexico lying parallel with the Pacific coast for a distance of thirty-two miles.

O. L. Waller, professor of civil engineering in the Washington State College, has been selected as engineer to examine the work on the Twin Falls canal, which has been built for the State of Washington at an expense of $5,000,000.

Mrs. Max Wimpf of Seattle has been informed that she is one of the heirs to a fortune of $200,000 left by a relative in Germany. She has been a resident of Seattle for about eighteen years.

William Keith, one of the most widely-known California artists, has been exhibiting in London. Mr. Keith lost his studio and all that it contained in the fire in San Francisco, but immediately set to work as if nothing had happened. The paintings shown in London were painted since that calamity, and this was their first exhibition.

SCIENCE NOTES.

Sterilization of Insane.

The idea of preventing reproduction of insane persons is contained in a bill before the Wisconsin Legislature, which proposes to create an examining board of three persons, a physician, a lawyer and a neurologist. Their duty would be to pass upon the condition of imbeciles and hopelessly insane, and to perform the operation of sterilization.

IN THE BIG INDUSTRIES.

America Makes Best Cement.

The Yankee cement wins the blue ribbon, excelling any European make. It is predicted that during 1907 the demand for Portland cement will exceed the supply. Egypt probably was the home of the early cement makers, four thousand years ago. But their art perished, the result was the so-called Roman cement, intermediate between Portland and natural cement of today. They used it for building walls, vaults, roadbeds, and the like. But their art was a secret, and perished with them and apparently had no imitators before Col. John Smeaton. He was a celebrated English engineer who in 1756 discovered that a certain limestone containing a certain percentage of clay produced a cement when calcined. He called the cement improved hydraulic lime. Smeaton risked his reputation as an engineer and showed his faith in his discovery by using the cement for the famous Eddystone lighthouse. Its foundations today are a monument not only to the quality of the cement but also of the engineer, his ability, and courage. The work was finished in 1759 and has withstood the fiercest storms for a century and a half unharmed. This was the beginning of modern cement.

Paper from Cotton Stalks.

W. H. Croll of Atlanta, Ga., has been experimenting with cotton stalks as a material for the manufacture of paper. Some very creditable samples have been produced, says the Manufacturers' Record, and it is proposed to organize the Southern Cotton Stalk and Paper Company with a capital stock of $100,000, and locate a plant at some point in the South where water power or cheap fuel, raw materials and good railway facilities are available.

New Alhambra Iron Furnaces.

The Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company is increasing its capital $20,000,000 for future betterments and extensions of the company's present iron furnaces, iron mines and other plants. These improvements are now progressing. The company has installed washing machines at its principal coal mines, also facilities for improving and increasing the output of its iron mines. It is installing at E[illegible]ey what are reported to be the largest Bessemer converters in the country for the duplex process and building tilting open-hearth furnaces, also said to be the largest in the country. The new steel plant will have four basic furnaces, which are planned to produce about 300,000 tons of steel annually. When these furnaces are completed the older plant will be re-

NEW BOOKS REVIEWED.

[BY A TIMES REVIEWER.]

ECONOMICS AND POLITICS.

Anti-Tariff.

THE TARIFF AND THE TRUSTS. By Franklin Pierce of the New York bar. The Macmillan Company, New York.

Franklin Pierce's "The Tariff and the Trusts" is a new volume on the old subject of the Dingley bill, arguing, as has often before been argued by advocates of free trade, that the protective tariff on our manufactures is no longer needed and that it amounts to exploitation of the consumer for the benefit of the manufacturer. Mr. Pierce especially emphasizes our leadership in invention and employment of labor-saving machinery; an advantage that he believes particularly demonstrates the needlessness of our tariff; but he does not stop to inquire whether it be not the prosperity of our manufactures through the tariff which causes so much rivalry in invention and the ever-increasing tendency of manufacturers to improve machinery even at great cost; nor does it occur to him that another man might argue that this very activity of invention and wonderful growth of manufacture under the tariff may be of general benefit to the country far greater than can be reckoned by the tax upon consumers. Mr. Pierce's second argument is the stereotyped one drawn from the case of England, without regard to the fact that England had not the territory which the United States had—and even yet has—to develop. Mr. Pierce's third chief argument consists in a comparison of prices before and after the enactment of the Dingley tariff. The pages on this point are few and need some examination. The case of the farmers is, of course, also cited, and Mr. Pierce concludes with an argument from the case of Germany under protection—an argument that is defective only in failing to note how utterly different the case of that country is from our own in a half-dozen ways.

In short, although Mr. Pierce brings mang statistics to bear on the matter in hand, there is nothing essentially new in these or in the arguments that the draws from them. The same ground has been gone over many times. The question is one of expediency, and the majority of the people appear still to believe that the time for abandoning protection for free trade is not yet, however features of the tariff may in time be altered. Mr. Pierce has added little to the discussion, save that his data are, of course, brought down to date, and the book will therefore find a welcome among free traders.

Speculation.

THE PITFALLS OF SPECULATION. By Thomas Gibson. The Moody Corporation, New York. (Price $1.50.)

The general principle under which Thomas Gibson's "Pitfalls of Speculation" is written is stated in the foreword as follows: "So great are the opportunities offered by speculative changes that, with proper methods and self-control, the poor man cannot afford to overlook them." The book, despite its title, is thus not an argument against speculation but, on the contrary, an attempt to formulate principles by which modern specula- [illegible] truth of Christian revelation that have arisen through scientific research and historical criticism, an adherent of the English church has compiled from various sources a volume of argument touching on the points chiefly attacked by the critics. This volume, first published in 1905, has been repeatedly revised, and the seventh edition is now on the market. It deals with the problem of creation and God's work as shown in the design found in the universe; with freedom of the will and responsibility as bearing upon the problem; with revelation, the authenticity of the gospels, the significance of miracles, etc. The book covers over 300 pages. A great deal of space is given to discussion of the order of creation in the light of scientific facts, to the nature and reason of miracles, to the character of God as attested by his creation and revelation, to internal and external evidences of the truth of the Bible, to the character of Christ, his resurrection as the most important miracle; and to the validity of certain creed doctrines. The viewpoint will be recognized as orthodox, and the book will be welcome to evangelical churches. It has been indorsed by the organs of the Church of England and by a large number of other religious periodicals. It has sold excellently in the British Isles and the British provinces, and is becoming known in this country. The seventh thousand has been reached in the fifth edition.

Precepts.

THROUGH THE SIEVE. By Addison Ballard, D.D. Robert Grier Cooke, New York.

"Through the Sieve" is a collection of what might be termed short sermons, religious ideas developed in a few paragraphs and on all manner of subjects. The work is progressive evangelical.

TEXT-BOOKS.

The Legal Brief.

AN INTRODUCTORY COURSE IN ARGUMENTATION. By Frances M. Perry, instructor in English in Wellesley College. American Book Company, New York.

"An Introductory Course in Argumentation" has grown out of my need of a text-book presenting the subject of brief-drawing and argumentative composition in so elementary a manner as to make it practical for a short composition course for college freshmen. My endeavor has been to simplify the subject to suit the understanding of students in the first years of college, or the last years of secondary school, without lessening its educative value." Thus the author of this little book states her purpose in her preface. The book is elementary but good. It is in no sense a treatise on logic, but represents a practical combination of fundamental logical and rhetorical principles such as may be of use to students of debate. It ought to be of the greatest use to debating societies not only in high school and college, but in connection with clubs; it offers itself, indeed, as something fairly unique along this line, and debating associations are advised to look into its merits.

plays upon the American stage with Richard Mansfield acting "Peer Gynt" and Alla Nazimova appearing in "A Doll's House," adds a unique element of timeliness to the publication of Ibsen's complete works, which are now appearing from the press of Charles Scribner's Sons.

The second volume of the J. B. Lippincott Company's French Men of Letters Series, "Francois Rabelais," by Arthur Tilly, M. A., which was announced for publication during February, will probably have to be postponed. The necessity of having all proofs and queries submitted to the author, who is a fellow and lecturer of King's College, Cambridge, England, has caused various unforeseen delays that may hold the book back for a month or two.

Messrs. McClure, Phillips & Co. announce some interesting news to lovers of literature in a new book by G. Lowes Dickinson, which they will publish in the spring. It is entitled "From King to King," and consists of a series of dramatic dialogues, in prose and verse, on the Great Rebellion. The dialogues involve all the leading actors in this great episode, from King Charles himself and Cromwell, down in the very last line to Pepys, the diarist. This is work in line with Mr. Dickinson's earlier famous symposium.

Mrs. Mabel Osgood Wright's "Birdcraft," which has held its own for years as one of the best nature books, has just gone into its seventh edition. Mrs. Wright has taken tihs opportunity to give the work a thorough revision, correcting a few minor errors, revising and rewriting some portions, and bringing the whole down to date.

Two books of a half popular and half medical nature, dealing with tuberculosis, have recently been published by the Lippincotts in Dr. John B. Huber's "Consumption and Civilization," and Dr. A. P. Francine's "Pulmonary Tuberculosis." They contain details of the latest practices and theories in reference to the prevention and cure of the dreaded disease. Dr. Huber has had wide experience in connection with the health board and the Coroner's office of New York City, While Dr. Francine is connected with the Henry Phipps Institute of Philadelphia.

Prof. Albert H. Smyth's edition of "The Life and Writings of Benjamin Franklin," which the Philadelphia Public Ledger described as the best memorial of Franklin's recent bi-centennial, has at last been completed, the tenth volume having just been published by the Macmillan Company. In this definite edition, Prof. Smyth has done a double service to all students of Franklin, in unearthing a very large quantity of new material, and in restoring the mutilated text of the earlier editors. Among the new documents contained in this edition are not less than three hundred and eighty-five letters, not previously printed by any of the Franklin editors.

Nitric Acid From Atmosphere.

THE WORLD'S FOOD PROBLEM LARGELY SOLVED BY THE DISCOVERY MADE BY ENGLISH SCIENTIST.

THE discovery of a process of extracting nitric acid from the atmosphere is one of enormous importance, from a commercial and scientific point of view, says the London Chronicle. Previous attempts have been made to solve this problem, but final achievement is the result, first, of original research by the distinguished scientist who discovered the new element, thallium—viz., Sir William Crookes, F.R.S.—followed by exhaustive and costly experiments, prolonged over several years, in a famous continental laboratory.

At the present time a system is in successful operation in Norway of manufacturing nitrate of lime from two experienced electrical engineers, one of whom had been in the laboratory of Mr. Edison. So satisfied were these two able engineers that they had completely solved the problem that they found no difficulty in raising a large amount of capital for the purpose of their experiment. Eventually, however, they failed in their laudible object.

Other chemists, engineers, and scientists on the Continent met with the same want of success, but the shortcomings of all these experimental efforts had the advantage of indicating to others what were the causes of failure, and how to avoid them.

From the first, the most promising of all the attempts—because of the rare gifts and the ingenuity of the scientist and the electrical engineer who have the additional $30,000,000 bushels of wheat required ten years later by a hungry world? What is to happen if the present rate of population be maintained, and if arable areas of sufficient extent cannot be adapted a" made contributory to the subsistence of so great a host? If bread fails, not only us, but all the bread-eaters of the world—what are we and they to do? We are born bread-eaters."

How, therefore, was the world to meet this prospective condition of things, with all its direful possibilities? The great scientist indicated the remedy thus:

STARVATION AVERTED.

Starvation may be averted through the laboratory. Before we are in the grip of actual dearth, the chemist will step in and postpone the day of famine to so distant a period that we, and our sons and grandsons, may legitimately live without undue solicitude for the future. It is now recognized that all crops require what is called a dominant manure—some need nitrogen, some potash, others phosphates. Wheat preeminently demands nitrogen, fixed in the form of ammonia or nitric acid. All other necessary constituents exist in the soil; but nitrogen is mainly of atmospheric origin, and is rendered "fixed" by a slow and precarious process which requires a combination of rare meteorological and geographical conditions to enable it to advance at a sufficiently rapid rate to become of commercial importance. For a long time guano had been one of the most important sources of nitrogenous manures, but guano deposits are near exhaustion. And the only available compound containing sufficient fixed nitrogen to be used on a world-wide scale as nitrogenous manure is nitrate of soda.

The fixation of atmospheric nitrogen, therefore, is one of the great discoveries awaiting the ingenuity of the chemist. It is certainly deeply important in its practical bearings on the future welfare and happiness of the civilized races of mankind. The fixation of nitrogen is vital to the progress of civilized humanity and is a question of the not far distant future.

Its artificial production is clearly within view, and by its aid the land devoted to wheat can be brought up to thirty bushels per acre standard.

The Fribourg experiments would seem to indicate that Sir William Crookes's expectation has been realized, and that we are on the eve of the development of "a mighty industry destined to solve the great food problem."

CALCIUM NITRATE PRODUCED.

The Norway Company began in 1905 the use of limestone in connection with air with the result that the production of saltpeter on a commercial basis has been solved. In fact, they have succeeded with simple and easily regulated apparatus in working with so large an amount of energy that the quantity of nitric acid produced was for the first time sufficiently large to justify a direct transfer of results and calculations to industrial undertakings. The principal elements in the Birkeland-Eyde process, as adopted at Notodden, was a peculiar form of high-tension flame which had never been previously employed to technics, but had proved to be a powerful aid in producing various chemical reactions. [illegible] about 100 grams for every kilogram of fiber obtained.

The labor of gathering the leaves can be reckoned a negligible quantity, as the wax is not the primary product taken from the tree, but a refuse product obtained from the leaves already cut down for the preparation of rafia fiber. Supposing that rafia wax turns out to have a value about equal to beeswax; this means a yield of wax equal to three-fifths of the value of the rafia exported—certainly a very valuable new resource of produce which the natives are likely to take to. In fact, the process implies no great difficult innovation, being merely the utilization of the refuse of an already well-established and remunerative industry.

INDOOR TEST OF LOCOMOTIVES.

CAN DETERMINE THEIR EXACT PULLING POWER.

Pennsylvania Railroad Establishes a Novel Plant for Determining the Full Efficiency of Every Locomotive, Tons They Will Pull, Coal Consumed, and Even Weight of Ash.

The Pennsylvania Rialroad has a new testing plant at Altoona, Pa., an interesting feature of which is an apparatus for testing locomotives running at full speed indoors. Visitors at this plant can thus see locomotives running at full speed without traveling an inch, with apparatus for keeping an exact record of their pulling power, fuel consumption and every other element of efficiency and economy, says the New York Commercial.

Although the plant was built at great expense, officials of the motive power department are confident that as a result of the careful study now made possible the road will reap advantages far greater than the cost of the venture. Data obtained from these—the amount of coal burned for the whole locomotive, the amount per square foot of grate, the evaporation of steam for any given length of time, the weight of the cinders and sparks that go up the smokestacks, the boiler pressure, the number of gallons of water required, the friction of the mechanism—these are only a few of the things that are ascertained at the locomotive testing plant. In fact, there is nothing about a locomotive that cannot be found out here. The test has the advantages of a road trial, and none of the interruptions, inconsistencies and irregularity.

SOMETHING TO BE GAINED.

In line with the policy of studying the locomotive, with the view to future improvements in it, is a purchase by the Pennsylvania road of nine locomotives of various types. [illegible]

Nitrate of soda is well known as a powerful fertilizer of the soil. Wheat predominantly requires nitrogen; and land fed with nitrates becomes from that very treatment enormously more fertile. Its productivity, indeed, thereby is more than doubled. It has been demonstrated that with the assistance of nitrogenous manure the yield of wheat lands can be raised to fully thirty bushels per acre, whereas the average yield for the world at the present time is only 12.7 bushels per acre. The important bearing of this fact on the food problem of the world has long been recognized in scientific circles, for, given a sufficiency of nitrogenous manure, the wheat supply of the world could be doubled.

ASSISTING NATURE.

Sir William Crookes, in his presidential address to the British Association at Bristol in 1898, showed that the tendency of the earth's population was to outstrip the production of wheat. As the people of most nations are bread-eaters, the significance of this growing disparity between the world's needs and the world's available wheat supply is obvious. In short, making all allowance for possible increase in the area under wheat cultivation, mankind is threatened with starvation at no distant period—that is, unless the productivity of the soil can be increased.

There is only one way by which this calamity could be avoided. It is by calling into the laboratory the service of man.

At the present time nitrates are imported into this and other countries from South America; and the nitrate industry is an important and lucrative one. But the nitrate fields of Chili are utterly inadequate to the world's requirements, and before very many years have run their course these nitrate beds will have been exhausted. What then? It is here that the scientist comes to the aid of humanity.

Every schoolboy knows that nitrogen is a constituent of the atmosphere. Scientist and chemist wrestled for years with the problem of the liberation and fixation of this vitalising element. In the year 1892, Sir William Crookes exhibited before the Royal Society a flame of burning nitrogen from the atmosphere. He showed that nitrogen is a combustible gas capable of producing nitrous oxide and nitric acid. Nevertheless, if the cost of producing nitric acid from the atmosphere remained prohibitive, the utility of the discovery to mankind would be much diminished. The crux of the problem was, therefore, to produce the nitric acid by such means as would enable it to be manufactured and sold on a commercial basis. To this problem chemists and engineers in England, in France, in Germany, and in the United States have for years directed their energies with something of the zeal that the ancient alchemists displayed in the search for the philosopher's stone.

EXHAUSTIVE EXPERIMENTS.

The problem has now been solved after many failures, and there is every indication that in a little while nitric acid extracted from the atmosphere will be produced on a considerable scale, and be available for the manifold purposes of man.

One of the boldest attempts at solution was made in the United States by [illegible] has naturally watched with great interest its various stages of development. Recently he paid a visit to the scene of operations for examination and personal tests.

THE SCIENTIFIC RESULT.

What the scientific results are we must, of course, leave for the great scientist himself to explain in his own way and at his own time.

We understand, however, that by admeasurement and tests this system proves to be, in its productive results, higher and more efficient than any of the other attempts; and promises to entirely fulfill the prediction of Sir William Crookes that the artificial production of nitric acid is clearly within view, and this "may lead to the development of a mighty industry destined to solve the great food problem."

The calculations made of the output of nitrous oxide, afterwards converted into pure concentrated nitric acid, indicate a higher percentage than by any other system known. This being so, it can be imagined with what feelings Sir William Crookes witnessed—perhaps for the first time since his own experiment before the Royal Society in 1892—the gradual conversion of one of the constituents of the atmosphere first into nitrous oxide, and thence into pure concentrated nitric acid, forming the basis of fertilizing nitrogen and various other by-products of great commercial value.

The scale on which this was done, larger than anything known in a private scientist's laboratory, was only limited by the want of sufficient electrical power to fully demonstrate the extent of its capabilities. The electric flame, however, must have been a hundred times greater than that of Sir William Crookes's own laboratory experiment of 1892.

What this may mean commercially may be gathered from Sir William Crookes's work on "The Wheat Problem," wherein he shows that about one million tons of nitrate of soda (Chile saltpeter) is annually exported from Chile, and that, speaking broadly, about twelve million tons could be absorbed in addition with ease. Nitric acid alone in market price ranges from $250 to $300 per ton.

We understand that the system is in the hands of a body of experienced English gentlemen, including competent experts and engineers, for development in the United Kingdom, in the United States, Canada, the Colonies, and other countries. Patents have been applied for, and in several countries already granted.

A vast amount of water power has been secured in various countries in contemplation of the working of this system on the gigantic scale.

THE BRISTOL ADDRESS.

In his address to the British Association at Bristol in 1898, Sir William Crookes in elaborate statistics showed that owing to the gradual diminution of the world's wheat-growing areas, due to the enormous and rapid increase of population, we were, as wheat eaters, within measurable distance of a considerable shortage of supply, unless means could be found to increase the productivity of wheat-growing areas.

"When provision shall have been made, if possible, to feed 230,000,000 units likely to be added to the bread-eating populations by 1931—by the complete occupancy of the arable areas of the temperate zone now partially occupied—where can be grown

Its Extraction Is a Simple Matter, It Being Shaken from the Dry Leaves by Natives, Then Boiled and Formed Into Cakes of Any Form Desired.

A report comes from Tamatave that Perrier de la Bathie has recently discovered in the leaves of the rafia palm a product which, by its chemical and physical properties, might be classed between wax and gum, and bids fair to become a valuable commercial commodity of Madagascar.

The process of extracting the wax is simple, says the New York Herald. The natives who gather the rafia fiber generally pitch their camp in the neighborhood of a rafia grove, to which they bring the leaves. The fiber is taken off and the leaves are thrown aside in large quantities. The wax is collected as follows:

First, by beating the dry leaves on a dry mat or cloth and gathering the pellicles and white powder which fall from them. Then, after boiling these pellicles and powder, the wax thus formed is kneaded into cakes of any form. This wax, which is very pure, will probably be more highly valued than beeswax, although yet an entirely new product. It first made its appearance in the market place at Maronvoay in October last. The curiosity of the merchants of Majunga being roused, they bought the whole lot at 50 cents per pound and shipped it to France in order to ascertain its industrial and commercial value. When the Governor-General of Madagascar heard of the discovery he ordered a sample of twenty-five pounds to be forwarded to Dr. Heckel, director of the Colonial Institute at Marseilles, who will make an analysis.

Dr. Lacaze, Mayor of Majunga, furnishes the following information in regard to the substance:

It is well to know what a rafia leaf will produce in fiber and wax, the chief products of this palm. The following are the quantities obtained by experimenting on ten rafia stalks of three and a half to four and a half yards long, ordinary dimensions, for some leaves attain seven and eight yards (the weight kilo, being 2.2 pounds:)

	Kilos.
Total weight of ten leaves	104,500
Weight of green fibre skinned from ten leaves	9,200
Weight of same when dry and ready for sale	4,080
Weight of refuse (cane ribs excepted) green	22,550
Weight of same dried	11,000
Weight of powder unprepared	810
After manipulation, weight of waxy substance from ten leaves	780

Hence it appears that rafia can yield in wax theoretically some 16 per cent. of the prepared fiber, but the experience of a laboratory would not be the criterion of production in actual practice. The natives allow the leaves to remain on the ground to dry, entailing a loss, according to the inclemency of the weather or want of care. Then, at the moment when the leaves are shaken or rubbed in order to remove the wax, this excessively fine, light powder remains suspended in the amosphere, and it is impossible to collect it all with only a cotton sheet to work with. In any case, however, it can be said that the average production of wax would be [illegible] is attached to a stationary dynamometer with scales that weigh the drawbar pull. As fast as the locomotive works, the supporting wheels revolve under it, so that it does not move an inch forward.

OVERCOMES RESISTANCE.

The axles of the supporting wheels extend to receive absorption brakes. The work consists in overcoming the frictional resistance of the supporting wheels and the brakes, the resulting force exerted at the drawbar measured by the dynamometer. These absorption brakes are a most essential part of the apparatus. The brake is keyed to the axle of the supporting wheel. It consists of revolving discs against which copper diaphragms are forced by water pressure. It is in overcoming the resistance between the discs and the diaphragms that the locomotive does its work.

The dynamometer mechanism consists chiefly of a set of lever scales. These scales are capable of registering the traction power of the heaviest locomotive and at the same time they are sensitive enough to indicate the slightest variation in the force exerted. To one of the levers in the scales is attached a pen, and this pen makes, on a piece of paper passing continually beneath it, a line that tells the drawbar pull of the locomotive. The paper driving mechanism is run by the supporting wheels under the locomotive, and by means of gears the paper is made to travel across a table ten inches for every 1000 feet the locomotive travels.

NEW PIANO FACTORY.

The Starr Piano Company to Establish a Branch Factory in Los Angeles.

The Starr Piano Company of Richmond, Ind., has decided to establish a branch factory in Los Angeles. As a preliminary, a Pacific division of the company has been incorporated under the laws of this State. The resident managers of the new company will be H. Sherman Jones and Harry L. Nolder, both of whom have been associated with the Richmond, Ind., factory of the Starr Company for many years, and have justly earned their honors. The officers for the new division will be: Henry Gennett, president; H. Shuman Jones, vice-president, and Harry L. Nolder, secretary and treasurer. Both the latter men, who will have charge of the further development of the company's interest in the West, have had such experience with the Richmond factory as to give them a most comprehensive knowledge of the details of the business, and will undoubtedly greatly increase the trade of the Starr Piano Company in the West.

The Richmond, Ind., plant of the company, including factory and lumber yards, covers thirty-three acres of ground, and the output is about 10,000 pianos, and piano players, which are shipped to every section of the civilized world. In speaking of the new move of the company, the Richmond Sun-Telegram says: "What the Star piano has been to Richmond, it will, no doubt, be to Los Angeles and the Far West, and the city of sunshine and flowers is to be congratulated on acquiring the headquarters for the western manufacture and distribution of so progressive a house."

What Liquozone Is

Liquozone is a tonic-germicide, the virtues of which are derived solely from oxide gases. No alcohol, no narcotic, nothing but gas enters into it. The process of making requires large apparatus and consumes 14 days' time. The object is to so combine the gases with a liquid as to carry their virtues into the system.

The result is a germicide so certain that we publish with every bottle an offer of $1000 for a disease germ that Liquozone cannot kill. It destroys them because germs are of vegetable origin. But to the body Liquozone is exhilarating, vitalizing, purifying.

That is its main distinction. Common germicides are poisons when taken internally. They are impossible, [illegible] cases considered incurable were cured.

That was five years ago. Since then millions of people in every part of the world have shared in the benefits of this invention. Nearly every hamlet, every neighborhood, has living examples of its power. Now we ask you to let it do for you what it did for them.

Germ Diseases

Most of our sickness has, in late years, been traced to germ attacks. Some germs—as in skin troubles—directly attack the tissues. Some create toxins, causing such troubles as Rheumatism, Blood Poison, Kidney Disease and nerve weakness. Some destroy vital organs, as in Consumption. Some—like the germs of Catarrh—create inflammation; some cause indigestion. In one of these ways, nearly every serious ailment is a germ result.

[illegible] to let the product itself show you what it can do. In justice to yourself, please accept it today, for it places you under no obligations whatever.

FRIDAY, THE THIRTEENTH. By Thomas W. Lawson. Doubleday, Page & Co., New York. (Price $1.50.)

Thomas Lawson's novel of frenzied finance is ready in book form. Published serially, it attracted a great deal of attention, and will no doubt find a considerable sale under one cover. It must be the lesson it draws that will give it the sale, however, since the story itself is sensationally improbable in its two tragic climaxes—even if in one it might have had verisimilitude; and since it is otherwise only very moderately well written.

It relates how Robert Brownley, speculator, out of love for a beautiful girl and for the purpose of aiding her in the recovery of her father's lost fortune, manipulates the market in such manner as to win millions, and of course causes, conversely, the loss of the same to others; of how this loss brings about a tragedy in the girl's life which unseats her reason; and of how, just as that reason is at last restored, a second speculative manipulation of Browniey's, by which he endeavors to make restitution to those he has robbed, brings about a second tragedy which this time causes the death of the one he loves, by shock. The lesson taught is a good one; unfortunately, it would have been far stronger if the story itself were more convincing.

VERSE.

A Negro Poet.

FOR YOUR SWEET SAKE. By James E. McGirt. The John C. Winston Company, Philadelphia.

A small book of verse bound in blue and bearing the title "For Your Sweet Sake," has for frontispiece the picture of a good looking young colored man with an intelligent face. The verse is not notable, and the peculiar spelling of most of the poems represents no known dialect, negro or other; but there are a few things in the collection that are of fair merit, as, for instance, "The Spirit of the Oak:"

"The spirit of the oak am I,
With head uplifted to the sky,
Though hail and storm beat in my face,
Through weal or woe I hold my place,
With head uplifted to the sky,
The spirit of the oak am I.

"Birds I have sheltered many a year,
They hear the storm, desert in fear,
The strenuous eagle strives to stay,
But ah! at last his heart gives way,
He stretches forth his feathered form,
And sails to heaven above the storm.

"Devoid of every earthly friend,
I stand undaunted to the end,
With head uplifted to the sky—
The spirit of the oak am I.

"And when the raging storm is o'er,
My feathered friends return once more,
And find me standing calm and free;
They chirp aloud and sing with glee,
With outstretched arm I bid them rest,
I hold no malice in my breast,
But welcome every passer-by—
The spirit of the oak am I."

As by so young a man as Mr. McGirt's picture shows him, the work gives promise; but he should make a study of written dialect if he intends to use this.

RELIGIOUS BOOKS.

Christian Evidences.

THE TRUTH OF CHRISTIANITY. Compiled from various sources by Lieut.-Col. W. H. Turton, D.S.O.H., Royal Engineers. Wells, Gardner, Darton & Co., Ltd., London, Eng. The Young Churchman Company, Milwaukee, Wis.

In view of modern doubts of the [illegible] "Auld Lang Syne," "Santa Lucia," with a number of student songs, "Gaudeamus," "Fair Harvard," "Funiculi, Funicula," etc. About a fourth of the book, moreover, is occupied with sacred songs selected from the music of different nations, as in the case of the secular songs. The collection is exceptional, and the price—60 cents—still more so. The book is strongly commended to the attention of teachers.

History.

MOREY'S OUTLINES OF ANCIENT HISTORY. By William C. Morey, Ph.D., D.C.L., professor of history and political science, University of Rochester. American Book Company, New York. (Price $1.50.)

Morey's "Outlines of Ancient History," carrying events down to the end of the sixth century, A. D., or, in general oversight to the division of the empire of Charlemagne after his death in 814, is especially commendable in its strictly modern viewpoint, which regards all history as a sociological whole, and finds the significance of events in the influence they exerted on national and race development. The matter of the book is so arranged as to indicate the historical relations of the countries treated and the contributions which each has made to the progress of mankind. The topical method is followed, the chapters are closed with synopses and references for collateral reading, and the book ends in an excellent grouping of the general facts of social evolution as demonstrated in its pages. The language is simple and clear. The illustrations and maps are many and good, and the volume is well indexed. Prof. Morey's books on Greek and Roman civilization are already well known and highly esteemed, and this new book is certain to become quite as deservedly popular. It will be found excellent for general reading as well as for classroom use.

HOUSEHOLD BOOKS.

General Hints.

THE MAKING OF A HOUSEWIFE. By Isabel Gordon Curtis. Frederick A. Stokes Company, New York.

"The Making of a Housewife" is a book of modern spirit—the spirit which tends to introduce into household labor something of the system and science that have been lacking from this department of labor as from almost no other. It consists o fa series of experiences in which a young housewife learns from a skilled neighbor the best of methods of doing a great many things—arranging plumbing and caring for it in winter weather, making bread, selecting meat, caring for furs, keeping the refrigerator in good condition, selecting a menu with regard for varities, and principles of dietics, keeping accounts and reducing expenses by sensible economies, cleaning house, preparing for Christmas, etc., etc. The volume, though not bulky, is very good as far as it goes, and ought to find a warm welcome among housewives.

PEOPLE AND THINGS LITERARY.

Oliver Herford, author of "The Peter Pan Alphabet," just published by the Scribners, who is equally famous as a poet, illustrator and wit, was entertaining four magazine editors at luncheon when the bell rang, and a maid entered with the mail. "Ah," said an editor, "an epistle." "No," said Mr. Herford, tearing open the envelope, "not an epistle, a collect."

The present popularity of Ibsen's

[illegible] his sympathies are of the widest; his kindliness without end. His conversation is a kind of poetical and pastoral excursion far afield from the modern noisy world. He is as simple as a shepherd boy, driving his team to field, or sitting under the hawthorn, piping to his flock, "as though he never should grow old." His face has the pale, thoughtful complexion of the old Spanish portrait painters. To look at him is to think that the genius in his face surveys him as from a height and projects him into the unexplored world of thought and imagination; as if the little body was willfully veered by the boundless imaginings of the giant mind.

Gwendolen Vance.

AN INTERESTING STORY OF A LADY AND HER COMPANION.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

"Miss Vance—oh, child—get up! I say, Miss Vance!"

The girl called slept in an alcove room. At the sound of the woman's voice she stirred in her slumbers, sighed softly, and then opened her eyes wide. It was evident, from the altogether cool way in which she proceeded to get up and press her finger on the electric button that this was not the first time such a summons had come from the lady whose bed chamber she shared.

It was February; it was 2 o'clock in the morning, and it was cold. Slipping on her dressing gown with a shiver, the girl found time at last to inquire what was the matter.

"I got out—of bed—to take a glass—of mineral water,"—the words "take a glass" came with a most comical gurgle—"and couldn't find my way back." The girl's set lips relaxed a little into a quiet smile as she recalled the bottle, the contents of which she had furtively thrown out the window the night before.

The woman on the floor gave a very eloquent description of her Odyssey round the room in search of the bottle which she couldn't find, ending with the statement that when she couldn't find it, she felt so queer that somehow she just fell down.

"Aren't you going back to bed?" asked the girl, standing over her. "Come, let me help you."

"Not yet, child. I feel so queer I couldn't manage the crossing—manage the crossing, you know."

"Do you want anything?"

"No."

"Aren't you cold?" asked the girl desperately. "You'd better let me help you back to bed."

"No! It was almost a cry. In her dread of a noise, the girl sat down. Burton Templeton, whose room was directly overheard, must not hear. Dear God! he must not hear. Only yesterday he had seemed so happy, thinking that things with his mother were taking a better turn.

"And this is the woman," Gwendolen Vance told herself again and again as she looked at the white tumble of something human on the floor with an amalgamation of anger, pity and contempt in her eyes—"this is the woman whose shadow first fell upon his cradle. This is the example he has had to [illegible] tyrant what she intended doing. She was very cold and cramped and her head ached horribly.

"Cover up my feet and read to me."

All energy to protest was gone. The girl obeyed mechanically, only wondering in a dazed sort of way, as she had wondered before when similar scenes had occurred, if it would never be daylight. As she stooped to put a pillow under Mrs. Templeton's head the woman kissed her on the hand.

"So good of Mrs. Ormsby to have sent you to me, child. You are such a comfort," she murmured, while Gwendolen opened "The Misdemeanors of Nancy" at random.

Presently Mrs. Templeton fell asleep, yet the girl dared not move. The woman held her hand tightly and Gwendolen would have borne anything rather than bring her back to consciousness. In a measure, though, she was free. She used her freedom to lay her face down on the table beside her and cry softly. She was suffering from the condensed misery of the helpless and the very young. But even while the tears were damp upon her cheeks she smiled, a luminous smile which had in it all the beauty of sunlit mist.

"You just looked across the table at me and spoke some little word, used some little gesture, and somehow—life was changed!"

Gwendolen had been very pale when Burton Templeton had waylaid her on the stairs that night with those words. Now she flushed violently. Oh, the helpless shame of it! The shame—and the ungovernable throb of joy!

"And is this your last word?"

It was two months later. Mrs. Templeton had already gone to her country place in New Jersey, where ancestral acres were hers. Toward a little wilding nook by a meadow runnel where the violets enameled the ground and the gardener's spade in the lettuce bed struck dimly upon the ear, Gwendolen and Burton Templeton walked one day.

"And is this your last word?" repeated Burton. Gwendolen's eyes were fixed dreamily upon a vista of spring trees misted as though a green spray had broken over them. Now she turned her eyes toward the man and they looked like a purple-black cloud that has in its heart the forked lightning. However, she answered simply enough:

"My last word."

"What do you mean to do with me, then?"

He looked so forlorn, with a sort of boyish discomfiture so incongruous in a man of his poise and assurance, that a fleeting smile rose to her lips.

"Why, why," she faltered, "I am not the arbiter of your fate."

"Ah, but you are!"

"You frighten me," exclaimed the girl, dimpling unconsciously.

"You are such a child, Gwendolen!"

Then they both laughed, she a little pathetically.

It was almost a weariness to her, this excitement. For two months now it had been going on. And yet, and yet, she did not break with him, not entirely. She told herself that she was very weak. Many a time, at early mass in the little village church, after the befeathered servant girls had gone out, Gwendolen poured out her soul before the folded hands of the Virgin. "At least," she would pray, "let me not render him absurd, a subject for gossip."

As to Burton Templeton, he lived in constant fear of shocking her delicacy, or of disturbing that soft serenity which he revered. It had been left to this girl of twenty, his mother's paid [illegible] Vance as the result of any little unpleasantness or [illegible] Miss Vance, as often enough she had told Mrs. Ormsby, was a jewel and exquisite in the performance of all her duties.

It was always with a very distinct emphasis that Mrs. Templeton pronounced the word "duties." And Mrs. Ormsby would smile discreetly, recalling a remark of young Templeton's made a few weeks after the girl had come to live with his mother: "She seems to fit in admirably with Morris tiles, Venetian water-colors, teak-wood tables and French-bound books."

April had given place to May. The violets in the little meadow were gone, but the air was sweet with spring odors of blossoming bushes. Here the lilacs were a mass of purple, and there the flowering quince bourgeoned out in crimson.

"She angled for and caught him! She is a most designing girl—there can be no doubt of that," said Mrs. Templeton decidedly. Mrs. Ormsby and she were sitting out on the veranda. At her words Mrs. Ormsby flushed slightly.

"In this, at least, you are unjust," she said. "Only last week Gwendolen was telling me of her own grave misgivings."

"Misgivings!" contemptuously.

"Yes. Burton has entreated and she has yielded. But not at once."

"Humph!" cried Mrs. Templeton, "what would you expect? That girl is clever—I don't dispute that—she is cold, clever and designing."

"Now, do you know," Mrs. Ormsby said with a furtive smile, "I should call her passionate and generous."

"Bah, she has thrown dust in your eyes. Anyway, that is beside the mark. My son must marry a lady, not a paid companion. Oh, it would kill me if he took his way in this." She drew out a cambric handkerchief and began to cry softly. "You are not a mother, you don't understand these things," she sobbed.

Mrs. Ormsby was noticing that the apples trees were in full bloom. Every little shiver of breeze sent a flurry of pink petals to the ground. A blackbird near by was rollicking out a snatch of song. Into his blithe song, somehow, were woven the words, "a lady, a lady, a lady." No, possibly she did not understand these things.

"You see, I can disinherit him if I like. It is in his father's will." Mrs. Templeton began unfolding a document tied with a red string. While Mrs. Ormsby had been looking at the apple blossoms and listening to the song of the blackbird she had not been conscious of her hostess's withdrawal into the room off the veranda. She had fetched her husband's will. Actually!

"Let me read you the fifth clause," she said excitedly.

Then she read there, in fact, that if Burton should make a marriage distasteful to her she could leave the entire property of his father in other channels."

"But," cried Mrs. Ormsby, "you wouldn't be so cruel. Surely you wouldn't."

"I don't know," returned Mrs. Templeton, into whose thin cheeks a rush of blood had come. "I don't know what I could do. I am distraught. I shall consult my lawyer. My son must marry a lady. A lady, I say."

The blackbird was still singing on the apple tree.

FOR the SOUL of RAFAEL

A Romance of San Juan Capistrano

"The story is another proof of the romantic glamour of the life of the old missions and the forces of western history. Mrs. Ryan has entered the classic path with imaginative insight."—The Denver News-Times.

"One wonders at the color which Mrs. Ryan has put into her romance. Mere words produce seldom so vivid an impression of a great painting in which the figures move and speak and love and flirt and dance, and sometimes die."—The New York World.

"In none of her other books is the human quality so beautifully interwoven with the customs and beliefs of a people as in this."—Chicago Saturday Evening Herald.

Five editions—more than 20,000 copies—of this book have been sold since its publication, less than a year ago.

As a souvenir of the California of yesterday, this story has everything to recommend it.

Rarely has a book of fiction been made so attractive. It is printed in two colors, with end-papers and borders in tint. The nineteen full-page illustrations are from a series of remarkable photographs, and are printed in soft brown tones and mounted on a background tint.

Women Can Be Led.

It isn't hard to persuade women to remove their hats "in meetin'," when you know how to go about it. Harry K. Shields, the singer who assists the Rev. R. H. Crossfield, the evangelist, in his revival meetings, knows how. This is the way he did it yesterday at the First Christian Church, Eleventh and Locust streets.

"We want a good song service this afternoon," he said, "but before beginning I want to ask the women in the audience to join with me in a breathing exercise. You know to sing well you must breathe well. First, I'll ask you to raise your right arm and take a full breath. Then put your hand on the back of your hat and—remove one hat pin, then the second.

"Ah, I see you're taking them off. Now let's sing the first verse of No. —"

And the women didn't mind it a bit.—[Kansas City Star.

The Chinese Farmer.

Harry L. Paddock, United States Consul at Amoy, China, writes: "The Chinese farmer is up before daybreak and at work in his sterile fields—fields whose productivity has been exhausted except under high fertilization. He returns to his little shanty after nightfall. To the view of the foreigner he never rests and for this never-ending labor he raises a crop of rice or corn that does not support his family for the year. His clothing consists of a loin cloth in summer and a coarse cotton suit in the winter. Farmers, like all laborers and artisans of China, work hard to live. Laborers earn 10 cents a day; masons, 15 cents; artisans, 10 to 20 cents; clerks, 40 to 50 cents."

Springs on Skates.

The absence of springs on ice skates has been more or less of a mystery. That they are needed is an undisputed fact, as the skater has no means of lessening the jarring naturally incident to the uneven surface of the ice. A New York inventor, noticing the total absence of springs on ice skates, experimented with them and found them desirable in every way. The springs are placed between the steel runner and the plates for the reception of the toe and the heel of the shoe. The addition of the springs also tends to ease the feet while skating, besides greatly adding to the enjoyment of the sport in other ways.

the survey into the nature and value of the fuel resources of the United States, the use of this and other low-grade fuels for gas generation appeared to recommend itself very highly.

Dr. J. T. Bottomley, F.R.S., recently exhibited a radium section at a meeting of the Glasgow Section of Electrical Engineers, which is still being discussed by the Scottish scientists. He described a piece of apparatus invented by the Hon. Robin Strutt, F.R.S., eldest son of Lord Rayleigh, which, he said, showed in a very remarkable way some of the properties of radium. A pair of gold leaves, after the manner of a gold leaf electroscope, are hung from the bottom of a small tube containing a small amount of bromide of radium. The radium tube is supported from the top of the glass cover of the apparatus by a little bar of fused quartz, which is a nearly perfect insulator. The radium tube itself is coated with a pasty solution of phosphoric acid, which makes it conductive. As the very active beta emanation escapes through the walls of the radium tubes, the alpha radiation creeps down and electrifies the gold leaves, which thereupon diverge. When they have diverged sufficiently they touch two aluminum plates on the two sides of the cover and discharge themselves, and this action goes on periodically, the leaves being charged and discharged (in the apparatus shown) in three and one-quarter minutes. It is to be noted that the vessel in which contains this apparatus is highly evacuated by means of a sprengel pump, the air pressure being reduced to something like the ten-millionth of an atmosphere. Dr. Bottomley has set up this apparatus of Mr. Strutt's for the purpose of finding out whether, after a very long time, the activity of radium decreases or disappears. The observations will tell whether the action of a radium clock becomes longer with time.

Flour in Brick Form.

In England interest has been shown of late by the army and navy authorities in a new method of preserving flour by means of compression. With hydraulic pressure apparatus the flour is squeezed into the form of bricks, and experiments are reported to have shown that the pressure destroys all forms of larval life, thus preserving the flour from the ravages of insects, while it is equally secure from mould. Three hundred pounds of compressed flour ocupy the same space as one hundred pounds of flour in the ordinary state.

The Speed of Thought.

How long does it take to think? Prof. Helmholtz argues that the whale probably feels a wound near its tail in about one second, and requires another second to send back orders to the tail to defend itself. The reason why the time occupied by this preparation seems to us so infinitesimal lies in the fact that we are unable to perceive more quickly than our nerve system can act, and thus the intervals required for its operations appear to us imperceptibly small. Astronomers vary in their estimation of the moment at which a star crosses the web of their telescopes by more than a whole second, while the estimates of any individual taken by himself agree within one-tenth of a second, if frequently repeated. Still more surprising is the difficulty of determining whether the beats of two gently ticking watches coincide or fall between each other if held to either ear; while nothing is easier than the same determination if both are held to the same ear. Helmholtz pictures the matter to himself in this way: "Two perceptions of different organs can be estimated only as regards their time relations, when there

PROMINENT PERSONS.

Contrary to general supposition, Raisuli, the Moroccan bandit, is a well-educated gentleman, tracing his ancestry through Mulai Idris, who founded the empire of Morocco, to the prophet. In stature he is said to be tall and handsome, with an unusually white skin and with features rather Grecian than Semitic.

Cardinal Merry del Val, papal secretary of state, is an accomplished man. He speaks all languages. His English is perfect; he is a finished scholar, an extremely fine diplomatist, a rare judge of men. He was born in London of distinguished Spanish-Irish parentage in 1865. Before he was 39 years of age he was a cardinal; a year later he was made cardinal secretary of state.

The young Duke of Zaragoza, besides being a grandee of Spain, is an expert locomotive engineer. He proved his qualification by passing a strict examination and twice a week runs the express train from Madrid to the French frontier over the north Spanish railroad.

The young Duke of Westminster is the ground landlord for miles and miles of houses—the whole of South Belgravia, a fashionable district of London—and for each he receives a shilling a year peppercorn rent until the leases fall in. Each year fresh leases fall into his hands, and at the end of thirty years the whole of the property, which is now worth many millions, will be his entirely.

Miss Marion S. Parker, a Detroit girl and a graduate of Michigan University, is a civil engineer. She has done the architect's work on several New York skyscrapers. She designed the Board Exchange building in the Wall-street section, a twenty-eight-story monster that houses 8000 brokers, bankers and corporation officers. She built the Astoria, half of the Waldorf-Astoria, the Whitehall building and a dozen other notable structures. She did nearly all the designing alone, planning the steel work and everything from sub-basement to roof.

The late A. J. Cassatt, president of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, used to pride himself on never losing his temper, no matter what the provocation. At the same time he showed consideration for others less favored in the matter of equilibrium. On one occasion he was on a Pennsylvania train which stopped owing to some trifling mishap. Mr. Cassatt asked a brakeman some questions regarding the stoppage and the man, not knowing the passenger, replied in sulphurous language, consigning Mr. Cassatt to hot quarters and telling him to mind his own business. The president related the circumstances to the superintendent of that division and added: "Just call the man into your office and tell him he cussed the president and that hereafter he should be more polite to passengers."

Gen. Girard, retired, of Monterey, will soon go to Chicago to take a position as librarian in one of the large Chicago libraries. Mrs. Girard is to make a trip to the Orient for her health.

[illegible] was meeting, and I thought I would come around and say how good is the work you are doing. The heathen needs shirts more than anything in the world. The world is a spheroid, flattened at the poles, composed of land and water; the land divided into five great continents, all of which is told about in Jarby's Encyclopedia of Knowledge and Compendium of Literature, Science and Art, treat- [illegible] of the faithful missionary [illegible] comes from his far-off native land, bringing blue calico shirts to clothe the naked? Yes, ladies of the sewing circle, no sooner had I landed in Africa than a native heathen chased me into a palm tree, which I recognized as soon as I climbed it, having read in this priceless volume all about it under 'Trees, Native and Foreign—Deciduous and Evergreen—Fruit Trees, including Apple, Orange, Peach, Plum, [illegible] till I should fall, was a [illegible] heathen, ready to kill and eat me. It was the narrowest escape from death I ever had."

"My land!" exclaimed the younger Miss Fliggis, "and how did you escape?"

"By staying in the trees," said Eliph' Hewitt, coughing gently behind his hand. "Yes, ladies, if I had not had this volume in my hand as I have it now I should not now be [illegible] giving a noble thought for every day in the year as well as telling how to can fruit, remove spots from clothing, measure corn in the crib, together with a list of the three hundred simplified words, and a steel engraving of President Roosevelt."

The younger Miss Fliggis whispered to her sister. Eliph' Hewitt took an easier position on the limb of the tree.

"The heathen of Africa's sunny strand are the Americans of tomorr [illegible] Jarby's, with its full table of [illegible] how to cook, bake, stew, fry and make pastry; its 500 ennobling thoughts from the world's great authors; its 30,000 references, from A to Z, and its thousand and one subjects, comprising the whole wisdom of the world, the negro becomes a friend, philosopher and guide. A few such, coming to the shores of freedom and mingling with their brothers will guide the colored race to nobler things, and the price of the book is only $1 down and $1 a month for four months, including the history of the Russian-Japanese war, with oleographs of all the great battles. Shall I go away and say that the sewing circle of Iowaville refused to take five copies, preferring to bear the blame of the race troubles they could so easily have averted? Or shall I go forth and say, 'The ladies of the Iowaville Sewing Circle have done their part to uplift the negro race, buying five copies of Jarby's Encyclopedia of Knowledge and Compendium of Literature, Science and Art, and whatever happens, don't blame them! Do not point the finger of scorn at Iowaville.'"

"We generally send the money itself to the missionary society," said the elder Miss Fliggis doubtfully, "and, [illegible] they don't say anything about it. But think how glad they will be to receive five copies of this helpful book. Money and blue calico shirts they get by every mail, from every side, and they think nothing of it, but when the Iowaville Sewing Circle sends five copies of Jarby's they will notice Iowaville and remember it. They will say, 'Here, at last, is a town that takes an interest in our work; that thinks about it, and studies it, and knows as well as we do what the poor heathen negro needs and wants and is aching for. How did they know that the millions of heathen in Africa are standing in rows every time a ship lands, begging for a copy of Jarby's and coaxing for a single leaf from the book if they can't have any more? The ladies of Iowaville are intelligent,' they will say, 'and know what we need. Thanks to the ladies of the Iowaville Sewing Circle.' Shall I make it six copies, or will five be enough?"

Miss Fliggis, with the side curls, looked at the other ladies, and they nodded.

"I guess five will be enough," she said.

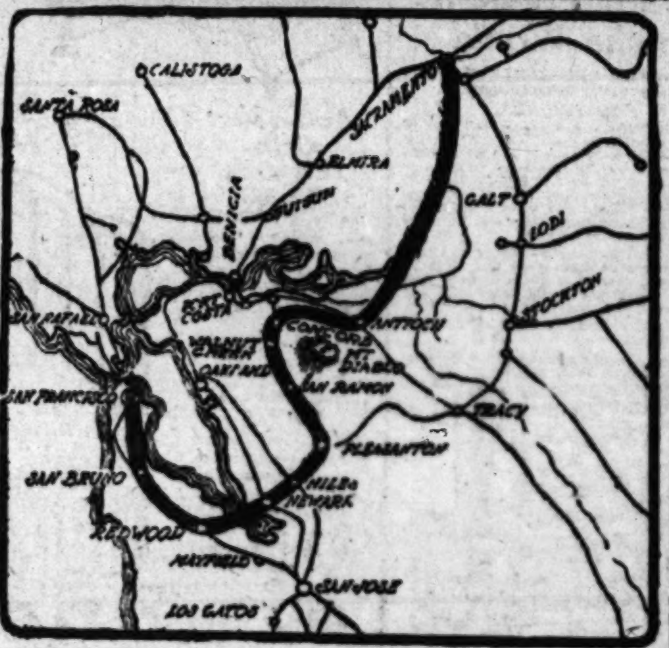
"ALL THE WISDOM OF THE AGES CONDENSED INTO ONE VOLUME, FIVE DOLLARS, BOUND IN CLOTH—"

TO SACRAMENTO BY NEW ALL RAIL LINE.

[From the San Francisco Chronicle.]

THE Southern Pacific is to make its main line from Sacramento to San Francisco a route without a ferry. By building a drawbridge across the Lower San Joaquin at Antioch and taking advantage of several proposed cut-offs and connections, central overland and Oregon trains will be brought into San Francisco more quickly than by the present schedule and without the use of the tedious ferrying of trains across Carquinez Straits at Benicia, or the ferrying of passengers across San Francisco Bay from Oakland.

Officials of the company admit that [illegible]



The Southern Pacific's new route for overland trains to San Francisco, avoiding the Benecia and Oakland ferries.

[illegible] is [illegible]. The new route will eliminate the delays, inconvenience and trouble of ferrying and transferring; it will avoid the yielding swamp land between Suisun and Benicia; make it unnecessary for the Southern Pacific to fight further for the privilege of building a great bridge across Carquinez Straits, and avoid the runs past the various dynamite factories that are strung along the shore from Hercules to Berkeley, within close enough range of the tracks to constitute a reasonable menace to the safety of trains, should a great explosion occur while a passenger train was passing.

on the plains of his Nebraska home. His handsome face, fine goatee and magnificent physique make him a most picturesque figure, and others have followed in his train.

in Princeton have noted the complete indifference of Grover Cleveland to what he may wear. During one of the Yale-Princeton games played at Nassau, a reporter from a prominent New York paper was told to get an interview with the former President. Arrived at the grand stand, he had pointed out to him a stout gentleman, clad in an old homespun suit that didn't look as if it had cost $10 when new. The whole outfit was crowned by a battered slouch hat. Unable to believe that this was Mr. Cleveland, the reporter, imagining himself the victim of a joke, went away without getting the interview. But the shabby figure was the Sage of Princeton, the only Democrat in fifty years who has gone to the White House. He was merely indulging in that eccentricity of attire which is one of the prerogatives of fame.

His hair is long, and unkempt ,and the battered sombrero he wears must have seen a generation of active service. Yet the genius of this old man has been acknowledged by the world, and Presidents have felt themselves honored to have his acquaintance.

back in the days when Fielding H. Yost, the famous Michigan football coach, was a student at Lafayette he bought himself a cheap slouch hat. The coaches of the eleven soon discovered that under that hat was the best outfit of football brains in the college. He was not only a great player, but he became a famous coach. When he went to Stanford University to coach the eleven he was wearing that same slouch hat. He had it on the first time he got on the train at Ann Arbor to take charge of the team he was to make famous over the country, and he is still wearing it—not because he lacks the money to buy one more in accord with fashion, but because time has so deeply attached him to that old piece of felt that a new one would be uncomfortable. Michigan students regard the hat as a sort of plume of Navarre, and always rejoice when it comes on the field.

Tower as Ambassador.

HOW POPULARITY BOUGHT AT BIG EXPENSE WAS ENDANGERED.

By a Special Contributor.

FEAR has been expressed that the Lehr incident will make a break in the extraordinary popularity which Charlemagne Tower, the American Ambassador, has enjoyed with Emperor William.

At an expense far more lavish than any other representative of the United States ever dreamed of, living in a magnificent palace, entertaining on a scale of unequalled splendor, spending $200,000 yearly in excess of his salary, Mr. Tower has gradually built himself up as the favorite diplomat of Germany. Emperor William, ever mindful of his station and averse to dining at the embassies, has made no secret of his pleasure at accepting the hospitality of Mr. Tower, and has dined with him frequently, an honor which he has never bestowed on another Ambassador.

Not a cloud marred the triumphal march of Mr. Tower till the Lehr incident stirred up a storm of controversy.

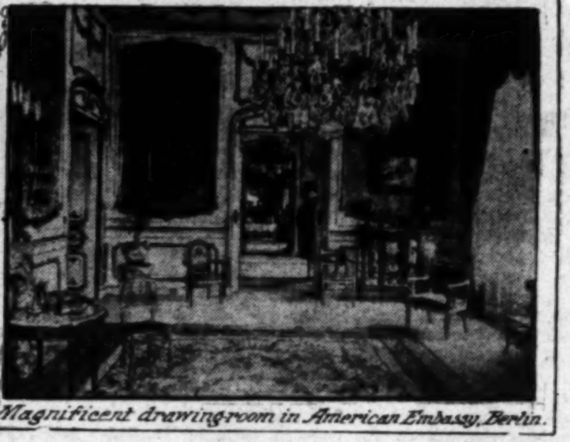
Charlemagne Tower



Magnificent drawing-room in American Embassy, Berlin.

It will be recalled that while Mr. and Mrs. Lehr were in the German capital a few weeks ago, they sought an introduction to His Majesty. This was easy for Mr. Tower. It might have been difficult for any one else, but as soon as the American Ambassador signified his desire, William acquiesced. The fact that the Lehrs were friends of Mr. Tower was enough to make them personae gratae at court. They were presented.

Immediately a protest arose. German society asked why a former wine agent should be deemed a fit person to be introduced to the Emperor. Some one recalled how when the Emperor's yacht was christened in New York, an occasion for which his brother, Prince Henry, came to the United States, it was the trickery of Harry Lehr that caused the substitution of a bottle of French wine for the German wine, with which it had been the expressed wish of the Emperor that Miss Alice Roosevelt should break over the bow of the boat.

Mr. Tower was strongly criticised for sponsoring the Lehrs, and if Emperor William had chosen to take official notice of the matter, the United States Department of State would have had no recourse but to recall Mr. Tower, and then out of this trifling incident all his lavish expenditure of years to build up a position of influence would have ended in disaster and failure.

Since the departure of Bellamy Storer from the diplomatic service, Mr. Tower has become dean of the American Ambassadorial corps. He is in love with the service, and has spent his money more lavishly than any of his predecessors. The Tower fortune, made by his father in Pennsylvania anthracite coal lands, is in excess of $10,000,000, and every year more than $200,000 are expended in seeing that Uncle Sam's legation at Berlin is conducted on a proper plane of elegance.

While representing the United States at Vienna, Mr. Tower occupied the palace of a grand duke, and at one of his dinners he laid plates for 200 guests.

In St. Petersburg, where Tower was Ambassador for a time, his wealth dazzled the Russian court. Here he appeared in cocked hat, court sword and gold-embroidered court uniform. This outfit, required by the court chamberlain, was reproduced by Mr. McCormick, his successor.

At Berlin Mr. Tower has maintained the same pace. For the Koenigsplatz, his magnificent Berlin residence, Mr. Tower pays $18,000 yearly, which is more than his salary. This, as previously stated, is the first American embassy at which the Emperor of Germany has ever dined.

This occasion was elaborately described at the time, and gave other ambassadors many dark days of jealousy. The Emperor, accompanied by distinguished officers of his suite, arrived at the Tower palace at 7 o'clock in the evening, and was received at the entrance by the Ambassador, surrounded by the staff of the embassy. At the top of the grand staircase, Mrs. Tower awaited the Emperor's coming. A distinguished company of ladies and gentlemen, invited for the occasion, were already assembled in the west salon. Here the Emperor held a circle, in which he not only spoke a few cordial words to all present, but paid flattering tribute to his host and hostess. The table was set for thirty, in a large room opening into the conservatory. His Majesty had Mrs. Tower on his right, and George von L. Meyer on his left. After coffee had been served, His Majesty had a conference for two hours with the Ambassador, during which time he spoke at length of diplomatic relations between Germany and the United States.

This was the beginning of a close friendship between Emperor and diplomat that continued without the slightest friction to the time of the Lehr incident.

The Emperor made a point of specially welcoming Mr. and Mrs. Tower at all court functions. This admiration the Empress shared, and she made a special point of saying that a dress which Mrs. Tower wore at a court ball—it was decorated with spangles which cost $2.50 apiece, and there were hundreds on it—was the most beautiful and striking gown she had ever seen.

Mr. Tower spent more than $1,000,000 in fitting up Koenigsplatz palace, which is the property of a Hebrew banker. More than fifty rooms compose the dwelling, and the task of getting them in order required something like a year.

The Ambassador now has the satisfaction of knowing that for the first time the American embassy in Berlin is properly maintained. Andrew D. White was only moderately endowed with this world's goods, and during his long stay at the German court, he lived at a family hotel. The Emperor or the big lights of the court never visit hotels, and the United States was under an eclipse till it came into possession of the present magnificent home.

The American embassy is a marble palace in the most aristocratic section of the German capital. Almost opposite is the great Brandenburg Gate, and in the immediate vicinity are the stately houses of the Reichstag and the grand avenue "Unter den Linden." Throughout the massive building, the interior is of rare white marble, carved by the best masters, after the decorations of the famous palace of the Signoria.

Few private houses, even in London or Paris, are provided with a stairway such as winds from the main entrance to the drawing-rooms on the second floor. The floors of black and white marble are guiltless of rugs. Five drawing-rooms lead into each other, and all have their individual furnishings. Louis Cinque decorations are used in the main drawing-room; Empire and Directoire styles prevail in the smaller chambers. The dining-room is grand with Flemish tapestries, priceless paintings, and maple and rosewood, centuries old. But everywhere the American visitor catches a glimpse of home scenes. There are portraits of Washington, of the Presidents from Lincoln to Roosevelt, and of William Penn.

Mrs. Tower has been one of the most successful hostesses which the republic of the west has ever sent to the Fatherland.

In some quarters there has been a disposition to criticise this lavish expenditure on part of Mr. Tower, but those who are familiar with the problem say that no country can hope to get proper consideration abroad unless it maintains its embassies on a properly generous scale.

BRITISH WAR OFFICE CAT.

A matter of momentous concern has just come before the army council—the future existence of the black cat of the War Office.

It appears that the great transfer of the War Office staff from Pall Mall to Whitehall has caused anxiety as to the fate of the several cats which have made their home at this government office. The black cat is the most famous of these, having had the entrée to the Secretary of State's room on more than one occasion.

Recently the manageress of a home for lost and straying cats wrote a formal letter to the council offering to harbor the black cat and promising to send a special van to Pall Mall to convey it to the home.

The council, however, after due deliberation decided to keep the black cat on the War Office strength and to transfer the animal to the new buildings in Whitehall.

HOW AND WHY THE PROFESSOR LOST HIS MIND.

By a Special Contributor.

A BENT figure was wandering slowly over the much-scarred ground, stopping now and then as though to examine the soil at his feet, but almost instantly rising and moving on again with apparent indifference; only, however, to stop at some haphazard point a few yards away and repeat the operation. At the first pause, two pairs of eyes had flashed toward him sharply, then one pair dulled into impatient scorn.

"Pah! I can't free myself from a desire to spring forward every time I see the old man stoop," the owner grumbled. "First I know, I shall be as crazy as he."

The other man nodded sympathetically. "Same here," he acknowledged. "If I've made one hole where the old professor's stopped, I've made a thousand in the last two years. But we ain't the only ones. The whole country's just the same. Look at this slope—forty-two minin' claims, an' all dug over till there ain't a stone that knows its home." He kicked his heavy boot into the soil, with a side glance toward the figure, which was again stooping. "An' still, just think if one should happen to strike the right spot," he said wistfully.

"There isn't any right spot," harshly. "I've wasted two years on this slope, and know."

"An' bought up more than half the claims after their owners got discouraged an' was ready to abandon 'em," grinning. "Yes, seems like you ought to know, Jim. But I ain't sure, an' never shall be long's the old professor goes around peekin' into the ground like he does. Crazy folks get that way by strainin' their brains on one idee, an' everybody knows the professor was all right till he picked up them gold nuggets. Well, he's certainly drawn this county by the nose since then, an' now his daughter's come I'll 'low she'll pull you younger fellows 'round the same way for a while longer, eh, Jim?"

His companion's face darkened.

"Never mind about Miss Bostick," he said. "What I asked you here for, Boggs, is to talk of that fellow, Crayton, you brought up on the stage. You say you won his respect by the way you whirled the stage round Brink Pit on two wheels, with the other two hanging over?"

"Seemed so," assented Boggs. "He spoke to me more frequent after that, an' when we parted he shook hands. But the fellow's got grit. He was up on the seat with me, an' he never missed a word in his even way o' talkin', nor lifted a hair. I s'pose you want me to try him ag'in an' run all four wheels over. It'll be a little risky, Jim."

"Pshaw! pshaw!" impatiently. "That sort of thing has gone by. Don't you know we're living in a law-abiding, civilized community? All I want is for you to sell him one or two of my claims here. I understand he's in search of good mining property, and though he has no money of his own, he has friends who will back him at any amount. We want all that backing to divide between us, equally. I can't approach him very well myself, for we've met several times at Miss Bostick's, and already there's bad blood between us. But it's different with you, Boggs. I'll make over the claims, and you sell them to him for"—he stepped closer and whispered something. Boggs stared, his lips forming themselves for a derisive whistle, but the look on the other's face kept the whistle soundless. "Fifty cents, you mean, Jim," he at length blurted out, "an' I wouldn't give that." Then his voice became earnest. "Don't fool yourself about this, Jim," he urged. "That Robert Crayton ain't no tenderfoot. I talked with him since. Mebbe he ain't been here but a month, but he knows minin', an' bein' a friend o' the Bosticks he knows all these claims an' has walked over 'em time an' ag'in. Saltin' won't catch him, nor big figger talk; he's too keen. An' anyhow, I don't see how sellin' him a claim's goin' to help you with Miss Bostick."

"Suppose Crayton should lose all the money his friends intrust him with," suggested Jim. "He's foolishly conscientious, I believe, and would consider it in the nature of a personal debt. Under such a load what would he do?"

"Go away an' work like a beaver to dig out," replied Boggs, promptly. "That's the way I read the man. An' he wouldn't take no other obligation, such as a wife or sweetheart, till he was clear. So far the figgerin's all right, only you can't catch him."

"Think not?" Jim leaned forward a little and whispered earnestly for some minutes. When he finished, Boggs's face had lost all derisive incredulity.

"I'm wrong, Jim," he said slowly, "it'll work; sure to. I'd swaller such a fly myself. But it'll take a heap-more salt than was ever put in a claim before, I reckon. An' it's a good idee to have the claim the very one on which the old professor put up his shanty when he come here for his health. It'll seem more real."

That afternoon Robert Crayton called on the Bosticks, as he was in the habit of calling most afternoons. The professor had just returned, and was gazing into the fireplace. Crayton spoke to him, and, as usual, received no reply.

But before turning to the table where Nora Bostick was assorting a pile of camera work, he stood for a moment gazing at the bent figure. He could not make up his mind about this soft-voiced old man. The face was blank and the words rambling and incoherent; but once or twice he had seen something in his eyes, an odd twitch of the lips, that startled him. What did it mean? Was there anything behind the face, behind the blank, expressionless window that seemed closed against all within? He was recalled by the voice of Nora.

"Would you like to see some interesting blue prints, Mr. Crayton?" she asked. "Father was an enthusiastic kodaker before his trouble came on him, and the prints seem as clear as when made. Look at this," and she held up a picture of a characteristic frontier scene.

Crayton crossed to the table, but his gaze lingered on the clear-cut, upturning face for an instant before dropping on the picture. His eyes had grown tender.

"Yes, it is a fine print," he said. "Your father was evidently an artist in camera work. May I see some more?"

She pushed the prints toward him, and he began to pick them up and examine them one by one, his gaze, however, returning to her face with every comment.

"I cannot understand about your father," he said presently. "They tell me he was a remarkably intelligent and interesting man, and that the last thing he thought of was money. It seems strange that the mere finding of a hatful of gold nuggets should have affected him so."

The girl's eyes went toward her father. He had been looking at them, but his gaze wandered away vacantly.

"Poor father," she said softly. "He never cared for money, and yet I can understand. His life was in his books and studies, but his people and mother's were mostly money-makers, who spoke of him disparagingly. I think he always felt hurt at their disapproval, though never blaming them. He was too gentle for that. When he broke down and came here for his health his chief anxiety was for the money he would be taking from us. It was only by much urging that I could induce him to bring his camera and films along. He built his little cabin out on the slope for economy, I believe, though it turned out that the rough, open-air life was the best thing he could have done for his health. He wrote me every day the details of cooking and picture-making and roaming about; and sent me little prints of it all, but never once mentioned looking for gold. I don't believe he ever thought of such a thing. The last letter spoke of digging a well nearly twenty feet deep in search of water, without success, and that he might have to go ten or a dozen more feet before he reached it."

"Did he send you a blue print of the well—of the location, I mean?" interrupted Crayton eagerly.

"Yes, but it only shows a rough hole, with the great pile of rocks and dirt thrown out. The well was just behind the cabin, though the cabin was afterwards torn down by somebody who wanted to dig under it, I believe. Would you like to see the print?"

"Please, if you don't mind."

There was a sudden low gasp as of protest, but when they turned, the old man was gazing placidly into the fire as before, his face vacant and calm.

Miss Bostick rose and went into the next room, returning presently with the print, which she gave to Crayton. He examined it intently.

"Yes, there's the cabin and well all right," he said, with an odd intelligence in his eyes, "though I don't believe any one save us three ever heard of a hole being dug there. As I understand it, the people rushed out and gobbled up every bit of land as soon as your father's discovery became known; but there was no well, nothing but just the cabin, and that was promptly torn down to dig beneath it. Am I right."

"So far as I know, yes. I have been here nearly three months, but the stories told me when I came are just the same as the miners are telling you now. Father seems to have lost his mind completely; though," with a pitiful little catch in her voice, "from the way he watches over and guards me, I feel there must be a dim recognition somewhere. I could not be better cared for if he were in full possession of his faculties."

"Do you expect to remain here permanently, Miss Bostick—Nora?" Crayton asked, allowing his hand to drop as though by accident upon hers.

The girl drew back slightly, her face flushing; but she suffered the hand to remain.

"I do not know yet," she faltered, the color coming and going in her face. "My people wanted to send a man on here to take charge of father, but I would not consent to it. As soon as the news reached us, I came on, intending to take father back East; but he didn't seem willing to leave. When I realized how the preparations for departure distressed him, I changed my mind and sent home after a few necessary things. I shall try to humor him, even if it keeps me here years—poor, dear father!"

There were a few moments of embarrassed silence, then Crayton returned the blue print.

"Thank you," he said simply. "Have you any theory about the well?"

"Only that when he found that water could not be reached, father filled it up and levelled the place, intending to dig again elsewhere. He was always very methodical. I think he must have chanced upon the nuggets, and that they were but indications of what lay beyond. Father was not a man to get excited over a moderate treasure trove. I believe he realized that great riches had suddenly come to him, and that he could go back and lift his loved ones to an honored place among the family which had always contemned us as poor relations. In his exaltation he hurried into the town with his discovery, forgetting that he had not entered a foot of the land for himself; and before he realized his mistake the entire slope was taken up by more than forty different claimants. When he returned, they crowded about him tumultuously, clamoring to know the exact spot of his discovery. The strange thing about it was that not until then did father lose his reason. I suppose the joy of discovery and shock of loss coming so near together were too much for his overwrought brain. Poor father!"

Again there was an odd sound from the fireplace, and again, when they turned, the old professor was gazing vacantly into the blaze.

"I must be going now," said Crayton, rising. "Boggs, the stage driver, sent word for me to meet him on the slope a little before sunset, and it will take half an hour for me to ride there. I believe he has some claims to sell."

She turned to him swiftly, her face paling.

"Please don't have any dealings with him, Mr. Crayton," she cried impetuously. "I have

"Father," she whispered fearfully, "what does it mean? You can't have known me all this time and made no sign. Mr. Crayton is mistaken. It's impossible."

There was a slight quiver through the bent frame, then the arms rose suddenly and drew the girl in a close, passionate embrace.

"Nora, Nora," the old voice choked, "this was the hardest part: to keep from recognizing you. But I have watched over and guarded you all the time. And I could see no other way. When I found the land was all taken I realized that if I went away the owners would always think their claims contained great fortunes, and would hold them at fabulously high prices; whereas by pretending to have lost my mind, they might grow to think it all a myth."

He turned to Crayton, smiling.

"You may reopen the well with full confidence, Mr. Crayton. You will not be disappointed, and I do trust so. I am not often mistaken in people, and I have been watching you closely."

"But how happened you to fill up the well?" asked Crayton curiously. "I do not understand that."

"The work was done at night," simply, "because it was cooler. I had a Chinaman come several hours every night to draw the dirt up in buckets as I dug it. The last night we had got down to twenty-five feet or more, and it was still as dry as when the work was commenced. At midnight I got discouraged and came to the surface, and with the Chinaman's help filed up the hole. He left a little before daylight."

"And the nuggets?"

"When daylight came I found them lying around the top of what had been the dirt heap. They must have been thrown upon the pile with the last bucketful and rolled down. Some may have been shoveled back into the hole. Afterwards, I remembered that in filling the last bucket I had wondered at the unusual heaviness of the stones, and had emptied some back among the similar stones on which I was standing for fear the Chinaman could not draw up the load. When I had gathered all the nuggets in sight, I leveled the ground over the well and then hurried to the bank to exchange the gold for a draft home. That done, I intended to file a claim for the land. But it was too late. Some one saw me enter the bank with the nuggets, and in five minutes the news was over the town. When the men who had taken claims had crowded around me for information, there seemed but one thing to do. I lost my mind."

THE HEIGHT OF LUXURY.

"Solid gold spittoons, crusted with jules," said the sailor. "Talk about luxury."

He ordered another lemonade, and cast a sneering look at the plain iron spittoons planted thick at his feet.

"You can't tell me nothin' about luxury," he said. "Not after what I've saw."

"Where'd ye see all this here, shipmate?" a gruff voice demanded.

"In Java," said the sailor. "In the palace of the King [illegible]. That there young man's face is painted, and his subjects calls him the Nail of the Universe and Umbrella of the Faithful.

"I attended the admiral as body servant when he had audience with the Nail. The young feller sat on a throne in a marble hall with a dozen young men and [illegible]. All blazed with diamonds, and the young men's faces was painted white, with black mustaches done in [illegible] on the lips.

"All their jaws worked reg'lar, like the gum chewin' of college girls. They was all chewin', ye know, betel. And old women crouched at their feet with gold spittoons in their hands what I been tellin' ye about.

"[illegible] of massy gold, with big rubies, emeralds and diamonds set in the pure yeller metal. Each betel chewer had his spittoon and his old woman to hold it. Mates, such luxury made me sit up."

The sailor, sipping his lemonade, said sadly:

"I've seen Carnegie's house and Vanderbilt's and Lillian Russell's. Somehow, though, after them there gold spittoons everything seems kinder small and mean."

NERVOUS BRIDEGROOMS.

"Bridegrooms are sometimes nervous; brides never," said the clergyman.

"A young butcher during his wedding ceremony got badly tangled up with an unlighted cigar. He found himself, in his nervousness, with the cigar in his left hand when the solemn rite began. To put the ring on the bride's finger he hurriedly transferred the cigar to his right hand. When the right hand came into play, in his confusion he stuck the cigar in his mouth. With both hands occupied, he looked at me helplessly when it came his turn to speak. I took the cigar from his pale lips and put it in his pocket for him."

"One young man was so nervous when I married him that instead of saying: 'I, John, take thee, Mary, to be my lawful wedded wife.' he said, loud enough to be heard all over the church: 'I, Mary, take thee, John, to be my lawful wedded wife.'

"ARMA VIRUMQUE."

Much fuss has been made in the press over a hospital nurse marrying an armless man. The lady, whose pluck we must admire, was evidently quite cognizant of the responsibility that such a proceeding involved, and that [illegible] it was none of the world's business. After all, "arms and the man" are not the Alpha and Omega of [illegible] bliss. In the case in question there are two arms left, or rather one left and one right, to be [illegible], and it goes without saying that when the "call to arms" goes forth the lady will be there. To have an armless husband is to an extent preferable to one with arms. No cry of "hands off" will be heard in that home—from the lady, at all events.—[Pick-Me-

Jack's Left Hand.

THE STRANGE WOOING OF YOUNG CAPT. MURCHISON.

By a Special Contributor.

A LANGUID and dispirited brakeman, inserting head and shoulders within the car, glanced carelessly with lack-luster eyes at the sleeping young man, and wailed: "P'moaner!"

Murchison shifted uneasily in his seat, but slept on until the brakes screeched protest as the train glided to a smooth stop.

Scrambling to his feet, and grabbing his suit case, he heard the conductor's cry: "All-la board!" The train began to move, and a swinging lantern glided past the window. Murchison sped down the aisle—only to be confronted at the door by an entering feminine figure. He dodged to his right, she to her left; he sidestepped quickly, and found that the girl once more confronted him.

The train was now plunging desperately through the night. A sudden strident whistle rent the night; the train gave two or three convulsive quivers, while the airbrakes hissed madly, and came to a full stop. Murchison was thrown backward and forward through the aisle.

He made a remark in an undertone and staggered to his feet, ruefully rubbing his left wrist, which had been severely wrenched. The girl had been thrown forward, but was uninjured.

"Oh!" she cried, "I hope——"

"It's nothing—nothing, thank you!" He looked a fraction of a second full in her face. "You!" he said in his heart. She was exceptionally wonderful.

"If she cries," argued Murchison, "I shall kiss her."

"You dare not," said his heart.

"How can I help myself?" he replied. "I love her."

However, she did not weep.

"Perhaps—if you'll pardon the presumption," he made apology, diving into his pocket for a worn leather case, "I'll introduce myself." He extricated a card with fingers that trembled. "Murchison—John Murchison, of the steamship Afridi in the eastern trade."

"Capt. Murchison!" Her face cleared magically. "Why, I know you! You are Jack's captain!"

He bowed.

"Then I can tell you something," eagerly.

"Tell me," he pleaded, avoiding her gaze, digging his nails into his palms to control himself.

"I'm running away," she continued. "Running away for all the world like a scatter-brained schoolgirl!"

"From—Jack?" Murchison's heart jumped, and grew cold; he gripped the arm of the seat until his knuckles stood out white and pained. "Why?" he asked, breathlessly.

"Well——" her voice trailed off, hesitant, then was uplifted once more, petulantly, speaking rapidly, challenging his criticism. "You see, I—Jack and I—we haven't seen each other for eight years. It's a long time—eight years." She flashed to him a swift glance, entreating.

"It's long," he conceded, heavily. "And you——"

"But it wasn't my fault!" she defended herself, with sudden spirit. "At least not entirely. I believe—it was so long before he wrote to me—a whole year. I didn't mind, because I knew he was—was seeking his fortune. That's what we called it between ourselves, for it—it sounded more romantic. But when he did write—such letters! They were long, you know; about his life, his luck, his hopes—everything except me!"

She stopped, but Murchison did not encourage her; he was gravely watching the play of his fingers as he slowly knitted and strained them apart.

"Except me," she went on. "They were not—not sentimental, you understand. And that was what I wanted; I was—hungry for it. I was waiting, and patient, I think, but longing. We were very young when he went away, and he left me a token—we called it that—a sort of talisman. It was a pin—his college pin—a little gold enameled flag. If I wanted him at any time—if I felt that I must have him with me—I was to send him the flag, nothing more. And when he got it—the token—he was to drop everything, no matter what, and come to me. But he wasn't to come back at all without my permission. It was very complicated." She sighed softly. "Very! But when Jack would write, 'way down at the very end of the letter he would speak of that. 'How about the token?' he would ask. And that was all!" She shook her head most tragically.

"Yes?" Murchison used the rising inflection.

She resumed: "There came a great change. Jack—you know how he had that accident?"

"Fell down a hatchway and broke three ribs. I was first mate then, and he was second."

She shuddered. "He didn't write—not for some time. Then he began again. Only it was so different. He couldn't use his right arm, and had to write with his left, and it seemed a left-hand eloquent; it was as if another Jack was writing to me—a dearer Jack. The most wonderful letters!" She caught her breath with a swift intake, and a light came into her eyes, whereat the heart of Murchison leaped. "Wonderful! The kind a girl wants, must have! Oh, the dearest of letters!" In her enthusiasm she forgot the man. "They brought it all back in a great flood—my caring for him, I mean. And the token didn't worry me any longer. Only when he wrote that his steamer was to be in San Francisco for a month or two—that was the best of all his letters!—I thought—I couldn't wait any longer, and so I sent him the token!"

"And he was to come tomorrow at noon!" Murchison urged her. To knit one's fingers together is often a great relief. "And you are running away from him!"

"I'm afraid. I haven't seen him for eight long years. Only letters. I'm scared. Today I was thinking of it, and I began to be dreadfully afraid—fearful that when he did come back, when I had redeemed my promise, it might come between us again—the coldness, you know. So suddenly tonight I lost my head. I was in a sort of panic terror. I ran away. I couldn't get the train at Larrabee, but drove over to Pomona—you know. And now it's worse than ever—I'm going to Cleveland, and the only friends I have there are away, I've just remembered!"

"I see. It's a dilemma. Let me think." Murchison deliberated; under his waistcoat there was a heart in riot. He held himself firmly in hand through necessity.

"I'll have to tell you something. You won't like it. You'll be shocked. You'll despise me! No, don't speak. Let me tell it. I must. I—I—I'm Jack's left hand!"

"What do you mean?"

"Jack died five years ago in the hospital at Singapore!" Murchison steeled himself before the storm, but she did not seem to comprehend.

"But—but the letters?" she demanded, hoarsely. "Dead? But the letters?"

"I wrote them," he confessed, miserably. "It was me who wrote them."

She drew away from him quickly. She huddled herself in the corner by the window, gazing at him with wide eyes, horror-filled. "Oh!" she cried.

"Don't!" he begged, blindly. "You don't understand. Let me—oh, let me tell you! He died in my arms out there; we were great friends, I'm proud to say. He told me you loved him dearly, and asked me to write, and break it gently. It was his suggestion that I should be his left hand for the first time. The day that letter went he died. And I—I had his things and your picture! I saw it, and—forgive me!—I loved you because of it. I was sorry for you. I was afraid to tell you—afraid of hurting you. I put it off—the bad news, I mean. I wrote you another letter. It was no forgery—my name is Jack. And so it went on. Gradually I deceived myself, even; I began to feel that it must be me to whom you were writing, my love that you were answering. And when the token came, I made myself think I could explain—that you'd understand. I see my error now. But—but it was because I loved you!"

He fished in his breast pocket and brought out a thin flat packet, from which he drew a photograph and the little gold-enameled pin. He weighed them jealously in his hand a moment, then handed them to her.

She took them with a gesture almost fierce, and scarcely glanced at the photograph; but the pin she held in her pink palm, and gazed at it.

"Well?" he begged.

"Please go," she said.

He hesitated as if in protest. Then he rose, stumbling away.

Without warning the train slowed up and the bell announced the triumphant entry into the town.

He shut his teeth tightly together, seized the bags, and preceded her down the aisle.

At the steps he offered to assist her; but she refused his hand, and thereafter marched on ahead of him, head up, eyes blazing, cold aversion in the attitude of her shoulder toward him. He followed her like a whipped cur. But it was not of himself that he thought, however; her suffering, her anguish, her anger at the deception he used with her—these tore Murchison's soul.

"You must take a cab to a hotel," he said, authoritatively. "I will send you to a quiet one, where you can be well looked after. The conductor recommended it."

"Yes," she said.

"To the Hollenden," he told the cabby.

"Yes, sir," said the man, waiting with upheld whip.

"Good night," he said, with a break in his voice. "Good night and—good-by." He turned away.

"Wait!" he heard her voice. He turned in a flash. He saw her head and hand framed in the window. "Capt. Murchison!" she called, her cheeks flaming. You've forgotten——"

He hurried forward; with a quick, impatient movement her finger tips touched his palm. He looked at it in dumb astonishment—there lay the little enameled flag.

"Don't you know?" she laughed, hysterically. "It's—it's for you!"

"Then you mean——" His voice broke in emotion.

"Tomorrow."

The word came to him like a murmur of soft sea winds—like a gleam of sunlight in a storm.

Presently he found himself bareheaded in the rain. The cab was gone and he was alone. He raised the token to his lips.

"Sweetheart!" said Capt. Murchison.

THE LONELY CHILD.

Here in the lovely house of Paradise
  With its golden roof and its rafter,
I am warmed with the million lights of God,
  And share celestial mirth and laughter.
But oft I grieve apart in lonely pain—
Mother I want my little room again!

With shining cherub and with angel bright,
  I play around God's throne of glory.
But mother mine I want to sit with you,
  And hear you tell a fairy story.
And oh, I want to hear you laugh and sing—
Mother, I want my toys and everything!

I fear the awful burning of God's stars;
  I fear the great winds and the spheres;
But when the angel Spring comes back to earth,
  I too shall come in violet faces—
Mother, come out to the grass and the dew,
And I'll smile from my little grave at you!

SONABA.

Era un primoroso dia, probablemente del verano. La tierra ostentaba rico traje adornado con encajes de azucena y mirto. Estaba de gala; y la lumbrera del cielo, que aun se hallaba baja, parecia detenerse en su carrera para admirarla; estaba tan coquetona!

Habiame separado del camino que hacia tanto tiempo seguia y estaba perdido totalmente. No llevaba rumbo fijo, avanzaba sin brujula por entre las maravillas que vestian á la madre tierra. Vacilaba yo? No. Temia? Tampoco. Cual era mi destino? Lo ignoraba, me tenia sin cuidado. Era yo el ludibrio de una mano vigorosa que me empujaba hacia adelante obedeciéndola yo sin la menor protesta.

Los ardores del dia eran severos y aumentaban á medida que el sol subia. Secaba mi garganta una sed con la que hubiera agotado los mares, y ni un fruto á mi alcance, ni un manantial de agua, nada absolutamente con que mitigar aquel monstruo que me amenazaba seriamente. Me detuve, escuché un momento, y en esperanza loca crei oir murmullo de agua; mas no, eran los quejidos del viento. Natura ha sido pródiga, pensé con afliccion, pero creo que aqui se le olvidó tan necesario liquido, que de no encontrarlo, de fijo estacaré la salea en esta bendita soledad.

Proseguia mi marcha; el camino se extendia hasta el horizonte; bajo mi planta pasaban millas y millas que regaba con el sudor copioso desprendido de mi cuerpo debilitado por la sed. Me veia muy cerca de la muerte, y me la imaginaba ya con todos sus horrores. Moriré de sed, decia yo, experimentando las agonias de los que aumentan con su barro la tierra estéril del desierto, aunque es un consuelo que mi pobre humanidad quede aqui para fertilizar estos campos de esmeralda.

De pronto, asi como por encanto, me hallé al borde de un riachuelo que corria mansamente sobre granos menudos de oro. Absorto quedé ante la presencia de aquel valiosisimo tesoro del que dependia mi vida; mirarlo y quitarseme la sed fué todo uno, si, señor, mi sed quedó saciada, aunque no toqué ni una gota de aquella agua emanada del cielo, que iba murmurando en su curso poéticas frases.

Sentéme alli á restaurar parte de las fuerzas gastadas en mi caminata, y en aquella soledad majestuosa, separado de todo lo que amaba, abandonado, perdido tal vez para siempre, consagré un recuerdo á todas las mujeres cariñosas que han contribuido con una historia de amor á llenar las páginas del album precioso de mi vida....! Pensé en todas ellas, bendiciendo su memoria que, caia en mi corazón como un soplo de frescura: porque al fin, las que fueron malas y con su artificio hicieron renacer la fé de mi alma para luego burlarse de mi pasión y de mis lágrimas, en recompensa me hicieron conocer el dolor exquisito que experimenta el corazón cuando ama y se mira despreciado; por ellas supe, tambien, la que es vivir feliz, sumergido en el fuego sublime de un infierno....; las que fueron buenas y gozaron con mi placer y lloraron con mi pensa, esas, me brindaron la unica y vedadera felicidad que hallé en la vida....!

Me dispuse á continuar aquella jornada que no sabia quien habia impuesto, ni cual era su objeto, ni donde estaria su fin. Tomé mi bastón de peregrino, diciéndome, tal vez, antes que la noche caiga habré tocado el término de mi viaje; valor y adelante!

Este es el fin, permanece ahi. No venias en busca mia, subiendo montes, andando caminos pedregosos, cruzando llanuras y salvando rios, por qué ahora que me hallaste prefieres proseguir tu marcha á quedarte aqui conmigo? Si venciste tantas dificultades para venir á brindarme tus amores, entonces permanece ahi. No te gusta este paraiso del que yo soy la reina? Aqui hay aves que dia y noche alegran con sus trinos semejantes á un concierto celestial; aqui las hojas del árbol pronuncian muy bajito poemas de amores; aqui hay flores que con su singular fragancia embriagan hasta el delirio; aqui hay linfas cuyas aguas dan salud y belleza; los dolores, las amarguras, las tristezas, aqui no se conocen; sólo una cosa falta para que la felicidad sea eterna; tener á quien amar y ser amado.

Apagóse el eco de aquella voz tan dulce como misteriosa y miré á todas partes para ver de donde procediera. Lector, el cuadro que á mi vista se ofreció no podria reproducirlo talento humano.

Alli, cerquita á mi, estaba Emilia, una beldad rubia, de ojas azules y expresivos, de quien yo estaba perdidamente enamorado, tendida descuidadamente sobre su costado izquierdo, en aquel canapé de oro, dejando que el agua con sus cristales acariciara sus piecitos álbos. Cubriase con un velo azul muy pálido que contrastaba divinamante con el delicado rosa de la carne. No me miraba, porque estaba de espaldas; ni parecia siquiera sospechar mi presencia.

Cosa rara! pensé, ocurriéndoseme luego que aquellas palabras bien podian proceder de una segunda serpiente. Contempléla en silencio, conteniendo la respiración, sin parpadear, extasiado, loco....ella al mismo tiempo se entretenia desbaratando con el pié los rizos que en su carrera formaba la corriente, ó quedaba pensativa un rato, luego como si temiera que los ángeles la espiaran, levantaba los ojos al cielo y sonreia ruborosamente. Cuantos pensamientos y cuantas ilusiones cruzarian por su cabeza....!

Emilia, exclamé en loco arrebato, dime por favor, es real el cuadro que deslumbra mis ojos ó es efimero? Pero ella no me oyó, porque el viento arrebató de mi labio la voz temblona para no herir con su sonido rudo las melodias eternas de aquel verdadero paraiso.

Emilia, exclamé por segunda vez, mas ella continuo imperturbable en su cama de fresca arena.

Quise levantarme entonces, y aproximarme á ella, pero mis miembros no tenian fuerza, los sentia como si estuvieran desunidos en sus coyunturas. No podia andar ni moverme, ni emitir sonido alguno. Que desgraciado era!

Habia llegado el mediodia, hora solemne cuando la madre naturaleza enmudece por un instante, ó inclina su frente para recibir el ósculo candente del soberano que derrama la vida desde la cumbre augusta de los cielos. No habia cánticos, ni se movia la hoja, ni gemia el viento, solo habia silencio eterno.

Emilia habia desaparecido, mis miembros recobrado sus fuerzas. Triste cual el infeliz que sueña con la gloria y al despertar ve que no existe, empuñé de nuevo mi bastón de peregrino y continué pesaroso mi viaje.

Ya al caer la tarde, allá en el extrèmo opuesto del camino en que se arrastraban mis pies polvorosos, vi á una mujer que con ligero paso se dirigia hacia mi. Ibamos á encontrarnos pronto, y un rayo de esperanza iluminó mi alma. Avanzabamos con la cabeza baja sin que, al parecer, la presencia del uno interesara al otro.

Levanté los ojos, ella hizo lo mismo; y sin hablarnos entrelazamos nuestras manos con fuegó.

——Porqué no me seguiste? me preguntó clavando en mi sus celestiales ojos, temia que te hubieras perdido, y entónces que desgraciada hubiera sida aqui solita, añadió.

——No le contesté ni una palabra, me concreté á mirarla de hito en hito. La reconoci, en seguida, era la reina, que parecia velar por mi existencia. Quise decirle muchas cosas tan llenas de amor, tan lindas, que no me atrevi á expresarlas; hubiera sido dificil en lenguaje humano. En prueba de gratitud le di un beso; y cuantas ilusiones brotaron en el beso....!

Entónces juntitos seguimos el camino, con las manos todavía enlazadas. Hacia donde ibamos? No lo sabia, ella me guiaba, alumbrando con sus ojos el camino que ya comenzaba á obscurecer la noche.

Caminamos largo rato cual privados del habla hasta que ella dijo de súbito:

——Aqui es donde vivo.

Alcé la cabeza; alli estaba un castillo, todo de mármol finisimo, muchas veces superior al de Carrara. Una soberbia obra de arquitectura cuya magnificencia no hubiera podido concebir imaginación alguna!

——Entra, me dijo Emilia, graciosamente.

La obedeci, y al instante que mi pié tocó el dintel de aquella puerta, digna de élla, solamente, me converti en otro; no estaba sucio, mal vestido ó cansado; vestia cual figurin parisiense aunque mi torcida configuración no se prestara á ello.

——Porqué tardaste tanto? me preguntó cuando hubimos tomado un asiento en la sala. Olvidasté tus promesas de amor? No, me decias, seré tuyo para siempre é iré contigo donde quiera, pues, porqué dejaste pasar tanto tiempo cuando sabias que aqui te esperaba, loca por verte, apasionada....Han pasado muchos años, y mataste la juventud en báquicos placeres, y la caricia venenosa de mujer liviana mató tus afecciones....Qué te queda ahora? Nada. Tu cuerpo recto y bien proporcionado comienza á encorvarse al peso del invierno que blanquea ya tu cabello; los dos hoyuelos de tu cara conviértese en profundas arrugas que dan asco; y de tu dentadura blanca, que me daba envidia, solo queda una parte súcia y descuidada. Triste suerte!

Me toqué la cara para ver si era positivo lo que me decia y á fe mia que la encontré rugada; y me senti los dientes, solo hallé unos cuantos mal distribuidos. No tenia ni la más ligera idea de como habia llegado á mi envejecimiento, pero, élla lo decia y decia bien, porqué mi figurilla raquitica, donde se colgaba un estomago feisimo era reproducida por una gran luna francesa que tenia á mi frente, la cual no podia mentir, dada su buena calidad; pero mi corazón se sentia tan joven como en otros tiempos, particularmente aquella noche.

Emilia, guardaba silencio mirándome de arriba abajo con ojos reprensivos, hasta que movida á compasion al comprender cuanto sufria mi alma, alargó su brazo semidesnudo y apretándome la mano murmuró: Te amo aún! por qué ni el amor puro se acaba ni la fé bien cimentada se pierde con la ausencia de un cuarto de siglo; bástame tan solo traer á la memoria recuerdos de otros dias para perdonarte, ofreciéndote en pago á tu inconstancia todo mi amor y todo mi ser, sin condición alguna....!

La Eva de aquel paraiso calló conmovida, y aun me pareció que vi resbalar por su mejilla de rosa una lágrima incolora. Sus ojos entristecidos se fijaban en un punto vago de la sala; yo la contemplaba. Que extraño! decia yo, me habla de dichas pasadas, y me reprocha la falta de cumplimiento á mis promesas, las que no recuerdo haberle hecho. Será alguna novia antigua? Algune amante olvidada? Me habrá confundido con otro? Solo élla podria decirlo; yo no me conocia á mi mismo, ni sabia á punto fijo donde estaba ni entendia aquel glorioso enrèdo.

——Te amo! exclamó otra vez, y ése amor que desde la niñes nació, agita hoy con violencia increible mi corazón que espera estar contigo siempre!

Luego, se levantó, y tomándome en sus brazos me prodigó besos, muchos besos....!

Desparté, triste realidad! y aguella misma noche fui a visitar á Emilia. La encontré tan bella como antes y no bien habia entrado a su casa cuando me preguntó:

——Está Ud. pálido, Sr. Miranda, qué le pasa, está Ud. enfermo?

——Usted lo ha dicho, le contesté.

——De que padece Ud?

——Del alma, Emilia.

——Ah! está Ud. enamorado!

——Exactamente.

——Y quién es la dichosa, Sr. Miranda, se puede saber?

——Usted Emilio; no podia ser otra.

——Yo?

——Si, y va Ud. á saber como originó todo. Aquella noche que conoci á Ud. tuve un sueño tan lindo....tan lindo....Emilia, que ha hecho de un cuerdo un loco, de un dichoso un miserable....Desde aquella noche estoy intranquilo, tal vez enamorado.

Researches have been conducted during the many of the researches are of an elaborate brief statement will, however, give a fair idea of the best established results achieved by tors working at the laboratory.

One investigator studied the habits of the and found that the most abundant predatory Tortugas reefs was the gray snapper, which feeds upon a little silvery sardine. If some sardines be dyed bright red and then thrown sea, together with some normal silvery silvery ones are at first eaten more readily than but the gray snappers soon learn that bright dines are good to eat, and will then devour eagerly as if they were normal in color. The tor then dyed some sardines bright blue, them in together with red and silvery ones.
blue were relatively avoided, but soon the pers learned that they, too, were palatable.
tions of jellyfishes were now attached to the dines, and the gray snappers seized them were stung by the pieces of the jellyfish. In a utes they learned to avoid the blue, but still and silvery sardines. The next day, however, snappers had forgotten this experience, and the investigator was obliged to teach them anew.

Another investigator demonstrated that Another investigator has carried out a

Studies upon mollusks, tunicates, fishes,

WILLIAM BARCLAY PARSONS, the famous engineer, is a foe to scamped work, and at a recent dinner in New York he said:

"That man is most unwise who tries to get his work done cheap. Cheap work can always be secured, but the quality of such work is on its face——"

Mr. Parsons, smiling, interrupted himself to tell a story.

"There was a man," he said, "who entered a dairy and asked how much the milk was.

"'Ten cents a quart, sir,' the young woman behind the counter answered.

"The man looked disappointed.

"The Senate is true to the American people. Oh, yes, very true to them. Very true, indeed. Whenever I think about how true the Senate is to the people, the case of Mary Miles comes into my mind. Mary's husband was a soldier. A soldier out in India fighting for his King. And one day a friend said to Mary:

"'Mary, are your thoughts always true to Charlie away out there fighting the hill tribes?'

"'Yes, indeed, they are,' Mary answered. 'Whenever a man kisses me, I shut my eyes and try to think it's Charlie.'"

"This charge was more than refuted. The institution came out with flying colors. [illegible] reminds me of an incident that happened when I was a rodman in my youth. Working on the Connellsville line, I took a number of meals with a middle-aged farmer and his wife. One day at dinner I noticed that the farmer's wife seemed rather out of sorts, and after dinner I wasn't surprised to hear her say:

"'Josiah Simmons, to think that you have forgotten that this is the anniversary of our wedding!'

"Old Josh flushed guility, looked up from his paper with a start. Then he frowned and said in a surprised voice:

"'Why, mother, you must be mistaken. We were married on the 8th.'

"'Why are you so sad?' an acquaintance said to the young man. 'You never appeared to care much for your aunt.'

"'I didn't,' said the youth dolefully; 'but I was the means of keeping her in an insane asylum the last five years of her life, and now that she has left me all her money, I've got to go to court and prove that she was of sound mind.'"

"A clerk sought out the driver, and asked him if the applicant was honest.

"'Honest?' the driver said. 'Why, his honesty's been proved again and again. To my certain knowledge he's been arrested nine times for stealing, and every time he was acquitted.'"

Miss Walsh Tries to Buy a Dog.

WHILE Miss Walsh was rehearsing her new play in Chicago recently, a rat ran across the stage. There was some excitement among the feminine members of the company, but Miss Walsh only laughed; whereat the others looked up in surprise.

"That is the first rat I have seen," she said, "since I left New York. Then I had a little experience with a rat and—a dog. Down at my home on Long Island, the rats became such a nuisance in my barn, and were so aggressive, that I went to New York in search of a terrier. I applied to a business acquaintance named King for information as to where I could find a shop provided with such animals. Mr. King took me to a dealer, and, after stating the purpose of our visit, said to him that we must see the dog tried before we would purchase him."

"'That's easy,' replied the dealer, 'I have a rat pit back here; just step this way.'

"I began to get nervous," continued Miss Walsh, "but thought I would show my grit and stay it out. The dealer brought forth a beautiful little terrier and, when he had put him into the pit, placed a fierce gray-whiskered rat also in the arena. I felt myself grow sick at heart as the adversaries confronted each other like two gladiators in ancient Rome. Then suddenly, as I watched in a panic of fear and disgust, the dog took flight, pursued by the rat.

"'Buy the rat, Miss Walsh,' quietly suggested Mr. King, 'buy the rat.'"—[Bohemian.

The House Beautiful—Its Flower Garden and Grounds.

LANDSCAPE GARDENERS.

THEY ARE BORN, NOT MADE, BUT MAY BE CULTIVATED.

By Ernest Braunton.

MANY inquiries come to this department regarding landscape gardening and how best to learn the art. Successful landscape gardeners (some call them architects) are born, not made, precisely to the same extent as is the case with landscape painters. Study and practice will finish both, but without natural taste and inclination no first-class work will be accomplished.

What is primarily needed, of course, is an eye for the beautiful and an imagination worthy of the name. While there are certain rules which must govern the work, they are natural laws and the artist will interpret these aright. Confidence is needed that one does not become a mere copyist. Strike out on lines original, and if you are worthy, your work will be accepted. Pay no attention to tradition or standards of "styles," but aim at the natural and therefore the true. We have too much of the imitative in landscape work; we should be imaginative rather, than fearful. If you have merit of the highest order you will still be called a dreamer by those who can never understand you, but your "creations" in landscape art will, soon or late, find general acceptance by those capable of judging, and then will come sure reward.

THE DATE PALM.

The Date Palm.

When we speak of the date palm it is generally supposed we mean the date of commerce, Phoenix dactylifera. It is easy to call the others by their scientific names which are pretty generally known in Southern California. In youth the date palm is not so ornamental as other species of Phoenix, but with age they develop a dignity second to none, and would prove an ornament to any premises.

The date palm will grow in almost any soil, even the most alkaline, but if expected to grow edible fruit one cannot be so regardless of its particular needs. The impression that the date of commerce is adapted to all desert conditions—soil alkali, drought, etc., is a somewhat erroneous one. While palms will live and grow under exceedingly unfavorable conditions, they are not fruitful unless certain conditions prevail. The one important condition which should be kept in mind, above all others, is the presence of an unfailing and an abundant supply of irrigation water. The date requires enormous quantities of water in order to ripen its fruits successfully.

Like most other fruits, dates may be propagated by seeds; but, also like many other fruits, the fruit from seedlings is of an uncertain character. Not only is this true of the date (the fruit,) but the sex is also uncertain. Unlike most other fruits, the pistils and the stamens of the date plants are situated upon different trees and half of those which grow from seeds are likely to be males and hence produce no fruit, while but one of these males to about twenty females is necessary. The only way to secure date plants of definite sex and character is to grow them from suckers removed from the base of bearing trees. During the first few years of the life of a date tree it produces suckers at the base freely, just as does its relative, corn. When these suckers are a few years old, they may be removed and the trees that grow from them will be just like the parent. For decorative purposes one may as well grow them from seeds, and really the value of a palm is materially enhanced, to the grower at least, by the fact that one has been grown from a seed planted by the possessor.

The Black Callas.

Nearly every week at this season of the year the daily newspapers contain glowing accounts of the rare and wonderful black callas growing in gardens somewhere in or about Los Angeles. Why these notices should appear every year as though heralding something hitherto unknown is hard to explain in the face of the fact that these plants have been grown in Los Angeles for a score of years and for numbers running into the thousands, in places almost a pest.

About fifteen years ago the writer had a thousand bulbs under his care of Arum Palaestinus, the black calla or Solomon's lily. These were sold all over this part of California and similar bulbs were handled by other dealers, and few indeed have perished, for they are most persistent bulbs, and after the above stock of a thousand bulbs was removed, the little bulblets left behind continued to grow and bloom, coming up each year among other crops and refusing to be killed, no matter how much the soil was tilled. This continued for many years, and the soil may not yet be free from them.

Of other and more showy so-called black callas, we have several, the most common one being Dracunculus vulgaris, sometimes called the giant black calla, and which has a still more unpleasant odor than the common one, if such a thing is possible. As one observer remarked: "One smells worse than the other, but I don't know which." Amorphophallus Rivieri, known as the devil's tongue, is the giant of the family, and has the same terrifying and disgusting odor. All of them are closely related to the common white and yellow callas and Jack-in-the-pulpit.

Location of House.

This is an important feature upon which much of the beauty of the planting arrangements depend. The house should by all means be located to one side, say six feet from the border. This will leave three feet for a walk and three feet for planting between the house and the boundary line. The object of placing the house at one side of the lot is to leave as much space as possible on the opposite side, for it is here that we make our view. If the house is placed in the center of the lot, there is not room enough on either side for much of a lawn, and hence a pretty planting effect cannot be obtained. The front walk and steps should be on the side of the house nearest the lot line, and the walk leading around to the back door should be as direct as possible.

It is impossible to read the Bible without perceiving that the Hebrews of old were a people who delighted in flowers and green fields, in groves and plantations, in orchards and gardens. Trees and flowers enhanced the enjoyment or relieved the gloom of almost every scene in Jewish life. Their cities were sometimes adorned and shaded by trees growing beside the watercourses.

In towns the vines were trained along the walls of their houses, and as it clung to the trellis or wound around the balustrade of the outside staircase it was both a graceful and useful ornament. This is suggested in more than one place in the Bible. The courts of their houses usually rejoiced in the shade of some spreading sycamore. The Terebinth, or turpentine tree, also adorned these spaces, except in the temple, where there was a special prohibition; the courts of the public buildings were usually planted also.

Gardens, and occasionally the shelter of a single tree, were chosen scenes of retirement and devotion, and it was in such cool and fragrant bowers that the rabbis loved to collect their disciples and deal forth their wisdom. The very rustics had a taste for flowers, and by way of bringing spring and autumn together the grain newly heaped on the threshing floor seems to have been crowned with lilies and garlands. On great occasions the pathways of conquerors and distinguished personages were strewn with branches in blossom or with the leaves of the palm.

In better days Palestine was the Garden of the Lord; a land of brooks of water, of fountains that sprung from the valleys and hills; a land of wheat and barley, vines, fig trees and pomegranates; a land of olive oil and honey. For the sins of its people the land is said to mourn; but although its vines are blighted and many fountains are dried, the bee still murmurs on the cliffs of Carmel, the olive still matures its fruit in the precincts of Gethsemane. The almond tree along the Jordan still proclaims the approach of spring. By the wayside grow sycamores, as when Zaccheus climbed into one to catch a glimpse of the illustrious stranger, and under the Terebinth the Bedouin sets up his tent, as when Abraham beneath the oak at Mamre received his angel visitors. In the days of Joshua, Jericho was the city of palm trees; with these branches of the palm the jubilant procession strewed the road as they conducted the son of David from Jericho to Jerusalem; Galilee still yields its lilies which we do well to consider.—[Gentlewoman.

ADVANTAGE TO THE FORMER OF LATTER'S ADVICE

THERE is no question but the influence of every phase of school life is manifest in the home and some of its various details are so nearly duplicated the benefit of the home circle as that last claimant public favor known as the school garden. If the children are allowed to care for the home garden, acting upon the advice given and the experience gained at school, better results will generally be obtained than when the care is left to the adult members of the family, granting of course the school gardening is directed by one competent to teach.

The disadvantage that we of Los Angeles labor under, is the lack of funds to procure a permanent school gardener, who could visit every school yard in the city and instruct the children, not stopping longer than really necessary, nor aim to do any work except in the way of practical demonstration. Under this method all who may be interested in plants and the study of plant life history, to the end that some may become in botanists and all have a deeper appreciation of their natural surroundings—of the world in which they live. Such study increases their knowledge and, develops their character, and in many ways fits them the better for life's battles, and above all, makes better neighbors and citizens.

Frank M. Marsh, superintendent of the schools at haven, Mass., writing upon the subject, has this to say: "The real aim, it seems to me, is to create a love for the beautiful plant and shrub and to show the how to make a small plot of earth or yard serve as an economic aid to the home, not only in supplying vegetables, but also flowers and beautiful surroundings. Children's gardens are not for the sake of the school or subjects in the curriculum, but for the more important institution, the home, and for the sake of the children themselves. We aim to develop patriotic citizens, but if a man loves his home it is not difficult to arouse his patriotic spirit in time of war. It is a higher patriotism which makes a boy love his home and have a desire to make it beautiful and wholesome within and without. Teach a boy or girl how to make a back yard beautiful and fruitful, how to make a fresh and even lawn with its boundary of flowers, and you will have aroused a new interest in home and with it a corresponding love thereof. A community made up of such individuals and such homes will be wholesome and beautiful. The character of a nation depends so much upon its homes than any effort that tends toward their improvement will be worth the cost."

First School Garden.

The subject of gardening in our public schools, which has been discussed in the columns of The Times during the two years past, from time to time, is one that is appreciated by our people as much as it should. Last year the writer was requested by the outdoor section of the Civic Association, to assist in the work it had undertaken at the Utah-street School. The work done by this noble band of women who gave their time and money generously, was the most unpromising imaginable. Most of the children were from homes of the most forbidding character. Many of them could not speak or understand a word of English, few knew what the word discipline meant, and with such material to work with, the season of 1906 was begun February 1.

Doubtful as to the wisdom of the undertaking, and curiosity to see what the outcome would be under these circumstances we began the work, visiting the school one hour each week, assisting the teachers and directing the efforts of that motley crowd of children, most of whom were not over fourteen years of age. A strip of the yard was spaded up to a width of feet and this was divided into fifty-six sections, four by, assigned to as many children. The results were of the most gratifying and satisfactory nature. Ninety per cent. of those small plots produced flowers and vegetables that would have been a credit to the most skilled gardener. Three of the oldest boys of the school, who, before this work had been begun, were the terror of the teachers, and the demoralizers of the class to which they belonged, became the most changed in character, and won first prize for the best gardens. Little tots but seven years old had beds that were luxuriant and beautiful.

Those of us who were engaged in the work felt that it was "worth while" and amply repaid for time and money spent when the school year closed, and the writer was convinced by actual experience and observation that it is the only method of leading the "submerged tenth" of our cities to a higher, nobler way of living. When our boards of education, and those who are in authority, get as wise as they should be, they will employ some one qualified for the position to look after that branch of public school education, as it will pay; pay in dollars and cents by saving boys and girls from the juvenile courts and detention homes, and reform schools. One mother in that Utah-street School district who has several small children and is obliged to work away from home for their support testified that after these school gardens were begun, her children took up the work at home, and instead of finding them running the streets when she came home, they were busy at home in their garden, which not only gave them fresh crisp vegetables, but also added to their support, and taught them lessons of industry and perseverance, as well as relieved the mother heart of anxiety of ruin of her offspring.

The National Cash Register Company of Dayton, O., began this work among its employés several years ago, and the results exceeded their most sanguine expectations. Through its influence three boys who were young desperadoes were civilized, and their reform by this means, added $30,000 to the value of the real estate in the community in which they lived. The intrinsic value, great as it may be of this training, is but a small thing compared to the development of character of manly men, womanly women, and useful citizens, and the work must be done in communities and the homes of those communities, to reach the highest standard of excellence and usefulness. All honor to Mrs. Rodman, Mrs. Wernigk, Miss Lamb, Miss Moore and the corps of teachers of the Utah-street School for giving to Los Angeles a practical example of the great good that may be accomplished in school gardening.—P. Parks in Small Cities.

Too often a small town or city seeks to have a park before proper funds are on hand to meet the necessary expenses, if good results are to be obtained. Too often the amount is only sufficient to purchase trees and plants, whereas the first expenditure should be for a plan. Instead of procuring this altogether necessary plan, the work is generaly left to the local nurseryman or some gardener whose knowledge is confined to recognizing the difference between weeds and garden plants, and the simple needs of plants in general regarding water supply, cultivation, etc. This is gardening, but not landscape gardening.

Landscape gardening is a fine art and nowhere is its influence so felt as in public grounds where all may see and criticise the work there carried on, and time, that great leveler, will reward or condemn the designer accordingly as he has wrought. There is no end of pretenders from various walks of life who think they see in this line of work a golden opportunity to make money, and with a dangerous combination of ignorance, presumption and unscrupulousness in varying combinations, prey upon the public's ignorance. Let the party who has a landscape problem to work out consult with those who have demonstrated by their work that they are competent to advise, be he a nurseryman or otherwise.

Massing of Shrubs.

All shrubs and flowers should be planted in masses of several plants of a variety in a group. They should be planted close enough together so that we do not see the individual plants but the group as a whole. The distance apart will depend upon the ultimate size of each variety. Thus most of the perennials should be planted a foot apart, while the proper distance for shrubs varies from two to eight or ten feet. A mistake of too close planting is much better than otherwise, for we can then thin out if necessary. If our means are so limited that we can afford to have but a half dozen plants, they should all be placed together in a single group rather than to make the common mistake of planting them here and there as individual specimens in the lawn. Grass and shrubs do not do well together, but when the shrubs are planted in masses the ground can be given up to them and no grass allowed underneath. All the care required is an occasional stirring of the top soil in order to retain the moisture and prevent the growth of grass.

Practical Poultry Culture in the Southwest.

DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF STANDARD-BRED POULTRY AND THE PEOPLE WHO GROW IT.

HOW THEY PAY.

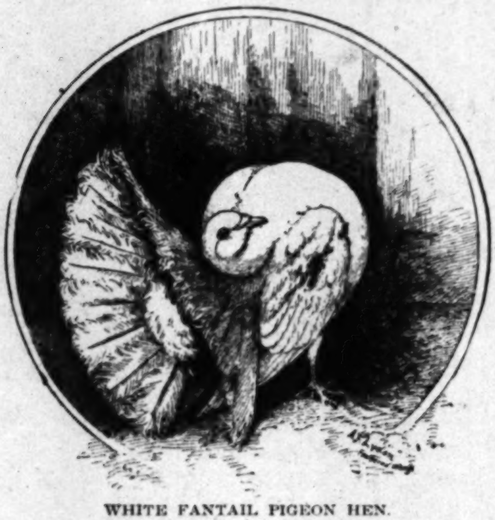
THE SMALL FLOCK OF CHICKENS IN THE BACK YARD.

By Henry W. Kruckeberg.

NOTE.—Short articles of a practical nature are cordially solicited from breeders and fanciers, relating their experience with poultry, giving their successes as well as failures. The writer will be glad, in so far as lies in his power, to answer inquiries of public interest bearing on any phase of an enlightened poultry culture, such as feeding and management, disease and its prevention, market conditions, fancy points, etc. The co-operation of utility breeders and fanciers is cordially solicited, to the end that the best thought and practice in an enlightened poultry culture may find a healthy expression in these columns.

THE question is often asked of a fancier with a home flock in the back yard: "Do these chickens pay you?" The inquiry insinuates that probably they do not pay, that the fancier is only a chicken crank. Of course they pay in a great many ways that must be experienced to be understood. A small flock is a small investment, and the return on it must be accordingly small in money. Money is often the least of returns, and so with chickens as a side issue often. It is possible to double the money invested by well-directed purpose, but other profits are more valuable to the fancier. To know that eggs are clean and fresh and big with bright yellow yolks is a prime joy. To know the fowl for roasting is in splendid condition, made to roast with never a sick moment recorded in its past, is not a secondary joy. To know any day in the year one can eat his own cleanly-fed poultry and eggs without giving an order ahead to some patient-for-money dealer, who may and may not fill it, gives one a splendid sense of freedom. These are not money returns, but beyond money values. If one does for poultry, poultry does for him what money may be unable to buy.

It is delightful to the cook to take up a big, fine-looking egg and know precisely how it will break into the cake-making bowl, delightful to know just how the breakfast eggs will break into the morning glasses. But things not of the public market create these values. If one does not like poultry he must not expect such returns; one cannot hope to hire the creation of these values. The kitchen maid won't do it. She may say she likes chickens and will do it. She may think she will, but she will only do the part she likes—feed the hens table scraps—and dread to water them. She may like to feed them corn out of her hand, but will throw them any old bit of a rotten vegetable to get it out of her way, and make the entire flock ill.



WHITE FANTAIL PIGEON HEN.

The hired man may say he likes poultry and will take good care of the fowls. He listens attentively to all your directions, and you think you have found the man for hire. If he does like chickens, he is sure to have ideas of his own, and as soon as you depend upon him, he does his own way, and the things he likes to do. The hens may go from morning to morning with no water, and because he dislikes the smell of lice powder, the hens may actually droop from the weariness of carrying mites before you are consulted. Only once in a great while can one hire the home flock cared for with profit.

One must like his own fowls and care for them himself to get the best values. Many a man or woman does not know the fellowships there are to be had in a nice lot of fowls. All the lessons of life come up to a man simplified in raising an incubator lot of chicks. The little dependent things existing because of your dictation look to you with faith for sustenance, and not being denied, grow in faith. To have dependencies is delightful. The tiniest chicks are responsive dependencies—they thrive with every attention, and their thriving is a sure return. The essentials of freedom, individual rights, State rights and Federal supremacy are to be found in pure essence in the brooder of fifty healthy chicks. To the analytical mind there is sustained a value. The mother who has lost her young child can find sweet places, conditions and creatures needy to adopt her maternal givings, and reduce in a wholesome way her extreme sense of loss. Little chicks are beautiful little things, and call out to one with a tenderness which happily gets response from the joyful giver. In drawing to themselves needy from an affectionate caretaker a responsive bit of living ensues, which cannot be duplicated. A small flock of chickens makes returns in how many quietly great ways—pays with how many values!

The White Fantail Pigeon.

When we allow for the fact that the late exhibition of the Southwestern Pigeon Club (held in conjunction with the poultry show in the Panorama Building, Los Angeles) contained over 500 individual specimens, it will readily be believed that the pigeon fancy is a growing one in Los Angeles. The number of varieties shown was as gratifying as the large number of exhibits, among which latter the graceful and ever-beautiful little Fantails occupied a prominent part. This handsome bird is said to be a native of India, but has been bred so long in England—where the pigeon fancy is exceptionally strong—that many have come to the belief that it is native to the British Isles. It is a small, round-bodied bird, slightly hollow in the cented of back, with its swan-like head resting upon the cushions. The remarkably fan-shaped tail should be carried well up and evenly-balanced. When seen at its best, the bird stands jointly on its tiptoes with a constant motion to the body. It is handled quite as easy as any other variety of pigeon, and certainly possesses the elements of beauty and grace calculated to fire the imagination and kindle the enthusiasm of the lover of bird life. The illustration shown is that of a Dairy and Crystal Palace (England) winner taken from a late issue of the London Feathered World.

Litter or Scratching Material.

A correspondent of The Times writes for information as to a desirable litter or scratching material for poultry.

Birds penned up in yards or subjected to the close quarters of a city lot must be provided with daily work; in other words, they must be induced to take plenty of exercise in order to maintain a state of health and at the same time give results in hen fruit to their owner. Birds afforded range naturally secure a sufficient amount of exercise in foraging for at least the major portion of their food, a condition denied to the bird in confinement. Litter or scratching quarters are not over different to obtain. If your soil is a sandy loam, friable and easily communited, it will serve the purpose during the summer months, provided you keep it well spaded up and cultivated, so that it will suggest a dry ash heap when walking over it. Into this scatter your grain feed, raking it in quickly with an ordinary garden rake. This will induce the fowl to scratch for the kernels, and so provide the necessary exercise. If your soil is clayey or heavy adobe, cut straw, leaves, or chaff is good. If the former, it should be cut, because if left full length it is quite apt to "bunch" and prove undesirable. This, of course, should be changed at regular intervals, or it will soon become foul and unhealthy. Some growers use shavings, and while serviceable in a way, yet the taint of the wood with the droppings lessens the value of the latter as a fertilizer for orchard and garden. The writer has found excellent results from keeping his yards well spaded up, and has never found it expedient to incur the expense of litter. If situated on a heavy adobe soil, straw litter after serving its purpose can be spaded under, thus affording a splendid humus to the soil, tending to lighten it and improve its "working" in every way.

The Huckster Element.

It is pleasant to note that the purely mercenary exhibitor who follows the shows with a string of birds along purely commercial lines is not so strong a feature at our local shows as in the years gone by. As a usual thing this rare bird buys a string of good specimens, covering say half a dozen breeds and varieties, wins honors, and then sells "any old thing" on the strength of his ribbons, the buyer presuming that he is getting stock and eggs from the identical flock from which these winning birds are presumed to come. In more than one instance under the writer's observation, these huckster exhibitors owned no birds at all outside of what they exhibited—for the most part buying from Tom, Dick and Harry to fill their orders. It is practices and abuses like this which negative much of the best endeavor of legitimate breeders and fanciers in striving to build up the industry along lines emphasizing the square deal.

A well-conducted exhibition is the clearance-house of the legitimate breeder and fancier; the place where he shows his best birds with the expectation of proving their quality, and thereby impress the general public not only of their quality, but that he has "good stuff" and stands ready and anxious to give good value to purchasers for their money. To weaken public confidence by palming off inferior stock militates against not only the seller, but to all breeders. The moral to all this is, do not expect to get top-notch stock cheap, and never buy except of breeders of good standing and who have made a success of their business by years of experience and studious application. You cannot extract sunbeams from cucumbers; neither is it reasonable to anticipate 95-point breeding birds from the huckster at the price of runts and mongrels.

The Matter of Fertility in Eggs.

Just at this season of the year, the matter of good fertility in eggs is quite as important to the breeder and seller as it is to the beginner in poultry culture who is experiencing his first venture with the alluring sitting hen or the incubator. In this connection it is interesting to note the experiments that have been made, together with the data that has been gathered and tabulated bearing on this question by the national Department of Agriculture. For the most part, these experiments are still in process of incubation, facts have become quite well established. it has been proven that too warm quar laying stock and overfeeding are two thing negative influence to fertility. The handl ing of the eggs are also believed to affect the of hatchable eggs. Vigor and constitution of the parent stock, and the period of tim cock bird has been with the hens are that enter into the problem. Again, an egg tile, and yet fail to give birth to a chick nary conditions of incubation. At the Experimental Station in a series of artific experiments 8677 eggs tested 83 per cent. only 46 per cent. of the fertile ones hatched, cent. of the total. In so far as the experim been worked out, they have practically the following deductions to insure reason eggs: Saying stock must not be kept too overfed.

The males must be kept with the hens and that only eggs should be used for the male has been with the hens for several

Only birds of vigorous parentage known good percentages of fertile eggs (hens often respect) should be placed in the breeding

An Abandoned Farm.

HOW THOUGHTFUL MAINE FARMER MADE IT PAY.

From Boston Globe.

THE story of how William K. Burgess of East Bucksport has managed one of Maine's famous "abandoned farms," and won prosperity and considerable fame from land that was cluttered with loose stones and infested with pernicious weeds, deserves to be elevated into a treatise on agricultural economics and find a place in the libraries of agricultural colleges.

Less than twenty years ago, when Mr. Burgess went to East Bucksport from a farm in Monroe, Me., he was rich in health and hope, though poor in financial resources, so when he had bought two adjoining farms on the shores of Long Pond—both of which had been cropped clear down to hard pan and undergone the process which Maine farmers term "skinning," until there was nothing left to skin—he found himself at 35 years of age, without an available dollar in the world, and hitched to a barren hillside farm, which, according to local report, was not able to sustain a pair of rabbits.

The first thing which Mr. Burgess needed was ready money.

Local ways of securing ready money had been to cut the hay and haul it loose to Bangor, twelve miles away, and sell it on the market at the highest price offered. It proved to be a serious proposition, for not only was Bangor twelve miles distant, but the roads for most of the way were steep and stony and very rough.

Owing to the time required to get to Bangor and return it was the custom of some persons to grease the wheels of the hayrick and load the hay and bind it solidly the Sunday afternoon before starting, partly because religious scruples did not permit the farmers to labor in public view on the Sabbath and partly because such labor saved half a day of valuable time, which could be devoted to other duties on a week day.

By using two sedate horses and exercising great care when negotiating the rough places, a patient farmer, who started from home at 3 o'clock in the morning, could hope to land his load in the Bangor market by 11 o'clock in the forenoon, after which he had to bargain and banter and haggle with customers for several hours before he effected a sale. Then he must drive to some remote part of the city and pitch off and stow away the load of hay in the peak of some small stable before he could think of going home; and if he reached his own bed before midnight he considered himself lucky.

Farmer Burgess thought the matter over. He had to pay taxes on his barren land. He was compelled to mow most of the grass by hand, owing to the number of stones exposed to the mowing machine. He must also rake his crop by hand and stow it away in the barn, after which he must load it on the rack and spend a day and night in landing it in Bangor. And for all this he might receive as much as $10 in cash. After two years of peddling loose hay, Farmer Burgess bought a herd of cows and started in to make butter.

Now when he takes a ton of hay to Bangor it goes as butter inside of a neat firkin, and the journey is made in a top buggy so rapidly that he can do his marketing and get home in time for dinner.

It was the same way when farmer Burgess tried to realize cash from the sale of cordwood in Bangor. He had plenty of second-growth hardwood on his place, but he lived beyond the ten-mile limit where railroads could haul wood by the carload at cheaper rates than it was possible to do with horse power. He found it took a whole day to cut and land a cord of fuel at his door, and another very long day was demanded to take this wood to Bangor and sell it. As the local dealers were selling equally as good wood for $4.50 a cord Farmer Burgess concluded there was no profit in working himself and horses for two days at the rate of $2.25 a day.

He bought a sawing machine, and for two years manufactured wood into stove lengths and sold it for $6.50 a cord, but gave it up after a thorough trial.

And now comes the crucial period in Mr. Burgess's management of an abandoned farm. At different times when he had been in Bangor marketing the output of his farm, people had asked him if he raised any sage or throughwort or summer savory. Once in a while a restaurateur wanted fresh peppermint. This man wanted hoarhound for a bad cough. Another asked for wormwood for a tonic, so he might have a more savage appetite for his food. And Burgess replied to all these that he would be able to fill the orders the next year.

The business of growing and curing the various fragrant and medicinal herbs grew so fast that in the summer of 1906 the Burgess farm produced more than a ton of catnip, nearly a ton of dried sage leaves, and hundreds of pounds of pennyroyal, saffron, camomile, hoarhound, wintergreen, lungwort, gold thread, balsam, white pine bark, parsley, cresses and many other plants that are seldom mentioned outside the regular pharmacopoeias found in the drug stores.

From a farmer he had developed into an herbalist.

In the old days when farmer Burgess was selling hay he required two heavy horses to carry hay valued at $10 to Bangor, and when he sold wood the same horses worked long and hard to take a cord of rock maple valued at $4.50 to market. Today he can put packets or herbs valued at more than $100 into an express wagon and car trot his horse half the time both ways.

The side issues which farmer Burgess has undertaken or is about to start on his abandoned farms are nearly as promising as his direct sources of income.

Some years ago he thought that he would keep sheep and see how he would fare at selling wool and lambs, but as the dogs came and slew many in his flock, and as Bucksport paid only $3 for a sheep that had been killed by dogs—even when average sheep were bringing $5 a head in the market—Burgess sold out his sheep and went to breeding collie dogs, which brought higher prices and were not so expensive to grow.

Later on the man who was living on an abandoned farm branched out as a manufacturer of botanic drugs, all of which are selling fast enough to pay expenses.

He has made a cough cure which holds the soul and curative ingredients of twenty famous plants, all of which were noted cure-alls among the older generations.

He sells an ointment which holds seventeen vegetable ingredients of an antiseptic or soothing or tanning nature.

He can furnish the old-time "hard-hack tea" in any quantity.

He has "garget root" for ailing cows and lobelia for horses, and smartweed for "giving a sweat."

Without pretending to medical skill, he has become the botanic doctor for the neighborhood.

The dreams of future business expansion which are seething in the brain of the herbalist would do credit to a captain of industry. Noticing that the canes of wild raspberries and wild blackberries were growing rankly by the sides of the miles of stone wall which surround the farm, the owner will pull up the wild growth and set the strips out to cultivated varieties, "because," said Burgess, "if one is growing fruit, he should have nothing but the best."

On a muggy day in early September when the writer drove over the hills of Holden and Dedham to visit the farm Mr. Burgess was found standing in the midst of his catnip plantation admiring the crop. There were twenty rows, every one of which was 45 rods long, and every plant in every row was at least four feet tall, branching out and hiding the ground. At that time the entire area was white with blossoms, which emitted an odor which could be smelled for half a mile.

"I have been thinking," said Burgess meditatively, "that I must go to keeping bees. Here are millions of catnip blossoms, and every one is just dripping with honey, and all this richness is wasted because I am too lazy to buy bees to help me gather it in. I never saw any catnip honey, and I believe nobody has ever put it on the market; but that makes no odds. There are hundreds of people living all around who will buy catnip honey and pay extra prices for it just on account of the name. I must buy a dozen swarms of bees next spring and try the experiment."

WHEN DOUGLAS HELD LINCOLN'S HAT.

Describing Lincoln's first inauguration in his "Reminiscences" in the March McClure's, Carl Schurz says: "I was favored with a place in front of the great portico of the Capitol, from which I could distinctly see and hear every part of the official function. I saw Lincoln step forward to the desk upon which the Bible lay—his rugged face, appearing above all those surrounding him, calm and sad, but so unlike any other in that distinguished assemblage that one might well have doubted how he and the others could work together. I saw Senator Douglas, his defeated antagonist, the 'little giant' of the past, who only two years before had haughtily treated Lincoln like a tall dwarf, standing close by him. I witnessed the remarkable scene when Lincoln, about to deliver his inaugural address, could not at once find a convenient place for his hat, and Douglas took it and held it like an attendant while Lincoln was speaking. I saw the withered form of Chief Justice Taney, the author of the famous Dred Scott Decision, that judicial compound of the doctrine of slavery, administer the oath of office to the first President elected on a distinct anti-slavery platform. I saw, standing by, the outgoing President, James Buchanan, with his head slightly inclined on one side, and his winking eye, and his white neckcloth—the man who had done more than any other to degrade and demoralize the national government and to encourage the rebellion, now destined to retire to an unhonored obscurity and to the dreary task of trying to make the world believe that he was a better patriot and statesman than he appeared. I heard every word pronounced by Abraham Lincoln's kindly voice, of that inaugural address which was to be a message of peace and good-will, but the reception of which in the South as a proclamation of war, showed clearly that no offer of compromise, indeed, that nothing short of complete acceptance of their scheme of an independent slave-holding empire, would have satisfied the Southern leaders."

SONG OF A ROBIN.

I heard a robin singing,
  When the world lay white and drear
And ne'er a ray of sunshine fell
  His little heart to cheer.
I listen'd to the gladness
  That was mingled in his song,
And from my heart the shadows fell
  In weary years, and long.

I heard a robin singing,
  When the skies were dark above,
And from the song a lesson learned
  Of hope, and trust, and love.
It spoke to me of patience,
  Of a spring our hearts shall know,
Where snows of winter falleth not,
  And cold winds never blow.

Report of Riverside Institutes.

INQUIRERS concerning the report of the proceedings of the citrus fruit institute recently held at Riverside may be informed that the stenographic notes are in the hands of Ralph E. Smith, of the Whittier experimental station. The report will be published by the University and will be freely distributed. The California Fruit Grower says that no more valuable work has yet been given out by the State.

Heavy Soil for Grapes.

A CORRESPONDENT who says he is expecting to plant a vineyard in adobe soil asks what may be the result. The grape is no special-soil product. It will do well in this State upon almost any soil we have if climatic conditions are good for this fruit. But the vine grower should be more particular than the vine, for there is a vast difference in the amount and quality of the cultivation requisite for success upon different soils. Hence, adobe or clayey land should not be selected by preference for the grape, for where the humus is, there will the shrinkage be most in evidence. This process of lessening in bulk ruptures the rootlets near the drying surface, and there are the rootlets of the grape more liable to injury. A soil that must be constantly coaxed with the cultivator to prevent cracks and rifts is not the soil for a fruit where cheapness of care is so essential as with this fruit. Some heavy soils lose more than 10 per cent. of their bulk in drying, and this must be injurious to any crop where the roots are easily broken.

On the other hand, sand does not change its bulk perceptibly by wetting or drying. Then, if we could secure the available fertility in sand, it would be the ideal for cheap crops, or crops whose price will not justify continued expense in working and irrigation. This explains why a rich, sandy loam is most desirable. It is a soil where the sand particles interpose between clay particles, making clay adhesion less and thereby ensmalling the spaces of separation. In other words, the sand prevents cracking of the soil, and it does not adhere or "cake." Not only does it lessen mechanical root injury in dry weather; but it makes capillary action more regular with its concomitant of more regular feeding qualities. Grape growers should study ease of cultivation, for it is more essential in this crop than in some others.

Resistant Vines.

JUDGING from the number of resistant grape vines now finding their way here from the north, in spite of, or through the provisions of that famous county ordinance, we should soon have plenty of home-grown stock of resistants for propagation. I do not know to what extent our local nurserymen are preparing for the run on resistant varieties or species. I do know that the popularity of these kinds will greatly facilitate the introduction of phylloxera if these importations continue on account of the lack of home-grown stock in local nurseries. This matter is becoming more serious every year. The Vitis vinifera is entirely non-resistant. All our vines are of this species of grape. So far not a vine is known to be affected south of the Tehachapi Mountains. To keep the phylloxera out is one of our most urgent duties. Yet we must have resistant vines, so if this pest does get into our vineyards there will be some immunities. The phylloxera is as liable to introduction on the roots of resistants as upon the vinifera. A resistant vine is one which will live under the attacks of this pest. The insect does not increase as rapidly upon its roots as upon those of the other; where it does get a hold the swellings of the root tissues of the resistant made by the phylloxera do not extend deeper than the bark of the rootlets, and are sloughed off every year, leaving the roots healthy and sound. The Vitis riparia, Vitis rupestris and their hybrids are almost wholly immune from damage when attacked by this pest. The Vitis rotundifolia (the Scuppernong) has the highest resistance, but it is useless as a grafting stock. As the grape is the only fruit stock that is taboo under this ordinance, we are standing in our own light here in not propagating it, for in so doing our nurserymen would not interfere with but a small portion of the trade of the north.

Land for Planting.

WHETHER one is preparing to plant one, or one thousand orchard trees, the land should be properly prepared. Judging from the activities of the nurserymen and tree dealers at this time the many people are interested in this work. In the first place, the ground should be properly leveled, if it is not already in that condition, especially if it is to be irrigated. It is essential that the soil be well plowed and fined, for some of it cannot be stirred again as long as the trees occupy the land. I believe more depends upon the tilth of the soil when the trees are set out than is usually considered, for the tree roots soon begin to ramify the soil, and their physical status depends largely upon the character of the area in which the new roots are to establish themselves for life.

Hence the careful preparation of the land is most essential, and, while only a portion of it is to be utilized, for a while only a little of it, the adage: "As the twig is bent the tree's inclined," may be applied to the roots as well. Deep preparatory plowing, fine harrowing and compacting are not labor lost, for this work not only gives the trees a better start to growing, but makes cultivation far less burdensome the first year of the orchard's life.

Thompson's Seedless Grape.

THIS grape was named by the Sutter County Horticultural Society, after W. Thompson, of Yuba county, who brought the cutting to California in 1878 from Elwanger & Barry, of Rochester, N. Y. It was then described as "a grape from Constantinople, named Lady Decoverly." When it fruited in Sutter county, it was seen to be superior to the Sultana, and has been propagated largely. It is now found in all parts of the State. The variety is described by Dr. Eisen as follows: "Oval; greenish-yellow; as large as the Sultana; seedless, with thin skin; good but not strong flavor, and without that acid which characterizes the Sultana grape and raisin; bunches large, or very large; vine an enormous bearer."

Mr. Bioletti, of the University of California, considers the variety identical with the Sultana of Asia Minor and gives this description: "Vine very vigorous and with large trunk and very long canes; leaves glabrous on both sides; dark yellowish-green above and light below, generally three-lobed, with shallow sinuses, teeth short and obtuse, bunch large, conico-cylindrical, well filled, on herbaceous peduncles; berries under medium, crisp, of neutral flavor, with moderately thick skin of a fine golden yellow."—[Wickson.

Ramie.

RAMIE is a most aluring plant because the fiber is so valuable, but so exceedingly hard to get. There is no trouble in raising the plant, but the fiber is so inextricably interwoven with the bark and refractory gums that thus far no commercially profitable method of separating it has been found. One government after another has tried its hand at it, both by direct appropriation and by the offering of large rewards, but nothing has come of it. Senator Heyburn of Idaho has introduced a bill in Congress appropriating $110,000 for experiments to be conducted on government property, near Washington, and the bill has been favorably reported to the Senate. It cannot, however, become a law at this session.—[Chronicle.

Causes of Scale Infection.

IN regard to the causes that have led to the unparalleled and persistent infection of the fruit groves of Southern California, exuberance of tree growth is no doubt one of the leading causes, for it is a well-known fact that the more vigorous the trees the stronger the colonies of scale. This accounts in part for the relative freedom from scale of mature trees, and we may perhaps look for further immunity as the groves get older and consequently less vigorous. The opportunities of infection have also become greater as the land has filled solidly to citrus fruit orchards, infection is promoted by the increased activities of cultivation, pruning and harvesting. The agency of birds is a contingency, and a very grave one as the fruit trees grow larger and afford a better harbor for the harmless insects upon which the birds feed. In some instances it has been clearly shown that migratory birds have spread the scale in the direction of their migration as they fed from grove to grove. It is very common to find bad scale infestation around a bird's nest with no contamination in any other part of the tree or grove. Ants may carry the larvae of scale, and we know they patrol an infected tree with a persistency that is not disinterested, and to the disadvantage of the smaller beneficial insects. I have believed for many years that the grower himself is one of the principal agencies through which the distribution of orchard pests is effected. Through handling the fruit from one packing-house he has made the community packing plant a clearing-house for the dissemination of insect foes. Whatever the cause of the continued infection of our groves, they are but the working of natural means, which, if better understood and resisted would lessen the virulence of old infections and perhaps largely prevent the new. To better determine these matters and apply the most effective methods of prevention and control may be the most important business of the growers and their officials. It certainly equals in importance any other phase of fruit culture in Southern California.

Fanatical Farmers.

SECRETARY WILSON is reported to have expressed a wish to have an experimental farm in every county in the Union, and thereupon, in alluding to this hope of the Secretary of Agriculture one of the leading agricultural papers of the East reads the Secretary a lecture. I quote from this criticism of the Secretary to show how some of the eastern farmers have to feed upon misadvice from their farm journals. The quotation is worth your while to examine, and is as follows: "By the time Mr. Wilson gets all his experimental farms in operation, farmers ought to be able to raise twice as much as they do now and to sell it for half what they there are other struggling citizens the ling the government should help also. there are the plow manufacturers. They and are making a very useful article. Why government establish some experimental to teach these people how to make more ones? A shop that now produces ten easily be taught by scientific government produce twenty, and if all these factories double their outputs, what a benefit it good people who make plows, and there so much danger of a scarcity of these Some people can't see the ridiculousness you knock the wool from over their eyes its own absurdity."

Let us note where the real absurdity critics comes in. Ten perfect plows can day at this factory. That is its capacity, be producing ten bushels of wheat to the capacity is thirty bushels under Secretary lage. Again, the farm that is producing only normal yield is rapidly deteriorating, and not only losing his labor but his investment disappearing. Another point is that the Agriculture is striving to suit the crop environment, to make a given amount of the maximum of yield and quality, to while it is engaged in the production of erally to preserve the basis of national tecting and preserving the land. These who would have the Secretary close up because its work, in their eyes, has a tendency overproduction are not of the California culturists. The paper from which I quote resent the only pure brand of farm has not the sense to see that Secretary ments are calculated to drive out the slovenly ing farmer, who may soon ruin our base of ruinous stewardship; that ten-bushel competitive upon the markets as thirty and if everybody raised skimpy, worthless values would soon be as nothing instead of the remarkable advance of the last few years son's policies are to preserve the capital farmers, which is the land, and yet allow better profit than if everybody tried how raise upon the land. One more short our journal of economics will show how sets forth for the benefit of its readers: fail to see how the farmers can possibly financial benefit from the present institute the work is of acknowledged benefit as far of the new pure food law upon the for canned vegetables would not prove the consensus of opinion at last week's of canners. This big meeting, composed of five associations, representing a modern industry operating 3200 plants, and employing more than 64,000 persons, was held at Buffalo. The National Wholesale Grocery Association also held its meeting at the same time.

The position was taken by some prominent delegates that the rules of the Department of Agriculture requiring labels on canned goods would increase public confidence in the purity of vegetables so prepared, and thus in the long run would help the industry. Some took the stand that the per capita consumption of canned goods is not as large as it should be, and believe that by adoption of progressive methods, greater faith of the public in the purity of output on various factories, etc., the per capita consumption can be increased fully 25 per cent.

The government chemist, Dr. H. W. Wiley, addressed the meeting and in his talk condemned the use of all preservatives in canned vegetables, fruits, etc. The proposition was evolved of forming a gigantic pure food association to consist of the amalgamated canners' organizations. Election of officers for the western association resulted in the selection of L. A. Sears of Ohio as president, and F. F. Wiley of Edenburg, Ind., as secretary.—[Orange Judd Farmer.

Best White Flowers.

THE most appropriate flowker for Easter is unquestionably the lily, because it has been associated for the longest time with Easter. The Easter lily of today is not the lily of history and of religious painting. It was not until the early eighties that the Madonna or Annunciation lily was displaced as an Easter flower by the Bermuda lily. The Madonna lily does not bloom outdoors in Northern United States at Easter time, as it does in Southern Europe, and it is not so easily forced into bloom as is the Bermuda lily. Moreover, the Bermuda lily is generally considered to be a more beautiful flower. It is a longer and larger flower and shaped like a trumpet, whereas the Madonna lily is bell-shaped.

The marguerite or Paris daisy makes an excellent cut flower if cut with stems long enough to have some of its own foliage. If you have a plant, however, remove the flowers as they fade and new ones will be produced. If this is given ordinary care it will last in the house until all danger of frost is over. Then plant it outdoors, and it will give scattering blossoms all summer. Do not try to bring it in the house next fall, but as soon as the frost has killed it pull it up and throw it away. If it is convenient to grow a few plants of the marguerite for next winter's flowers make tip cuttings of the ends of the branches in the early part of May and as soon as rooted, plant outdoors and pot early next September. As it is rather difficult to lift considerable care must be exercised, but it can be safely done.—[Garden Magazine.

Diseased Palms.

I WAS called out to one of the most beautiful homes in Los Angeles recently to look at some Phoenix canariensis palms that were not doing well. And this is what we found, with a few suggestions upon the observations of the conditions. One plant was of immense size, healthy and growing beautifully, yet the lower leaves were killed with the fungus so common to this palm. It had a lot of ferns growing about the trunk as high as one's head and was surrounded by tall, shady trees which made a damp situation for a palm subjected to fungus attack. Another plant of the same variety in an open part of the yard was not injured with the fungus, only a few specimens of the parasite being found. From this we conclude that the situation has something to do with the virulence of this fungoid disease. The owner of the palm intends to have the leaves scrubbed with Bordeaux mixture, which will be more efficient than spraying, although the cost would be prohibitive in any case other than that of a long purse. In some instances this fungoid attack has killed the Phoenix palms in Los Angeles city, and if the trouble becomes more virulent it will be difficult to grow palms of this species, or, at least to retain the lower leaves in a cleanly and healthful state.

Size of Farms.

ARE farms getting larger or smaller? The natural expectation would be that large farms would be divided as population increases. It ought to be so, but the time for such division is not yet. It must, however, be near. As long as people get homesteads free in the United States there will not be much division of the farms, but the era of free homesteads is about gone. One can almost rejoice that it is so, for the major portion of the farms in the country are entirely too large. This is true of all areas where corn stalks are not utilized, and where the straw of cereals is burned. Nor should there be any immediate concern about the lack of holdings for farmers. The farming population could be doubled without adding one acre to farm areas. When farms are thus divided, the standard of farming will be higher than now.

Fruit Fads.

THE western-slope people have generally adopted the plan of planting the very best specimens of apple stock regardless of variety. They do this to secure the best possible root system with a hardy top as the first consideration. Subsequently they change the character of the tree as it comes into bearing by top working the branches in a gradual way into the most desirable market varieties such as the dictates of a fastidious market may demand with the ever-changing fancies of the people. A commercial orchard nowadays somewhat resembles a millinery store in that it is always subject to the whims of fashion and the dictates of style. The American people are becoming so fanciful that their whole existence is based on the theory of faddism and we regret to say that the tendency is even affecting the growth and culture of our orchards, and this condition will probably continue so long as the great raft of consumers shall insist on following the silly custom of buying fruit by the eye rather than by judgment or the palate. One of the new stocks for planting goes by the name of the Reagan Red, an almost unheard-of variety which is nothing more nor less than the old Ben Davis, and we all know what that is.—[Field and Farm.

Roses may be pruned and manure spaded in any time during the month. In March they will begin to sprout for the spring crop. Do not prune such climbers at the present time as Double and Single Cherokee, the Banksias, Beauty of Glazenwood, Gold of Ophir, etc., as their bloom is produced all along the branches. The best time to prune these is after their spring crop, when they will have time during the summer to grow long branches for bloom the next season.

While natural manures are best for cultivated ground, we cannot advise such for lawns, the risk being too great unless you now have a lawn so poor that nothing can harm it. Unless natural manures have been thoroughly wet and repeatedly turned over and mixed each time of wetting, you cannot be sure that it does not contain some live seeds of pernicious weeds, Bermuda grass, etc.—[California Cultivator.

HUNTING THE FLORIDA SEA COW.

One morning, just after we had started on our daily cruise, a series of swirls in the water near us, the language of which was then unfamiliar, seemed to tell of a frightened crocodile and that the hunt was on. We followed the zigzagging trail of muddy water as fast as we could scull and pole, getting occasional glimpses of a fleeing something, until the full view of it under the bow of the skiff gave me the chance I was seeking. As the harpoon struck a broad back, which was not that of a crocodile, the creature rose above the surface, and a big beaverlike tail deluged me with half a barrel of water as it struck and nearly swamped the skiff, and told me that I had at last found the manatee which I had vainly hunted during many years. For hours we chased the creature, keeping a light strain on the harpoon-line, frightening him as he came up to breathe, until, exhausted, he rose more and more frequently, and I made a score of unsuccessful casts of a lasso at this specimen of the wild cattle of the sea. Finally the manatee came to the surface to breathe so near the skiff that I put my left arm around his neck as far as it would go and tried to slip the noose over his head with my right. The sudden lifting of his head threw me upon his back, while a twist of his big tail sent me sprawling. We were swamped four times while working the manatee into shallow water, where we got overboard, fastened a line around him, and soon had him under control, although when the captain got astride of the creature he was promptly made to turn a back somersault. Docile as our captive had become, he was yet eleven feet long, of massive proportions, and a weight which was difficult to handle. We tore the seats out of the skiff, sank it, and succeeded in getting the creature over it. Then, having bailed out the water, we were paddling the overladen craft out of the bay, when a cataclysm left us swimming side by side, while a submerged skiff was being towed Gulfward by a rejoicing manatee. We soon recaptured and persuaded him into shallow water, where I herded him while the captain went to the big boat for an anchor and cable, with which we made our captive fast, giving him two hundred feet of rope in an excellent sea-cow pasture.—[A. W. Dimock, in Harper's.

THE WORST CLIMATES.

"Speaking of rank climates," said a globe trotter, "I have experienced the three worst.

"Of these three unspeakable climates I give the palm to the Straits of Magellan. There it rains, on an average, 350 days in the year. The wind blows a hurricane from January to December. The thermometer never rises much above the freezing point. A year-round of raw, bitter days of rain and snow.

"Next comes Sierra Leone, on the African west coast. That low-lying, marshy region has an average temperature of 81 degrees, and the annual rainfall is 189 inches—enormous. There are, too, the 'smokes.' These are mists, smelling like oyster mud, that rise continually from the marshes, giving marsh fever to nine out of ten of the white men that breathe them. A year round of hot and sticky days, with vile-smelling clouds of mist and whirring clouds of mosquitoes.

"Last come the high table-lands of Central Asia, where the lack of moisture in the air makes the days Saharan and the nights Arctic. Days like a red-hot furnace, nights like a January blizzard—before this range of temperature no human constitution can stand up."

The Right To Be Born Well.

SURELY, any intelligent person will be willing to admit that there is no more important subject affecting the human race than the breeding of children. Social reformers and philanthropists devote much time and attention to the care and training of children, after they are born. This is something like the action of the farmer, who should plant any old kind of seed that is sent to him, without regard to its quality, and then devote a vast amount of care and labor to the cultivation of the crop. Or it is like the practice of the "regular" medical fraternity, who, instead of seeking out the cause of disease, and removing it, tinker with the effects.

It would be ludicrous, were it not desperately sad, to note how vast an amount of care and money is devoted to the raising of improved breeds of cattle, and hogs, and chickens, and dogs, and cats, also of vegetables and flowers, while the improvement of the breed of the human race is altogether ignored. It is a safe assertion to make that not one child in a hundred thousand that is born into the world comes as the result of deliberate intention and preparation on the part of its parents. They are almost all "little accidents," however elaborate the ceremony may have been that joined together their parents in holy wedlock.

It is of little avail to lavish care and attention upon children after they are born, if, in the first place, they have been wrongly begotten, and in the second place, their prenatal culture has been entirely neglected, the mother perhaps being subjected to adverse mental and physical influences during the nine months that she has carried her child under her heart. As Gerald Massey says:

"We must begin in the creatory if we would benefit the race, and woman must rescue herself and consciously assume all responsibility of maternity on behalf of the children."

Following is an extract on the same subject from a book entitled "Love's Way to Perfect Humanhood," by Agnes Benham of Adelaide, South Australia:

"A cruel wrong is perpetrated upon a woman when she becomes an unwilling mother. How far-reaching its consequences none can say, since it may blast the whole earthly life of the babe who is born under its awful shadow. Is it possible that a man can realize the dreadful feeling of despair that comes over a woman when she first knows that she is enciente against her will! The emotions of a trapped and tortured animal must be nearest akin to those she feels. Nature's due instinct of cherishing and tenderly providing for the little life so bound up within her own is turned ofttimes to the deadliest hatred, and she will shrink from no danger, not even from the risk of death to herself, to get rid of what she regards as an unwelcome burden."

Dr. Holbrook, the well-known writer on health and disease, said: "Some of the most wayward persons I have known were born of mothers who tried unsuccessfully to destroy them before birth." The mother of Charles J. Guiteau had children in rapid succession. They were in poor circumstances and she was forced to work hard. Before the birth of this child she had resorted to every possible means of procuring an abortion, but without success, and during the latter part of her pregnancy she had brain fever. When the child at last came into the world, it was weak and puny, and for many months it was one continued wail."

Ella Wheeler Wilcox—who of late years has devoted much of her able mentality to the study of sociological questions—recently wrote as follows, in a Chicago newspaper:

"The generally-accepted idea of a legitimate child is one born in wedlock. According to the usage of words, it does suffice to legitimize a child, when a marriage ceremony has taken place between the father and mother.

"But in the higher court of nature something more is required. That something is love between the parents, especially love in the mother's heart for the father of the child.

"That is the only excuse for conception.

"The mother who carries through the long prenatal months a child of a man she does not love, and whose caresses are hateful to her, sins against the Holy Ghost, and bears an illegitimate child, no matter if all the clergymen and priests and all the lawmakers of the land have pronounced them husband and wife.

"Abnormal, diseased, idiotic, insane and half-developed children are frequently born in wedlock; they are rarely found born out of wedlock."

There has been visiting in Los Angeles during the past month Moses Harman of Chicago. Mr. Harman has for twenty-seven years been the publisher of "Lucifer," a small fortnightly magazine. Many have a misunderstanding of the meaning of this name. In Webster's dictionary we read: "Lucifer is no profane or satanic title. It is the Latin Luciferus, the Light Bringer, the morning star." Mr. Harman is also the author of several books on sexual subjects, especially the right of woman to the control of her own body, and the right of a child to be born well. For propagating this doctrine he has been persistently persecuted, and has been several times imprisoned. He is a grandfather, 77 years of age, although appearing at least twenty years younger, a man of pure mind, and high ideals. Yet this man has recently served a term of one year's imprisonment, with hard labor, in the Joliet penitentiary.

In replying to a request from the editor for a brief statement of Mr. Harman's views and teachings on this important subject, he wrote as follows:

"The institutions—laws and customs—of any people are as good and as bad as the people themselves who make those laws and customs, or who passively endure such laws and customs when formulated and imposed upon them by others. Hence, to get better laws and customs we must first have better people. To get better people we must look to heredity, to prenatal influences, rather than to post-natal influences, commonly called environment.

"Responsibility of maternity involves and includes choice of paternity—not once only for all time, but as often as woman undertakes the role of motherhood. It involves and includes the right to demand and to receive such recognition and reward for her work as maker and builder of new human beings, as that she shall be supplied with all the accessories necessary to perfect child-building, such as proper food, clothing, housing, works of art, literature, leisure, amusements, etc., etc., and above all it involves and includes immunity from unwelcome invasion of her person by any man, whether he owns a certificate of marriage, giving him 'marital rights' over her person, or not.

"In one word, eugenics—the science of good generation, the natural right of each child to a sound mind in a sound body, through free, intelligent and self-responsible motherhood, is to my thinking incomparably the most important of all sciences, most vitally important of all sociological and political reforms, and therefore to this science, to this reform, I have given the maturity of my manhood, and for more than twenty-five years have risked everything—life, fortune, good name and friends—everything except honor, in the effort to bring about a better understanding of this science, and a more universal acceptance of this reform.

"My greatest foe through all these years has been the ages-old superstition that sex is vile, impure, unclean, unless sanctified by the blessing of priest or magistrate, and the further superstition that it is the province or duty of civil government to define and regulate the morals of women and men. Twenty years ago I was arrested for alleged violation of the postal law, forbidding the dissemination of so-called obscene literature, and since that arrest I have been more than half the time a prisoner behind the bars and wearing the attire of a convict, or a prisoner at large under heavy bonds for my appearance at court. My first sentence was for five years in the penitentiary and a fine of $300, and since that sentence I have several times been sentenced to a year in prison. All told, I have served thirty-two months of these various sentences.

"Naturally, then, a good part of my work has been directed toward the repeal or essential modification of the laws that deny freedom of speech, freedom of press and mails, in regard to the discussion of eugenics—including the right of woman to be self-owning when performing the most important of all human duties, that of giving life and character to new human beings."

Many people who have given this important subject no attention class every one who ventures to criticise, in any degree, the present system of sexual relations, as an advocate of "free love," by which is usually understood looseness and licentiousness. Mr. Harman believes that monogamy is the ideal condition of men and women, and he is entirely opposed to promiscuity.

Mr. Harman is by no means the only person who has been punished during the past few years for speaking out plainly on this important subject, that concerns every man and woman, as well as children yet to be born. Mrs. Stockham, of Chicago, a venerable woman, at the head of the Stockham Publishing Company, was arrested, not long ago, and fined several hundred dollars, for publishing a booklet giving information of great value to young people who are about to be married. Yet, at the same time, we find passing through the mails, all over the country, publications teeming with thinly-veiled announcements of means for procuring abortion, and of assignation houses, besides all kinds of gratuitously suggestive and sometimes actually obscene matter.

This tendency to restrict the liberty of the press can but be noted with apprehension and concern by all patriotic citizens, whatever their opinion may be as to the particular subject at issue. Rev. Dr. Sylvanus Stall, second vice-president of the National Purity Federation, and editor of several books in the "Self and Sex Series," that have been reviewed in these columns, recently declared that whatever may have been the object of the man who formulated that law, and of the men who cause it to be entered on the Federal statute book, the practical working of that law has been to retard and defeat the work of the Purity Federation. He added:

"Today a man may deliberately murder his wife by a series of exactions and wrongs; he may bring to his own home disease as the result of his own impure life, and deliberately infect his own wife with a disease which is now annually sending many thousands of women to the dissecting table for surgical treatment of the most serious nature, and which is causing the death of thousands of pure, innocent and unsuspicious wives; and yet the law makes it a crime for the physician who

The American people are bountifully possessed of what a Los Angeles publication recently referred to as "the ability to forget," having already almost forgotten the awful disclosures made by Upton Sinclair, just as the man who swears off at New Year's soon forgets his good resolution. They might, however, manage to remember this. Hogs, and cattle, and sheep cost money. Thousands upon thousands of these valuable carcasses are slaughtered in a condition that makes them altogether unfit for human food. To expect that the owners of those carcasses will, of their own accord, consign them all to destruction, and lose their value, is to ask a little too much of poor weak human nature. Therefore, those who eat flesh food should continually be on their guard, and should at least draw the line at canned flesh and cold-storage flesh, and sausage, as well as all kinds of entrails.

Marriage and Health.

THE secretary of the Iowa State Board of Health advocates the requirement of certificates of good health, before the issuance of a marriage license.

This is a good idea. The only trouble is that if you make it too difficult for people to come together legally, they will proceed to live together illegally. It is not the marriage of unfit persons that concerns the public, but the breeding by them of unfit children, and that can take place just as well without as with the sanction of the church, or state.

The Mosaic Laws and Rabbits.

THE question of why the Mosaic law forbids the eating of the rabbit, a clean feeder, and apparently unobjectionable, so far as flesh food is concerned, was recently discussed in this department. Mrs. Anna Keuhl, of Corona, a close student of the Bible, suggests that the reason is because the rabbit is a short-lived animal, and subject to diseases of the throat. It is a well-known fact that the California jack rabbit, an animal that much resembles the European hare, is subject, at certain seasons of the year, to boils, so that old Californians can seldom be induced to eat the animal.

Again, E. Benninghoven writes on the same subject from Pacific Grove as follows

"Referring to rabbits as forbidden by Moses to be eaten, and your questioning some time ago the soundness of such law, I will say that I have killed and skinned many rabbits in my youth as a hunter (for the family table only), and that I am persuaded to regard the teaching of Moses as absolutely justified by the facts as I have found them. They prove that there is no four-footed animal in existence which is more unclean sexually and which is found to be afflicted so often with syphilis, so that this dreadful disease has become more or less hereditary in the rabbit tribe. I have skinned half a dozen jack rabbits at a time and had to throw every one of the carcasses away on account of this unmistakable evidence. The cottontail is even worse in a certain way, because it feeds on human excrement as often as it can be reached. I have tracked enough rabbits in the the snow to know that this is true."

Brushing the Teeth.

A CORRESPONDENT asks whether "for one who is living on a raw food diet, it is necessary or even beneficial to brush the teeth every day." Not so much so as in the case of those who eat mixed food, including meat. The fibrin of the meat does the worst damage to teeth, by lodging in the interstices and decaying. Next to that are the gases from decomposing food, that rise and eat out the enamel, and thirdly, the sudden change from boiling hot coffee to iced water, which you cannot expect teeth to withstand.

In a natural fruit diet, the acid of fruit tends to cleanse the teeth, and keep down the tartar. Then, if you thoroughly chew grains, that acts as a brush. At the same time, unless the teeth are entirely perfect—and how many civilized teeth are entirely perfect—it is well to brush them morning and evenings. Also, thoroughly rinse the mouth mornings and evening, and before each meal.

Hygienic Books.

IN a review of a book entitled "Eating for Strength" published in last week's Care of the Body, the address of the publishers was incorrectly printed, as "24 E. 20 street, Boston." The correct address is Fowler & Wells Co., 24 E. 22nd street, New York. This old established firm, founded in 1835, publishes a catalogue of books on hygiene phrenology and similar subjects. All who are interested in the subject would do well to send for it.

Whiskers and Kisses.

CHANNING SEVERANCE sent the following some time ago:

"If the greachers and the doctors should cease playing upon the fears of human beings, what would be left to occupy their attention? I sometimes wonder. When we are not shaken over hell by the D. D.'s, the M. D.'s are filling us with terror in some form in connection with the proximity of death.

"Quite recently our attention has been called, by Dr. Forline—who evidently desires to displace Dr. Osler as an object of public attention—to the fearful menace that threatens the extinction of the human race because microbes roost in our whiskers. Once more he solemnly informs us that disease and death lurk in the kiss of a man wearing a mustache; while whiskers, unless worn à la Horace Greeley or Oom Paul, are more deadly than our municipal gas plant at present—at least the inference is such from his words.

"It is simply awful to think of the many ways nature has provided to insure sickness and death, and yet how many of our ancestors escaped because such things were unknown to them. When we reflect on the fact that our prehistoric and troglodyte progenitors, who knew nothing of razors or shaving tools, yet managed to perpetuate the human race, and to insure by an unbroken line our presence here today, it seems almost miraculous. As the microbe must have existed then though they knew it not, because the microscope was not invented, we have evidence additional that bliss and ignorance do walk hand in hand. But how did they escape, is the question? The 'scientific explanation,' I find, after deep research, is given by Finck in Primitive Love and Love Stories. He asserts that savages have no kisses, no caresses. Then it follows, clear as sunlight; no kisses, no microbes; no microbes, no consumption. But the man who thinks is again puzzled, for kissing is not a modern method of duty or pleasure; and many women now seriously warned by Dr. Forline to desist, if they value health and life, from kissing men with whiskers, have long indulged in such dangerous osculations without injury. And I remember a woman 'back East' whose husband had whiskers on him like a 'Rooshun,' yet her health was as good as to be almost vulgar, for her complexion was ruddy, eyes naturally bright and sparkling, and she did her housework without complaining. No doubt others have known of such cases; and yet, if the much-learned doctor is correct with his facts and assumptions, every man with whiskers would have an invalid wife or be a widower if long married.

"It is estimated by some that mortal man has been around here for 180,000 years, and others handy with figures make it millions; yet no signs of his extinction appear, so far, with all the kissing known to be going on in the world. In fact, Malthus thought it was our fate to increase so fast that we would some day get ahead of the food supply. We know that war, famine and pestilence have swept this old earth time, time and again, and yet the population is greater than ever. If that triplet combination has been unable to prevent a steady increase, let us not be unduly worried by Dr. Forline and his microbe. And if any have followed his advice and quit kissing through fear of meeting the undertaker, I will risk my reputation as a reliable authority on the subject, by advising resumption of the practice.

"Seriously, however, is it not enough to make a cat laugh at the way the medical profession works on the fears and the fancies of human credulity? Their handy knife has just filled another premature grave with a man whose constitution should easily have carried him over 80 years, and probably would, if that modern disease, appendicitis, had remained undiscovered by 'medical science.' The laws of health are few and simple, and if generally known and obeyed, knife and pill doctors would gradually decrease in numbers and influence; for medical superstition must and will follow the religious brand, as general intelligence increases."

Sleeping Out Doors.

SLEEPING out of doors—or, at least, on screen porches—is getting to be quite popular. It is the most sensible hygienic fad that has been introduced for many a long day. Let it be remembered, also, that this practice is good, not only for consumption, but for every other illness that poor humanity has brought upon itself.

In the Cosmopolitan, Dr. Margaret Brewster recently told how her health had improved, as the result of open-air rest. As she says, one great advantage of this "cure' is that it does not necessitate the giving up of home and business. Care must, of course, be taken to see that the body is kept comfortably warm.

Dr. Brewster notes the vast difference in the time of sleep required out of doors, as compared with indoors. She says that seven hours is now quite enough for her, whereas she formerly felt terribly abused if she did not get nine hours indoors. This is quite easy to understand. People who sleep in ill-ventilated rooms pass the time more in stupor than in sound, refreshing sleep.

A National Disgrace.

WHO would have thought, when the Declaration of Independence was written, that before the second century of this nation's existence had half elapsed hundreds of thousands of children would be working long hours, for small wage, under unsanitary conditions? In America over 142,000 children are working at the age of 10 years, and the number gradually increases until there are over 268,000 working at the age of 13, 500,000 at 15. The sum total of all children working between the ages of 10 and 15 years is nearly 2,000,000.

Again, the census of 1900 showed that we had half a million native-born American white children, between the ages of 10 and 15, who could neither read nor write.

The percentage of girls employed has increased faster than the boys. What chance have these girls of becoming mothers of children who are physically and mentally sound?

This condition of affairs is not only disgraceful, from a humane point of view, but it threatens the very life of the nation, for a nation in which it is necessary to keep children of tender age at hard labor is foreordained to destruction, and deserves to be destroyed.

Criticism Preferred to Compliments.

FOLLOWING, from L. A. Ross, of 628 Westlake avenue, is a sample of similar letters received daily—sometimes several in a day:

"I beg to most heartily thank you for your invaluable instructions that I eagerly read, each week, in the 'Care of the Body' department of The Times. I am nearly 72, and would have crossed the dark river ere this had I not availed myself of your wisdom and suggestions, that just hit my case exactly. My afflictions are kidney and liver trouble and slight touch of rheumatism in my 'left hind leg.'

"Have quit the use of flesh meat, cane sugar, salt, tea and coffee, and assure you that I am 100 per cent. better in my physical condition because of this abstinence. I read your contribution the first thing every Sunday morning. You are, indeed, a great public benefactor."

While the editor appreciates and values such recognition of the work The Times permits him to do in the "Care of the Body" department—which work is merely the teaching of people to think for themselves—he would remind readers that criticism is more welcome to him than compliments—that is to say, honest, not carping criticism. He is not of those who believe they know it all, or are too old to learn.

The Renewal of Youth.

"REFLECTIONS ON REJUVENESCENCE" is the title of an article, in pamphlet form, by Dr. J. Mount Bleyer, F.R.A.M.S., LL.D., of New York, reprinted from the Medical Brief. Dr. Bleyer shows how nature constantly and carefully provides for the reproduction of the species, in plant, in animal, and in man. He refers to the efforts of the alchemist, in the middle ages, who sought to procure rejuvenescence by the aid of the philosopher's stone. He refers to a German author, who cites thirty or forty authentic cases of the cutting of new teeth in old age, many of them octogenarians. He also refers to the "fountain of youth," vainly sought for so many years.

Some people think they may find a modern version of this fountain of youth in mineral springs. A hopeless quest. The more mineral water contains, the less adapted it is for drinking purposes, and the sooner it will bring on senility. The only true fountain of youth is that which all may absorb, if they please, at nature's breast. Eat moderately of clean food, from which the organic salts have not been eliminated, breathe fresh air night and day, and think cheerful thoughts. This is the only way in which to find rejuvenescence. The man who conscientiously follows out this programme of obeying nature's simple laws will soon find himself growing young in body and mind, and all his faculties will become much keener. You must not, however, expect, as some misguided persons do, that you may live forever. At least, not in this form, for you, like the "everlasting" hills and the planetary system, and everything else in the universe, are subject to the great law of change—constant change.

Care of Invalids.

THIS is the title of another of the revised series of medical pocket handbooks published by the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York. It contains some good suggestions, also some that are open to criticism, the author being evidently one who is imbued with the good old-fashioned "regular" ideas in regard to disinfectants. A medical lecturer is quoted as saying that fumigations as a rule act on the principle of "one stink stinking out another stink." There is much truth in this. A disinfectant should be something more than a mere disguiser of awful odors.

The following in regard to what a nurse should be and as to cheerfulness in a sick room is good. It might be added that a good nurse, like a poet, is born, not made, although of course she may improve her usefulness by study and experience

"A good nurse should have keen perceptions and the refined ways of a lady, and at the same time she should not be above supplying all the patient's needs. She should never talk of the dying agonies of her last case, or relate any of her previous cases, whatever they might have been. She should be able to judge when the patient must be kept quiet and when he may see a friend. Such a person, without giving offense, must assume the responsibility of forbidding the discussion of worrying household troubles in the sick room, and the responsibility, likewise, of getting rid of a visitor who has stayed too long—especially if the visitor belongs to that class of persons who seem to delight in telling the patient how some one else with the same symptoms had recently died in extreme convulsions. The lugubrious countenance assumed by such a visitor to harmonize with her conceptions of importance nsualy confirms the fears of the sick person to a remarkable degree, and the nurse has increased labor in quieting the apprehension thus cruelly excited. Conversations upon any subject should never be held just outside the chamber door, where a word now and then can be overheard, with what is suspected, by the poor patient is frequently the beginning of the worst. Remember always that a cheerful face 'doeth good like a medicine.'"

In the chapter on food the editor finds much to criticize, as might be expected. The author says "a little food at a time and often repeated is the general rule for sick people." It is a bad rule, and has caused the deaths of millions. An animal has sense enough to fast when it is sick. Surely a human being might have as much sense as a dog, but they haven't—not one in a hundred. There is the usual talk about "when a physician orders beef tea," although intelligent physicians now admit that there is comparatively little difference in the nourishing power of beef tea and urine, while both are full of that poison, uric acid. On a later page the author says:

"Florence Nightingale says on this subject that one of the most common errors among women in charge of the sick, respecting sick diet, is the belief that beef tea is the most nutritive of all articles. 'Now just try,' she says, 'and boil down a pound of beef into beef tea, evaporate the water, and see what is left of your beef. You will find that there is barely a teaspoonful of solid nour-

"There is, nevertheless, a certain nutritive value in as there is in tea. It may safelybegiven in almost inflammatory disease, but it should never be alone relied upon, especially where much nourishment is needed." A nice thing to put into a sick stomach, isn't stimulants in the shape of beef tea, wine and arrow whisky punch, or "whatever stimulant has been ordered by the physician" are recommended every hour, and this in the morning on an empty stomach, the first meal is taken, at 11 o'clock. Think of Why that would knock out an Arizona prospector, ted in. It is true the author says, with many that such stimulants as brandy and whisky not be ordered "unless there is absolutely no alternative."

In regard to bread, it is called the "staff of life" without reference to the vast difference between bread of the entire grain and the emasculated fermented bread, which not only starves the nerves, but produces gastric disturbances.

The author recommends the use by the sick of acid for which they always crave, especially in convalescence, but adds "sometimes the physician has good for not wishing them given as the acid may neutralize the decomposing semi-remedial agent employed." In order that the unnatural, nauseous poisons administered by a doctor may not be interfered with, the must be deprived of the soothing, cooling, healing medicine that nature wraps up in the luscious fruits.

The booklet is published by the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York, and is, the editor believes, applicants on request, in return for postage.

LONG TROLLEY RIDES.

Great Extension of Means of Travel by Electricity.

[Baltimore American:] Attractive page advertisements have appeared in eastern newspapers during the last three months announcing a projected electric double-track road connecting Chicago and New York City. According to the prospectus it will be a genuine air line, and will be built as quickly as investors put up the money. It will not be necessary to wait until this projected road is constructed in order to travel behind a smokeless motor from one city to the other. With the completion of the link between Erie, Pa., and Conneaut, O., the longest length of trolley systems in the world was connected up, practically making it possible to ride by electric car from Westfield, in New York State, through Northern Ohio to Jackson, Mich., a distance of 300 miles.

With the lines now building east of Westfield on the route to Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse and Albany, and a short line already provided for to the west of the western borders of Ohio, the ultimate connection of the two great metropolises should occupy but a year or so at most.

A writer in Van Norden's Magazine observes that the construction of electric lines is progressing in all parts of the country with a rapidity unparalleled in the history of transportation. Pittsburgh is soon to be only a trolley ride from Cleveland; Madison, Wis., from Chicago and Wheeling, W. Va., from Columbus, O. A fast electric line extends from Columbus to Indianapolis, and plans are maturing to connect Boston with the New York to Chicago route to Albany.

In the South the trolley car has even become a factor in the transportation of rice and cotton. One more decade will witness the covering of all the populated sections of the United States with a complete network of electric roads, the mileage of which, in some of our States, will soon surpass that of the steam railways.

More than 5,000,000,000 passengers were carried on the trolley lines of the United States last year. This is double the number carried a dozen years ago. There are nearly 1000 companies operating street railways and more than 66,000 trolley cars are in use. Eighty million dollars was paid out in wages during a recent year by electric line companies aside from the salaries of the officials. More than 1000 people were killed and 47,000 injured on these same trolley lines in the same space of time, all of which figures assist us in gaining some idea of the size and importance of this new industrial giant.

Sleeping and parlor cars have already been installed on trolley lines between Columbus, O., and Indianapolis. They are owned by the Palace Car Company which built them, and the arrangement between the electric roads and these builders is similar to that of the steam roads and the palace car companies. The run of 190 miles between Indianapolis and Columbus is made on a palace car electric train between midnight and 6 o'clock a.m. The sleeping cars are superior in some respects to those of the steam roads. Their ingenious construction admits of their being converted from chair cars in daytime to sleeping cars at night. There are upper and lower berths, each fitted with electric contrivances for controlling the lights and ventilators. Each car is operated by four motors, with an aggregate of 600-horse-power.

On the New York to Chicago trolley route some of the ordinary day coaches are built at a cost of $10,000 to $12,000. In some of these there are observation compartments seating 20 persons, and where the train is made up of several coaches there are vestibules leading from one car to another.

Records for speed far exceeding those of the steam railways have been made on the trollley lines of both this country and Europe. On the Aurora, Elgin and Chicago line the distance between Chicago and Aurora, which is thirty-five miles, has been covered in 34 minutes and 39 seconds, including the necessary slowing down for the crossings of eight steam and five electric roads. The great number of steam railway crossings is one barrier to the highest speed of the electric car. There are 4500 such crossings in the United States. On the lines of the Lake Shore Electric Railway between Toledo and Cleveland a half mile has been covered at the rate of 80 miles an hour, and 70-mile-an-hour rate has been maintained for three miles. A speed of 65 miles an hour has been made between Muncie, Ind., and Indianapolis. In Berlin, over short distances, 100 miles an hour have been reached and exceeded.

HERDS OF ELK IN KANSAS.

Up to fifty or sixty years ago big game abounded in this vicinity. Buffalo, elk, deer, antelope and bear were as plentiful as rabbits are today. During the latter years of his life the famous hunter, Daniel Boone, came annually to what is now Jefferson county to hunt.

The noted surveyor, John McCoy, who surveyed the Fort Leavenworth reservation and most of the Indian reservations of Kansas, says: "One evening on going into camp near Stranger Creek, on our way out, less than twenty miles from Cantonment Leavenworth, a herd of elk, estimated to number 200 or 300, was encountered, and several killed. (This was in 1830.) Capt. Martin in 1818 camped for the winter with three companies of United States riflemen on Crow Island, ten miles above Leavenworth, and during that winter killed between 2000 and 3000 deer, besides great numbers of bears and turkeys."—[Potter Kansan.

SELF-SUPPORTING HENS.

"Easter is coming," said Tete de Veau. "Sauté ought to begin to make some money out of that losing chicken farm of his."

"He tells me," remarked L'Oignon, "that his hens have taken lately to eating their own eggs, and he now has hopes that eventually they'll be self-supporting."

Special Announcement

This is not an ordinary or fictitious sale, but a bona-fide inventory sale, in which the furniture, carpets and stoves are being sold under the actual market value.

Our entire stock to be reduced in order to make stock-taking less arduous. Taking inventory in a large furniture house is a great undertaking, and to move $35,000 or $40,000 worth of goods would greatly reduce our task.

Thousands of bargains will be placed before an admiring public; the enormous stock is overwhelming our capacity, and to avoid warehousing the carloads that are constantly arriving, this tremendous sale has been inaugurated, forcing us to sell every article at a sacrifice.

Taken together the average value per acre increased from $22.20 to $28.29, a gain of $6.09 per acre. In this respect California measurably leads Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, North Dakota, South Dakota, Kansas, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Indian Territory, Oklahoma Arkansas, Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, Nevada, Idaho, Washington and Oregon.

By classes, California's farms average worth per acre (1905,) as follows, taken generally:

Sugar	$168.64
Hay and grain	33.28
Live stock	12.38
Dairying	28.04
Tobacco	54.10
Fruit	103.23
Vegetables	115.34
General	23.52

The acre values of the irrigated and improved farms are:

Sugar	$176.64
Hay and grain	44.07
Live stock	28.69
Dairying	55.70
Fruit	164.53
Vegetables	11534
General	48.22

These high prices emphasize the value of irrigation as a farm-wealth producer. The Owens River water enterprise of the city of Los Angeles, now under way, in its possible irrigation features.

By percentage per acre the increases in values in the five years have been:

	As a whole.	Irrigated alone.
Sugar	50.22	58.20
Hay and grain	9.14	8.17
Live stock	3.24	10.12
Dairying	6.98	18.22
Fruit	21.14	34.92
Vegetables	19.67	39.40
General	5.02	11.66

This comparison again forcibly emphasizes the value of a full water supply and irrigation. The cost of both goes into the value of the land, first as a producer for the benefit of the farmer and all who deal with the farmer, next as a revenue producer for the locality and the State by just taxation; and, finally, as an enlarger of the general wealth and importance of the State, to say nothing of further increases of land values by their "settler-attracting" powers.

California leads the country in the per acre value of its sugar farms, $168.64 average, the next nearest being Utah, $106.24; in hay and grain farm values, the State leads all the Western States, except Utah and Washington, all the Southern States, except Maryland; and in this class of farms it also leads Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, North Dakota, South Dakota and Kansas; in live-stock farm values, California also leads Georgia, Alabama, Texas, Indian Territory, Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, Nevada and Oregon; in dairying-farm values our State leads Maine, Vermont, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, North Dakota, South Dakota, Kansas, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Texas, Indian Territory, Oklahoma, Arkansas, and all the eleven Western States, except Utah; in the value per acre of its vegetable farms, California leads all the States of the Union, except New York, New Jersey, Ohio, Illinois and Iowa; in acre value of "general" farms, California leads all the West, except Utah, all the South, except Kentucky, West Virginia and Louisiana, it also leads Maine, Vermont and North Dakota.

In the total value of all farms, compared with the other ten Western States, California's leading position is quoting round millions only:

California	$816,000,000
Washington	211,000,000
Oregon	165,000,000
Colorado	143,000,000
Montana	97,000,000
Utah	84,000,000
Wyoming	72,000,000
Idaho	63,000,000
New Mexico	40,000,000
Nevada	28,000,000
Arizona	20,000,000

In this respect, California also leads all the Atlantic States, except New York and Pennsylvania; all the Southern States, except Texas, and also leads Michigan, North Dakota and South Dakota.

SODA PLANT AT INGLEWOOD.

LOCAL COMPANY TO DEVELOP DEPOSITS OF DESERT.

New Process Expected to Manufacture Important Products at Less Cost Than They Can Be Made East. Result May Be Location of New Industries on Coast.

Plans and specifications are being made by the Pacific Coast Soda Company, a new California corporation, for the erection of a large chemical plant at Inglewood, on the beach line of the Santa Fé, for the manufacture of chemically pure chemicals and soda compounds, the more important being soda ash, caustic soda, bleaching powder and cooking soda. The company has secured a frontage of 1000 feet on the Santa Fé, where large vats will be erected for the crystallization of the natural soda from the desert, prior to its conversion into finished products.

The conspicuous men behind the enterprise are E. B. Van Horne of the Merchants' Ice Company, Fayette Lamb, of the private banking firm of Barnum, Merril & Lamb; W. B. Stirdivant, manager of the Phoenix Mutual Life Insurance Company; Prof. Gilbert E. Bailey, James Austin Larson, capitalist, and other well-known Los Angeles men.

NEW METHOD EMPLOYED.

The new company claims that they have solved the question of crystallization without the enormous expense of constructing vats for that purpose by an ingenious method of regulating the temperature of solution by modification of an English process formerly used in separation of natural nitre. The most tremendous obstacle, however, in the past in the way of the development of the natural soda fields of California has been occasioned on account of their inaccessibility or railway transportation, more at a lively rate within the last twen-obstacle has been removed by the opening of the new Tonopah and Tidewater Railroad, that has enabled the company to develop Soda Lake, which lies at the entrance of Death Valley, and which has been the recipient of much scientific inquiry during latter years, and regarding which many articles have appeared in The Times.

The company purposes to gather crude material, which etxends over about 3000 acres on Soda Lake, and averages from eight to ten inches in thickness, and ship it to Inglewood. After the natural product has been crystallized, and the foreign mineral eliminated, the purified soda is to be placed in large reverberatory furnaces, lime and carbon, and reduced to what is known as black ash, then by an ingenious tower system, it is to be completely lixiviated, and the soda ash extracted. After the lixiviation process, the residue is treated in connection with the solution of lime, and converted into caustic soda. Upon securing the commercial soda ash by the above process, the same is converted into sal soda by adding water of crystallization.

ALKALI INDUSTRY.

Much interest attaches to the advent of this new industry in the western country, due to the fact that its success here means the separation of the West from one of the strongest of eastern monopolies. From an annual production in 1890 of scarcely 200,000 tons, this great industry has expanded to the extent, in 1906, of over $25,000,000 of soda ash, caustic soda, sal Soda and bleaching powder in the United States.

The leading alkali plants of the United States are located principally in Ohio, New York, Michigan. It is the claim of the newly organized local company that they can manufacture all the leading soda compounds of commerce now produced by the eastern alkali manufacturers from 5 to 20 per cent. lower than at the present point of production.

USES OF PRODUCT.

Soda Ash enters largely into the refining of oils, glass making, soap making, and is the chief constituent of all water-breaking compounds; consequently it has been found more economical to operate certain departments of the above industries East, owing to the fact that soda ash in ton, while on the Coast it averages from $28 to $32 per ton. For instance, it has been found more practical to ship boracic acid East, and convert it into commercial borax in connection with soda ash, than to combine the same ingredients on the Pacific Coast, due to the excessive price of soda ash.

Professor Wilson's Treatise on Disease.

An ordinary glass plant consumes annually from 500 to 3000 tons of soda ash per year, and while there are five glass companies operating on the Pacific Coast, the percentage of their production, as compared with total consumption, is exceedingly small, due to the same cause that it has been found more economical, on account of the low price of soda compounds; to manufacture a certain grade of glass in the East than to attempt local manufacture. The same can be said of many departments of oil refining, soap manufacture, etc. The development of the natural soda beds of California, while an innovation in a commercial sense, is fraught with no mineral surprises to the scientist. It has been universally predicted on the part as J. Sylvester Brown of New York, Prof. George Lunge of London, Eng., and others, that the time is not far distant when the natural soda beds of California will control the alkali industry of the United States.

KINDERGARTEN MUSICALE.

Teachers and Pupils of City and Normal Schools Are Tunefully Entertained.

Members of the City Kindergarten Association gave a musical entertainment to the association and to the primary teachers of the city and the teachers and students of the State Normal School in the Normal School auditorium.

The programme included a trio, Opus 3 (Arthur Foote,) by Madame Menasco, Miss Grace Deering and Miss Winona F. Huntley; three charming songs of Edward McDowell's, by Miss Geraldine Thompson, "The Robin Sings in the Apple Tree," "The Sea" and "Through the Meadow."

The second half of the programme consisted of a song cycle by Liza Lehman, "The Daisy Chain," with twelve songs of childhood. The first "Foreign Children" was given by a quartette; "Fairies," by Miss Augur of the Miss Sterret, of the Normal School; "If No One Ever Marries Me;" by Miss Savage of the Normal School, and "Stars," by another Normal School pupil, Miss Bailey. "Seeing the World," "Thank You Very Much Indeed," and "Blind Man's Buff," were rendered by the quartette; Miss Augus sang "The Ship that Sailed into the Sun;" Miss Savage, "The Swing;" Miss Sterret, "Mustard and Cross," and Miss Bailey, "The Moon."

ULLMAN FLEES.

Demented Opera Financier, Excited by "Times" Report of His Actions, Escapes.

Joseph Ullman, the quondam grand opera backer, who has been lying ill at the Alexandria, suffering from nervous prostration in a most serious form, yesterday morning shook the dust of this city from his feet and started for San Francisco.

Ullman, who is not in a responsible state, was stirred to flight by The Times narration of his actions at the Auditorium the night before. He saw this account, and, borrowing a few dollars from a friend, started North very early to escape the vengeance that he believed was pursuing him.

As a climax to Ullman's attack on Henry Russel Friday night, it is said that the frenzied financier came together with John Considine at a very late hour at the hotel.

Mr. Considine, however, emphatically denies that such an encounter occurred, but the Alexandria bell-hops are whispering the story of Considine's fierce, though short, struggle with the insane man.

investment in Ocean View Cemetery stock means a perpetual income on the actual money invested. Such an in- ent is not only backed by the land itself, but grows in importance and dividend value from year to year. The of the enterprise is sound. An investigation will show cemeteries are profitable investments for stockholders are known to pay large dividends over the long years of their existence, and such stock is much sought and re- d for its certainty of large dividend income. Such instances as the following are fair examples of the success her cemeteries: Greenwood Cemetery of New York, the shares of which originally sold at $100, are now sell- at $2000. Rose Hill at Chicago, original price per share $35, now selling at $760. Woodlawn in New York, al price $50, now selling at $800. Kensico in New York, original price $25, now selling at $200. In fact well managed cemetery pays large returns on the investment and the income is permanent and perpetual. The of this corporation at the par value of $1.00 or higher should offer quite an inducement as an investment prop- —when compared with other and older cemeteries that have no more and some of them not as many advan- as this cemetery.

The Ocean View Cemetery was incorporated August 22d, 1906, under the laws of the State of California, with a capital of $500,000, par value of each share being one dollar. For a cemetery association this is considered to be more than a reasonable capitalization, especially when the size of the cemetery is considered and the enormous income to be derived from the sale of the lots. All stock of the cemetery issued is fully paid and non-assessable and no stockholder has any preference over another. A part of 250,000 shares are being sold to develop and beautify the grounds according to well considered expert plans. Of this allotment, the first $50,000 will be sold at one dollar a share—then $50,000 at $2.50 a share and the remaining shares to be disposed of in a manner and at a price to be decided later as the development of the cemetery seems to justify.

Ten-Acre-Unit Farms $75 to $150 Per Acre---Easy Terms

After March 15th, next Friday, prices will advance 15 and 25 per cent. This represents a very small part of the enormous increase in value due to the great demands for large and small farms in the prolific Chino Valley.

It is safe to say that no finer opportunity was ever offered than presents itself to YOU in these exceptionally low-priced, high-class ranch lands in a section noted for its water-bearing and for the great diversity of its crops. As an investment, large profits are certain.

Fortunes are being made in growing Alfalfa, Walnuts, Oranges, Lemons, Deciduous Fruits, Sugar Beets, Onions and all Vegetable crops. Chino Ranch has never known a failure.

If you would share in the marvelous prosperity now being enjoyed by Chino ranchers, do not fail to secure one or more of these ten-acre sections before Friday. It would be a conservative estimate to say that today these lands are worth double the prices at which they are offered.

Chino, remember, is no "pioneer" country. The ranch lands surround the flourishing city of Chino. All modern rural improvements are here; social life is active; school facilities are abundant; markets are quickly accessible by means of the three transcontinental railroads crossing the ranch.

Frequently the land is paid for the first year from the profits of sugar beet, potato and onion growing; ten acres can be made to afford a comfortable living.

the cost city will be building the price and the a dream. is be- here. security gained in such buildings discounts by far the slight extra cost of erection. The fact, also, that money used in the purchase of cement and brick materials, made here in Southern California, stays here and helps to further develop the wonderful resources of the Southwest, seems to be a strong incentive for the use of such materials in new buildings. Money spent for lumber for building invariably leaves the city, it is claimed, to make some other community that much richer, thereby draining the financial resources of this section.

The mere tremor of apprehension caused by the Hotel Bixby disaster, when for some cause the reinforced concrete gave way, has passed away, and there is now in the hands of the local architects more work calling for reinforced concrete construction than for the much higher priced steel-frame buildings. Decrease in the insurance rates also is a feature when the building is constructed of concrete.

With one great cement plant running at full capacity at Colton, and which cannot supply the local demand, contractors and builders will be interested in the news of a large cement plant being constructed and developed at Crestmore, a new town three miles due west of Riverside. Local capital and considerable from San Francisco is developing the property. The plant will consist of one of the largest mills for grinding the cement which has yet been built in the West. It will have a regular daily capacity of 4000 barrels. The dimensions of the mill are 146x1400 feet. The foundations already are in.

The property consists of more than 500 acres of land, mostly hilly, under which is a deposit of the purest limestone rock discovered in Southern California. Before beginning operations, the company tested its property by drilling twenty-three holes at different places over the deposit, using diamond drills. These drills have taken from the deposit more than a mile of "core" and have shown the limestone practically inexhaustible. Quantities of the finest kind of cement shale are also on the property, together with sufficient clay to insure a continued production for many years to come.

Four hundred men are at work on the plant. It will consist of quarries for the limestone and shale. A huge crusher for breaking the limestone into suitable sizes for kilning. A large-sized stockhouse for storing the completed product, side tracks, reservoirs for oil and water, houses for the employés, office buildings, etc. The company is financed principally by William G. Henshaw of Oakland, and is known as the Southern California Cement Company.

The machinery was ordered in October and is in readiness to be shipped immediately the foundations are sufficiently advanced to receive it.

To the west of the cement property is the new townsite of Crestmore. The Pacific Electric Railway will pass through it between Los Angeles and Riverside, and will give rapid transit to both points. Work of laying out the streets and sidewalks is being pushed to completion and the place is being prepared for the large number of cement workers, and others who will find employment with the company. A forty-five-room hotel is planned for the town and there are also plans for a church, school building and fifty cottages, to be erected for the cement company's employés. Many Riverside people have signified their intention of living in the new town because of its location, on a broad, well watered mesa of disintegrated granite in which anything will grow. Several reports that it will be a wide-open town just across the line from "dry" Riverside have been in circulation, but these reports are denied by the owners, Winton & McLeod, of Los Angeles. Mr. McLeod said: "I shall restrict the sale of liquor to one saloon only."

Connections with the Santa Fé, Southern Pacific and Salt Lake line will be made by a steam and electric broad-gauge railroad, which will be built by a subsidiary company and will be known as the Crescent City Railroad.

LOS ANGELES WINS.

High School Student Takes First in Contest of Oratorical Association of Southern California.

Six schools competed for honors in the Oratorical Association of Southern California at Throop Polytechnic Institute in Pasadena Friday night. The schools represented were Throop Institute, Los Angeles High School, and the high schools of Pasadena, Compton, Long Beach and Fernando. There are three other schools in the association but their orators did not appear.

The contest was held in the Throop Auditorium and was presided over by President Edwards of that institution. It was characterized by a high standard of literary work, and the contestants clearly proved that this department of public school work is becoming both popular and efficient. By the decision of the judges, Charles Howard Mills, representing the Los Angeles High School, was an easy winner of first honors, which were awarded in the form of a gold medal to the winner and a banner to his school. The second place, with a silver medal, was given to Eugene Tincher of the Long Beach school, while third place and a bronze medal went to Ross Nichols of the Throop Institute.

Charles H. Mills's theme was "Golden Rule Jones," and when the young orator had concluded the applause was loud and prolonged, from the competing schools as well as from the large delegation representing the Los Angeles High School. By request, he will repeat his address some Sunday morning in Blanchard Hall, when his father, Rev. B. Fay Mills, is absent from the city.

Two Thousand of City's White People Said to Smoke Opium.

Mayor's Proposed Investigation Would Reveal Startling Conditions of the Underground Traffic and Hidden Crime in Chinatown and Exclusive Sections of Los Angeles — Americans Use Ashes Orientals Make Over.

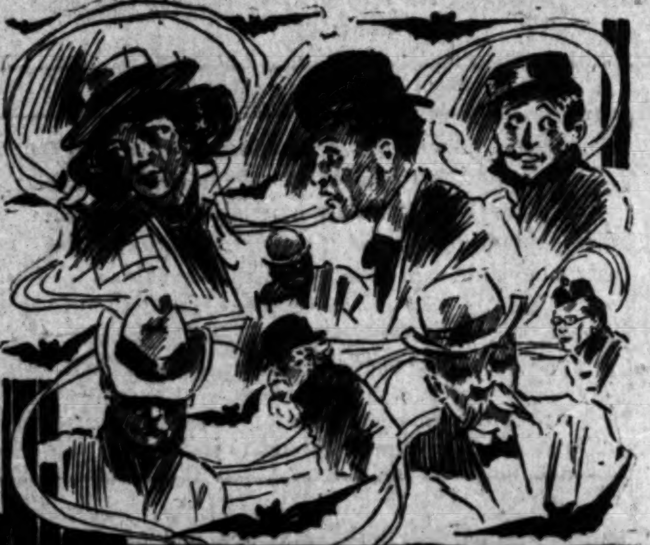
BY FRED R. BECHDOLT.

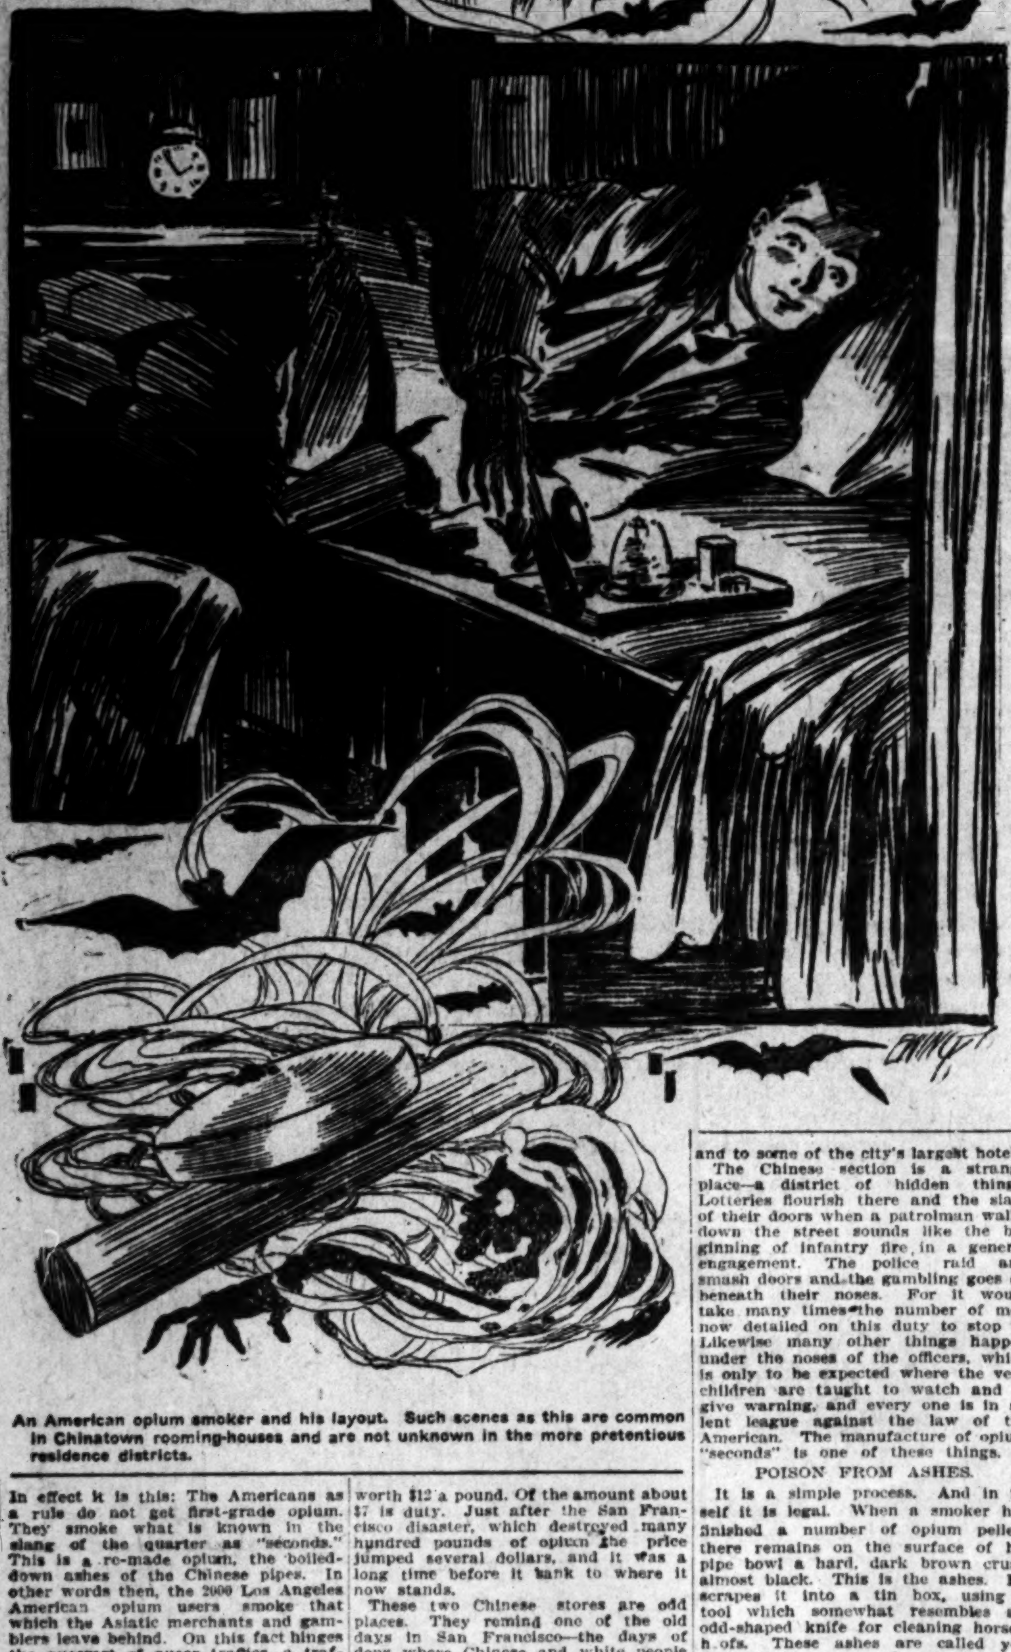
AMAZING disclosures may be expected if the Mayor's proposed investigation of the opium traffic in Los Angeles is made. Underground operations in Chinatown, secret vice in rooming-houses and even leading hotels, not to mention the exclusive residence sections, will be revealed, declare experienced officers. These same men, who know the city through and through, say there are two thousand white people here in the hideous clutches of the opium-smoking habit, and that they use the ashes or "seconds" of the drug first smoked by the Chinese.

Mayor Harper proposes that the city investigate the sale of opium in the Chinese quarter. Should the investigation, which is primarily aimed against unlicensed traffic, be prosecuted at all rigorously, it will open the eyes of city officials and the public to an amazing state of affairs. Primarily these present strange conditions are caused by the existence of American purchasers of the narcotic. In Los Angeles are more than 2000 of these white people who smoke the poppy's product.

One out of every 150 Caucasians in this city is addicted to this vice. This statement is based on the word of experienced police officers—men who have worked for years among the Chinese. These officers got their facts from merchants of the quarter—shrewd, sharp-eyed old Orientals, who sit placidly in their quaint, odd-smelling stores, seeing and hearing many things. They know whereof they speak.

From a corpulent old Chinese came once to a plain clothes officer—his friend—a startling bit of information.





An American opium smoker and his layout. Such scenes as this are common in Chinatown rooming-houses and are not unknown in the more pretentious residence districts.

In effect it is this: The Americans as a rule do not get first-grade opium. They smoke what is known in the slang of the quarter as "seconds." This is a re-made opium, the boiled-down ashes of the Chinese pipes. In other words then, the 2000 Los Angeles American opium users smoke that which the Asiatic merchants and gamblers leave behind. On this fact hinges the queerest of queer traffics, a traffic subtly conducted by slant-eyed men along devious underground channels.

UNDERGROUND TRAFFIC.

This traffic consists of the re-making of the drug from yen shee or ashes, its recanning into taels on which are government stamps, and the sale of the product in the guise of first grade opium. It yields large revenues. It is carried on in violation of Federal statutes. Chinese houses which are not licensed by the city engage in this trade. It is a result of Chinese love for money and Chinese ability to counterfeit. It is one of the causes of speedy decline among American opium smokers.

There are now in the Chinese quarter of Los Angeles two houses licensed by the city to sell the drug. They retail it in the main to Orientals. They sell the imported product. This is worth $12 a pound. Of the amount about $7 is duty. Just after the San Francisco disaster, which destroyed many hundred pounds of opium the price jumped several dollars, and it was a long time before it sank to where it now stands.

These two Chinese stores are odd places. They remind one of the old days in San Francisco—the days of dens where Chinese and white people used to smoke side by side. One is the establishment of Kung Yuen, No. 302 Apablasa street, and the other that of Wo Kee, No. 318 Marchessault street. To enter either you go through the usual long narrow passageway so much affected by Chinese. At the end of this dark little runway whose walls are smoke stained, stands the teapot in its wadded wicker basket, surrounded by the usual array of diminutive cups.

A door gives entrance to the opium store. Here at a netting-shielded window sits a wrinkled old Chinese merchant, the proprietor. His eyes blink shrewdly behind square spectacles with heavy iron rims. He looks up indifferently at the approach of a customer, a sandaled member of his own race or occasionally a lank, ferret-faced messenger boy. A monosyllable is exchanged between the two. The old merchant dips into the square tael beside him with a long instrument which resembles more than anything else a crochet needle. On the end of this comes a dripping wad of the opium. It looks like thick molasses. The Chinese holds in his left hand a quaint, old-fashioned pair of scales, the sort the money changers used when the Jews were young in Palestine. On this he has placed a previously-weighed horn box; and into the box he wipes off the gummy opium. Very nicely he calculates to the exact grain; then puts the cover on the box, slides back and forth some of the beads on his money counter, and takes the pay. Meantime there smoke and drowse on their hard pallets perhaps a dozen Chinese in the long room at whose head sits the merchant. And the vice never seems to hurt these.

AN AWFUL EXISTENCE.

But the American speedily begins to travel a steep downhill road when he starts opium smoking. His skin yellows; he keeps craving more of the drug; and eventually he drops to morphine or cocaine; then becomes a shambling, haggard thing sleeping in empty goods boxes and living from garbage cans.

For which the Chinese merchant told the plain clothes officer there is at least one good reason—the American smokes what the Chinese has left. This re-made opium contains the deadliest of the poison and many basic impurities which affect the general health. It is sold by the unlicensed houses, whose existence Mayor Harper would investigate. It goes, among other places, to flat houses on Bunker Hill avenue and Figueroa streets, to residences in more exclusive sections and to some of the city's largest hotels.

The Chinese section is a strange place—a district of hidden things. Lotteries flourish there and the slam of their doors when a patrolman walks down the street sounds like the beginning of infantry fire in a general engagement. The police raid and smash doors and the gambling goes on beneath their noses. For it would take many times the number of men now detailed on this duty to stop it. Likewise many other things happen under the noses of the officers, which is only to be expected where the very children are taught to watch and to give warning, and every one is in silent league against the law of the American. The manufacture of opium "seconds" is one of these things.

POISON FROM ASHES.

It is a simple process. And in itself it is legal. When a smoker has finished a number of opium pellets there remains on the surface of his pipe bowl a hard, dark brown crust, almost black. This is the ashes. He scrapes it into a tin box, using a tool which somewhat resembles an odd-shaped knife for cleaning horses' hoofs. These ashes are called yen shee. Opium users when in jail pay large amounts to trusties and to outsiders when either can smuggle in this yen shee. Eaten, it is narcotic in its action and quiets the frayed nerves of the victim, deprived of his accustomed poison.

The manufacturer of "seconds" takes a quantity of this yen shee. He boils it down in water, skims off "impurities" which rise to the top and lets the water gradually evaporate over the fire, leaving a thick, gummy residue. With this is mixed a little first-grade opium. Often the product is rolled into pellets, placed on paper and dried in the sun, then sold in this shape, which is no violation of law. But more frequently under present conditions the second-grade opium is placed in once-used copper taels. These bear the government stamp, whence comes the illegality of the proceeding. The re-made opium is then sold. Chinese will not buy it. Your Chinese is wise in his vices. He does not overindulge, nor will he smoke anything but the pure drug. Usually he lives tranquilly and gets fat with increasing age. But the American, buying the ranker poison and using it with the enthusiasm the Anglo-Saxon always displays in dissipation, gradually goes mad.

In the manufacture of this peculiarly vicious poison big copper and iron kettles, the type our grandfathers handled in boiling down sugar sap, are used. When the product is made for the purpose of sale in the guise of No. 1 opium, the boiling down is done as a rule in some back kitchen or other place where officers are not apt to come in unexpectedly. The canning is, as a rule, done at night and in absolute secret.

The unlicensed places which sell this product are run under cover. Every year opium sales in the Chinese quarter reach tens of thousands of dollars and it is a well-known fact that the two licensed establishments don't handle one-twentieth of the business. The remaining big proportion is the American traffic.

THE GO-BETWEENS.

Go-betweens carry on this trade. The smoker rarely visits the place where the drug is sold. He has not since the day when opium joints where white people smoked in comparatively large numbers were made a thing of the past. Instead of decreasing with the passing of these places, the vice among Americans has rapidly increased. And with the increase came these go-betweens. As a rule they are messenger boys. Sometimes they are hackmen; sometimes half-criminal individuals who consort with thieves or with unfortunate women, members of the world which goes forth after darkness has fallen. Nearly always they are themselves users of the drug or graduates of its school of vice and now victims of the hypodermic needle.

These go-betweens are often mere boys in years. Experience, which usually began as street gamins of one sort or another, gave them a close knowledge of the city. They came in time to learn the Chinese quarter—got their experience running errands. The Chinese came in turn to know them. Some of them have learned every hole and corner among the lanes and narrow runways of the district. Each of them has his particular business house, for which he is really a sort of solicitor. They are furtive creatures, these go-betweens, and they slip to and fro without any unnecessary heralding.

Most of them got their first knowledge of opium from some woman with whom their business as messengers threw them in contact. They learned the taste of the sweet, heavy smoke just as they learned the flavor of every other vice in the city—after long nightly association.

NOT HALF IN UNDERWORLD.

Now, among the 2000 American opium smokers who policemen say exist in Los Angeles, the number of those who belong to the half world and the underworld will not reach 1000. The rest are respectable persons. Some work at skilled trades. A large proportion—unbelievably large—consists of professional men and women of means. Among commercial men, theatrical people, race track followers and gamblers is included the most of these victims. Pick those callings which bring frayed nerves and worn emotions, and add to these that class of wealthy men and women who have used their means in the pursuit of material pleasures until their senses of animal enjoyment have been jaded, and you have the persons from whom white opium smokers are recruited. And were you to listen to the statements of men whose callings give them knowledge of existing facts, you would be startled to know how heavily this recruiting has drawn.

There is in this State a law to the effect that where more than two persons are smoking opium in one room they are subject to arrest and imprisonment. In Los Angeles the police appear to have enforced this law closely. In consequence of the enforcement has grown the habit of solitary smoking or smoking in pairs. This is carried on in probably thirty rooming-houses in the business section of the city. There is one house on Spring street where opium smoking was carried on this winter in from six to eight rooms every night. Police officers of experience, who have worked in Chinatown and know their business, say that in every first-class hotel in Los Angeles the vice goes on practically nightly. These officers are also responsible for the statement that much of the opium sold for white people goes to parts of the inner flat-house district, and to residences in exclusive sections.

ROOM FOR HIS VICE.

There is in Los Angeles, among other smokers, a man of large income, who has in his home a room set apart for his vice. His wife knows this. The children are never admitted to the room. His smoking there seemed to the unhappy woman better than his doing it elsewhere. The man has indulged in the habit for several years. And from the very fact, perhaps, that he has done it at home he has kept himself in hand to some extent.

But most smokers do not keep themselves thus in hand. They become victims. The Chinese custom is to smoke two times a day, sometimes three—once in the morning, once before the time of afternoon dinner, and finally during the late evening. The Asiatic merchant of leisure and gambler do this. The American smokes three and sometimes four times a day and when the thing gets him hard and fast he seeks his couch and layout half a dozen times, even waking up in the night and indulging the craving.

This is costly. Such smokers spend $1.50 and more a day. They drift for two reasons to cocaine and morphine. One of these reasons is the effect of the drug. Use of any grade of opium brings a keen desire for more. With the Chinese, who are remarkable among other things for self-control when it comes to physical desires, this craving causes a cessation of use for the time being. The slant-eyed smoker slackens his pace and lets his system carry off accumulated poison. The American does the exact opposite. He indulges his appetite, which becomes uncontrollable. And at the same time smoking re-made opium, his system is more rapidly steeped in poison than is that of the Mongolian. His skin becomes yellow—a direct result of the impurities in the drug he uses. He is soon troubled with biliousness and acute indigestion. He is now passing from the stage where he has smoked for the sensual pleasure which comes with the thick sweet-odored fumes. He tries to stop and finds himself in keen torture. His nerves are beyond his control. He cannot sleep nor does he know such a thing as mental tranquillity. His stomach is seized with terrible cramps. He cannot eat. And he falls back in a day or two to the flat-bowled pipe, the peanut-oil lamp and the lacquered tray. He finds he must use more than he did before and so goes from bad to worse. In the end opium will not satisfy him and he seeks the more potent narcotics, cocaine and morphine.

With the man of lesser means, and the denizens of the half-world and the underworld, things work more quickly. Such people know periods of prosperity alternated always with times of comparative want. Opium smoking costs as high as $1.50 a day. And the hypodermic needle with 5 or 10 cents' worth of morphine gives quick relief. One need not reason far to find a result in such circumstances.

And so in either case the opium smoker eventually becomes a drug fiend.

Some time when you are downtown late at night—so late that it is nearly the hour to meet the factory hands on their way to work—you may see a shadowy being slipping out of an alleyway. It approaches and you manage to distinguish the outlines of a stooping, twisted human form. The flutter of its ragged garments and its strange antics arrest your attention. At first you thought that halting, half leaping walk the gait of a drunken man. Almost at once you realize that the grotesque movement is the result of something else than drink. If you have never seen it before you pause as the thing approaches. Half fascinated, you watch the peculiar bending of the knees; and the quick jerky springing of the gaunt limbs. At moments the feet seem to drag and the thing shambles toward you—then jerks again oddly. It passes and you get one glimpse of the face. You will not forget it. The yellow skin, tight drawn over the cheek bones and hideously lined—like the skin of a corpse which has been for some time buried; the shock of unkempt hair falling over the furrowed forehead; the white lips drawn back from browned teeth—and above all the eyes, their pupils dilating and narrowing beneath fluttering lids. You cannot forget it if you have nerves. That was a "dope fiend." A confirmed user of drugs.

Strangely enough these creatures all had histories worth the recounting. As a rule they became histories with the use of opium. There are probably one hundred of such drug users in Los Angeles who have no homes. The number of these who have fixed abiding places is many times greater.

The homeless ones exist in various places, in the river bed, in vacant lots, under houses and store buildings, anywhere where they can find corners of which to make kennels. They get their food by stealing, and by visiting garbage cans in the rear of restaurants. They get their cocaine or morphine in a hundred ways—usually by selling old junk or stolen brass work. When they lose their hypodermic needles they resort to fountain pen fillers, puncturing the skin for the introduction of the instrument by a brass safety pin, a knife blade—anything so that the injection be possible. The drug with these has taken the place of all the world—and honor.

BRILLIANT MAN FALLEN.

In the City Jail now is a prisoner, a vagrant. He was one time a brilliant man among his fellows. He wrote and his stories sold readily. He smoked opium and then came to use cocaine. A few years ago in the San Francisco City Jail there was a system of selling cocaine among the prisoners—a system carried on by jailors and trusties. At that time this man was a prisoner there. He had no money. His teeth were heavily filled with gold. He pulled them out one by one and dug out the fillings. These he bartere

Lockhart; song, "Thy Morning is Good," Mrs. J. J. Abramson. Current events were presented by Mrs. Doane.

HARBOR CONTROVERSY.

Lieut. Miner Argues That His Offer Is Better for the Public Than Koyer's.

In response to A. L. Koyer's intimations that the Miner project of filling tide lands and making wharf frontage on deep water in the outer harbor of San Pedro, is a Southern Pacific scheme in disguise, Lieut. Randolph H. Miner has addressed to the Mayor and Board of Public Works a letter, in which he says:

"It is generally the case when one is trying to build up something, no matter how meritorious, we find some one who will try to pull the structure down. I have no disposition to enter into a war of words with Mr. Koyer or any one else, but am willing that my project should stand upon its merits before the Board of Public Works or any other fair-minded body.

"When I took up this matter, which even now is little understood by the people of Los Angeles, although San Pedro people understand it perfectly on account of their proximity, the outer harbor was standing lonely and deserted with the Koyer lots as they are now, just about 50 feet above sea level and useless for any practical purpose. I worked up the idea of reclaiming the foreshore, which these people are now trying to take advantage of, and we have been at work on his project now for more than a year, and have had the unqualified approval of every one to whom the matter has been explained, including Brig.-Gen. Mackenzie, chief of engineers at Washington.

"Neither we nor the State Legislature, nor any one else, can take away from these people, Koyer, Willmon or others, that which rightfully belongs to them.

"I submit to you as fair-minded men whether my offer to give to the governing body 1000 feet of lineal frontage with 30 feet depth of water, capable of being developed into 6000 feet of wharf frontage, with 35 feet depth of water, with access thereto by a boulevard 100 feet wide, comprising in all about eleven acres, with cross streets of many acres more, is not a greater consideration than the offer of Koyer and Willmon, of 400 feet of frontage and some acreage, a greater part of which is 50 feet above sea level.

"As they are retaining an equal amount of frontage adjoining the 400 feet offered to the city, may not this be a mere subterfuge to get Los Angeles city to fight their legal battle for them?

"In conclusion, I submit that if such people as those are permitted to hold up every effort to develop frontage in the outer harbor, the railroads will, in the end, control all the frontage of San Pedro harbor, and the people will not control any part of it."

STATE DIVISION.

tion against the other, and no doubt certain political and other conditions in and about San Francisco are grounds for serious and not altogether undeserved fault finding in other portions of the State. But these are mere local, temporary and incidental matters. No one doubts the ability, capability or honesty of the average citizen in any portion of the State including the great majority of her citizens and it will therefore follow that by united and intelligent effort for good government better conditions can be brought about and continued. By hunting for them we can always find things to criticise and find fault with, especially where we are inclined to devote our time in the scriptural sense in looking for the mote that is in our brother's eye, unmindful of certain sundry and numerous beams that may be in and about our own. It would be a sad day for California when the really capable, generous and progressive people of the northern and southern portions of the State should become divided and prejudiced against each other.

THE SOUTH.

Being better acquainted with the people and resources of Southern California than most others residing north of the Tehachepi, I not only fully appreciate the natural advantages of Southern California, not only its attractiveness for residences, but its substantial and increasing resources and its extensive tributary territory. It cannot be denied that the people of Southern California have accomplished more and better developed their resources in proportion to their opportunities than the people of Northern California, and they are entitled to full credit for their achievements; but the natural resources and conditions of the North are also admitted and there can be no question of its future development and of a corresponding improvement in political and other conditions that will tend to the common advantage of all sections of the State. It is not the part of wisdom to run away from ourselves or to exaggerate our importance or the faults of others. Happily all portions of the State have great resources, capable of much more extensive development and a population drawn largely from the same regions and tending naturally toward the same ultimate development, the upbuilding of the same institutions and needing the same general laws and possessing a practically general origin and as complete a community of interests as the people of any other great State.

We, who reside in the center of the State, not unmindful of the faults and shortcomings of our own as well as of other sections, are still thoroughly of the impression that the people of California are upon the whole quite as intelligent, quite as progressive, quite as capable of self-government and much more capable in many ways than the average people of the entire nation; and, for our part of it, and I think I speak for the practically united sentiment of Central California, we want none of State division, and the less discussion we have of it the better. We would welcome a discussion looking to better consideration of each other's interests and more regard for the general welfare and more of a united effort to stamp out objectionable conditions in all localities, much more than we would talk secession, or foolish quarrels and abuse of one section by another.

Before California is divided into two States we will doubtless be traveling around the world in practical flying machines, sending wireless messages to the inhabitants of Mars and educating them in divers ways and providing means so that they can descend upon the earth and abuse us, no doubt, for our trouble, as other persons we have educated and benefited have from time to time been inclined to do, and the millennium will come, no doubt, and all these and many other things will come to pass before California is divided. And about the time the enthusiastic boomer for division is blowing his horn in triumph over approaching success, the Angel Gabriel will stand with one foot on Japan and the other on Mayor Schmitz and Abe Ruef and blow his horn in a way that will rather take the music out of the tooter for State division.

Speaking seriously, to my mind we have plenty of troubles, quite enough that we cannot get away from. We have responsibilities in the way of maintaining constitutional government, free institutions and perpetuation of our form of government quite equal to the task imposed upon our fathers in creating and establishing these institutions. The great possibilities of internal development, improvement of social, moral and political conditions, adding to our wealth and resources, and the innumerable things that ought to be done and which we can far better do together, will command the attention and time of every living person in California during the remainder of his natural life.

So I hope the people of California will say goodby to State division, to local and political dissensions and get together for the common welfare, for the passage of good laws and good laws only, and for the conviction of people who are guilty of violations of law, and those only who are guilty; for the advancement of our resources and the betterment of our conditions as one people, living in one State, and who are proud of it and proud of all of it.

MEAT PRICES WILL GO UP.

Advance Due This Week by Wholesalers.

Many Retail Butchers Will Follow Suit.

"Trust" Figures Show Small Margin of Profit.

Another rise in the price of meat coming. The so-called "meat trust" going to put up prices three-quarters of a cent a pound on all dressed beef. This is the news officially given out by a representative of the Southwestern Packing Company. The other packing companies are in line. The rise is simultaneous.

The wholesalers assert that with the present price of beef on the hoof on the ranges and with the high freight rate for cattle, there is a dead loss on every carcass sold. Only by the sale of the by-products are the packers saved from bankruptcy.

Figures are given to prove their contention that the present wholesale price charged to retail butchers is too low for profit.

Retail butchers in Los Angeels are now charged 7½ cents a pound by the half carcass. Very soon it will be 8¼ cents a pound.

WHOLESALE FIGURES.

The figures given out by President Ryan of the Southwestern Packing Company tend to show that the contention of the big meat packing firms of this city are correct. The point where the wholesalers are getting their beef cattle at present is Phoenix, Ariz.

Taking 1000 pounds as the weight of a steer, the price in Phoenix is 4½ cents a pound, or $45. The freight on a carload of twenty-six head is $4.90 for each steer, making a total cost of $50 a head delivered in Los Angeles.

A steer, asserts Mr. Ryan, will dress 52 per cent., or 520 pounds. At 7½ cents a pound to the retailer the carcass brings the wholesaler $39. For the green hide is received $5.25; for the tongue, 35 cents; liver, heart, etc., $2.15; making a total for the receipts from the retail of $46.90.

These rates the profit to the wholesaler is only 50 cents a carcass for killing, handling and butchering. If this was all the profit made, the packing firms would quickly go out of business.

But this is not all.

BY-PRODUCTS PROFITABLE.

From the trying out of the fat, from the fertilizer parts and other by-products the wholesaler gets an added profit which pays for the cost of handling and leaves a margin of profit.

The proposed rise in price of three-quarters of a cent a pound to retailers the "trust" will net an added $3.90 a carcass, or a total profit on a dressed beef steer of $4.47½.

The wholesalers state that less than a year ago cattle could be bought on the hoof at 3 cents a pound, and that the selling price to retailers was 5½ cents a pound. But owing to the scarcity of stock on the ranges the price has steadily advanced, and the wholesalers have followed with raises of their own.

The rise in price to retailers of three-quarters of a cent a pound will probably be made this week. Retail butchers yesterday say they expect it.

FOUR ADVANCES.

This will make the fourth rise in wholesale prices since the first of the year, and the retailers state that they will be unable to put up the price of meat to their customers.

The retail price has already been greatly advanced during the year and staggering prices are now charged, small butchers charging more than others for the same cuts. But some butchers are stating that they will be forced to make a rise, especially the larger down-town shops, assert that the increase in wholesale cost will not affect their prices.

Phoenix has come to The Times a confirmation of the prices given by the Southwestern Packing Company, except that the freight is set at $127, instead of $130 a carload of cattle. The Phoenix dispatch states that there is an exceptionally lively demand there for beef cattle, and that this season there has already been shipped from that point, mostly to Los Angeels, 25,000 head of cattle.

Bishop Conaty of Monterey and Los Angeles Has a Strenuous Time Mapped Out.

Nearly all bishops are busy men. The diocese of Monterey and Los Angeles has a director who certainly will stand in the class of the busiest prelates. Bishop Conaty's interests in public and church affairs are apparent to those who are familiar with their extent.

Tomorrow Bishop Conaty devoted ... to the meeting of the Committee on Text-Books for Catholic schools. Tuesday Bishop Conaty will deliver a lecture at Pomona College, his subject, "The Catholic View of Education." On March 16 the bishop will address the Irish societies of the city at their banquet, his subject being "St. Patrick." Factories Number 1 and 2 Under Construction at Santa Fe R. R. and Avenue 20

The above cut shows the doubled capacity of our factory. A surprise to you as well as to ourselves, but the continually increasing demand for our pumps has compelled us to enlarge our borders, even before the first factory is completed. Our confidence has been stimulated by the success of the past. We have sold stock enough to warrant us in making this advanced move; it simply means the doubling of our income from the very start. This will double the dividends which we will be able to declare, which will be gratifying to our already confident stockholders, and should appeal to the judgment of the investor.

Figure the amount you can reasonably make upon an investment of $1000 in real estate, then come and give us a chance to show you what an investment in Ross Oscillating Pump stock will do. Our factory site is worth $20,000. The factory, as shown in the above cut, will be worth $10,000. Our machinery for this branch costs $30,000. Ross Oscillating Pump on Demonstration at 222 West First Street

The only valveless plunger pump in the world. Its great value lies in its simplicity, its "accuracy," its "efficiency," and its ability to do more work with less power than any other pump on the market. These facts are stated as the result of actual mechanical demonstration. The Pacific Coast has great demand for pumps. The agricultural industry depends upon pumps for irrigation. The vast mining industry is greatly in need of a pump that can handle a large volume of water. The Ross Pump is the only pump that can handle liquid asphalt successfully. One of our large pumps is pumping 50 barrels per hour of 11 gravity oil to an elevation of 66 feet, having endured this hard test for fourteen months, and is in perfect condition. No other pump has ever been able to do the work. We have just sold four more of these caliber duplex pumps to go into these same oil fields.

There are great opportunities on the Pacific Coast for making investments, but we do not know of the better or safer opportunity than we are offering when we sell you Ross Oscillating Pump stock at $1.00 per share. Our capital stock is worth $1,000,000 today. Stock is selling strong at $1.00 per share. Judging the future by the past, the price will double again within two weeks. We predict that our stock will be worth $5.00 per share within 60 days, and $25.00 within one year. We own the patent right for the United States and the world. We expect to build factories in Chicago and New York. Conservatively calculating the income derived from the sale of patent rights to foreign countries, and the product of our numerous factories, we doubtless will be enabled to pay large dividends upon a valuation of $25.00 per share. A word to the wise is sufficient. Do not get left the fourth time. Double your money on this next raise. Call, write, telephone, wi[illegible] draft today. We will honor your order at $1.00 per share if it is mailed before the price of stock is raised.

Value of a Man.

Miss Ravenhill gave an interesting estimate of the value to the state of each member of the community in a lecture on the economics of health at the woman's department of the King's College, London.

"I should like my audience to understand the connection between these two words," she said. "The function of economics is to collect facts, and arrange and draw inferences from them; hygiene is the science and art of conserving and promoting health. It can easily be understood that we can only conserve what we have. Ninety per cent. of babies are absolutely healthy when they are born. They may be permanently injured during the first five minutes of their lives. Health, therefore, is efficiency. Efficiency is national prosperity. Each one of us represents a definite money value to our country. An infant at birth is worth £5 to his country. When he grows to be a man, if his position is only that of the agricultural laborer, he is worth £250. If we suffer from illness we are a heavy liability to our country, instead of a valuable asset."—[London Dispatch to Baltimore American.

Purity of Arctic Air.

The scientific campaign in the Arctic regions in 1906 gives a new knowledge of the clearness of the Arctic atmosphere. While the members of the prince's expedition were carrying on their geodetic work in the hitherto unexplored mountains of the Northwest they could see the detached members of the band for a distance of over sixty-four miles, while some pilot balloons measuring not more than three feet could be followed by the eye to a distance of twenty-eight miles.

Drunkenness in the Army.

The annual report of the Surgeon-General of the United States army contains a table showing the death rate in the various armies, with a view to comparison. Under the head of "acute alcoholism" the United States army has first place, with 28.89 in every thousand admitted to medical treatment. In the German army the rate is only .09, or "more than 300 times less than in our army." In the French army the cases of acute alcoholism to the thousand are given as .18, in the Dutch .24 and in the British 2.1.

SAFETY VALVE IS PLAZA.

Flowers, Birds and Fountain Banish Despair.

It Is Doing Missionary Work Among the Poor.

Resting Place for World's Flotsam and Jetsam.

The Plaza Park is as clean and well kept, the beds of flowers bloom as beautifully, the fountain plays with as musical a splash, and the gold fish dart through the water as happily, as if it was located in a fashionable quarter and was a resort for the "upper ten." The things of nature are unmindful of social distinctions. Blackbirds chatter and skim over the ground fearlessly, as if conscious of being protected in their right to live, or poise on the wide spreading lily leaves before taking a dip in the flowing water. Their busy life moves on heedless of the bustle and racket of the surrounding streets.

The seats in the park are constantly occupied, but not by hard workers. Wherever these idlers may lodge at night, the fresh air, the flowers, and the spreading tree branches that gave shade and rest during the day will form the substance of their dreams.

Every race and every language is represented during the day by the shifting occupants of the seats. The drift of conversation overheard is largely about business matters and money making, for those who have failed of success themselves can always tell how success should be gained by others.

A canvasser passed around, inquiring for possible voters to register. It caused foreign and native loafers alike to sit up with more dignity and to feel their importance in the city machinery.

Instinctively one winces a little as the eyes, glancing over a bed of blue centauries, rest upon the cabalistic letters of a dentist's sign, inviting one to go up and be hurt in the Chinese way.

LIKE THEME IN A SYMPHONY.

A procession of teams stops at the drinking fountains and the horses look refreshed after slaking their thirst. The chained cup is also in constant use. The sparkle and flow of water carry like the theme in a symphony through the dusty air. If more of these fountains were provided in the slum districts, the suggestion would work as a cleanser.

A Mexican woman, wearing a long black veil and carrying a heavy child, dragged herself around asking in broken English where she could get work, and moaning that it was hard times in her little hovel. Her dark skin flushed as she entreated help, promising that her child would be good while she labored. No work offered and she walked on sadly and heavily.

The Plaza still recalls memories of a hundred years ago. It suggests vaqueros with sombreros and cartridge belts, top boots and spurs; Indians wrapped in blankets; señoritas of grace and beauty. Around the Plaza and old church centered the village life, of which the padres were guides and conscience.

The Chinese quarter, fronting one side, makes a brave display of Oriental goods and hieroglyphics, opposing to the Latin inscription on the church Confuscian wisdom. The dark skinned races that seek the park as a breathing place may not use water as liberally on their persons as the white races, but they bathe more freely in air and sunshine and by slower living live longer.

CITY'S SAFETY VALVE.

This park is one of the city's safety valves. Were Sonoratown to be deprived of this chance to breathe and watch the life of others, conditions there would be infinitely worse. The park is always doing open air missionary work. The flowers give perfume and color freely to the poor and have a refining effect. They are glad to be living, though deprived of the barest material comforts. The artist and writer may find every touch of color, every shade of expression in this park.

COOLS LIFE'S FEVER.

Around the Plaza the thought forms of the past and present mingle and cool the feverish tide of modern life to slower, safer movements. The papers never mention the Plaza frequenters, unless they break some law. They live in a dumb, hard way, never trying to solve any of the mystery of life.

The park is a blessing to children, too, but when they are inclined to be boisterous over the fish and saucy birds, their mothers hush them as if it were sacred ground. The little ones know not whether the park or the church is the more sacred, and become quiet from fear of a nameless something that will punish.

Despite the business activity pressing around it, the Plaza will always be free from all unwelcome encroachments and will be preserved as a heritage handed down by the fathers as a rest center and softener of the hardness of the struggle for existence.

BUNCH FROM THE NORTH.

Sacramento Valley People Will Arrive Wednesday Evening and Will Be Royally Entertained.

The Chamber of Commerce had a genuine surprise yesterday when information came from the North that the excursion of the Sacramento Valley Association will include 250 people, and the committee was at once enlarged to ninety to properly handle the crowd.

The party will arrive here at 10 o'clock Wednesday evening, and the following itinerary has been arranged for their entertainment:

Thursday morning at 9:30 (and the committee gives notice that this does not mean 9:31,) cars will leave the Pacific Electric building for the Ostrich Farm and Pasadena, by courtesy of the railway company. Thursday evening, reception at the Chamber of Commerce.

Friday, 1:30 p.m., special cars to Venice and the beaches over the Los Angeles-Pacific Railway; courtesy of the railway company.

Saturday morning at 8:30, leave for Riverside and Redlands over the Salt Lake road; $3 round trip.

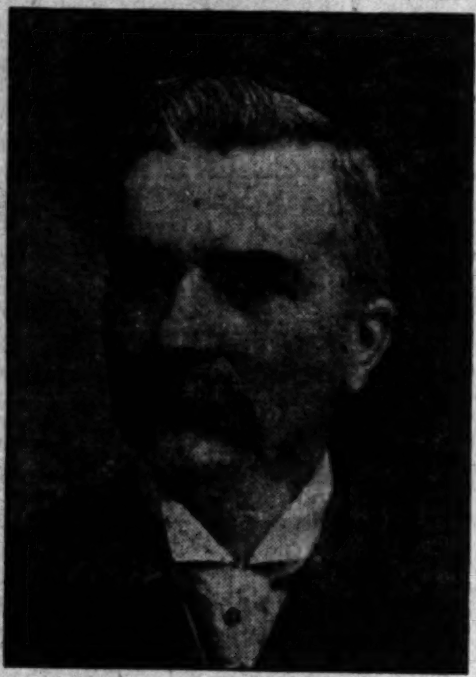
Sunday evening, 7:30, go in a body to Temple Auditorium; secure tickets from Secretary Miller.

On Monday morning at 9:15 the visitors will leave on cars of the Pacific Electric Railway for San Pedro and Catalina.

A persistent cough should not be neglected. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy will cure it.—[Adv.

200 Miles an Hour With Absolute Safety and Comfort

The Greatest Opportunity Ever Offered to Get in on the Ground Floor With the Most Successful Inventor and Manufacturer of this Time. Carnegie, Rockefeller, Frick, Corey, Belmont, Pullman and Hundreds of Others Made Their Great Wealth by Early Investments in Manufacturing Enterprises. This Is Your Opportunity to Do the Same Thing, but You Must Act NOW.



PAUL W. LEFFLER,

Inventor of the Leffler Electro-Magnetic Railway and Signal System. Inventor of machine to make Barb Wire. Inventor of many improvements to Harvesting Machines. General Manager and Consulting Engineer of Leffler Electric System.

I ran a machine shop and brass foundry in Minneapolis. I did the repair work for the Electrical Street Railways of St. Paul and that city. I was so successful as a mechanic and electrician in this repairing that I was requested to change every dynamo put in by the General Electric Co. I saw all the troubles of the street railway managers. I found the present system of running street cars was entirely wrong.

I found I could get more power, greater speed, more safety and comfort by running cars with electro-magnets direct than by the roundabout, mixed-up system now used by electric railways.

I have always been a successful manufacturer and inventor. I have had charge of 200 expert mechanics at one time. All of my inventions have made great successes and enormous sums of money. The great, successful barb wire business of today is built on my patents.

The best money being made today in the manufacturing of harvesting machines is very largely based on my inventions.

I invented the first switch and turnout that prevented the trolley wheel on trolley cars from constantly jumping the wire at crossings.

For fourteen years I have studied how to make cars run faster, cheaper, safer than ever before.

I am done experimenting.

I Have at Last the Greatest Invention of This Century. I Can Double the Earning Capacity of any Steam or Electric Railway in Existence

I will remodel the whole railroad business. There is not a railroad in this country but that will sooner or later be compelled to adopt my system, because it is cheaper, faster, safer and more money-making than any other system.

I absolutely control the next great step forward in the railroad world in my patents. Why? Because stem has run its limit. Steam cannot run a train 100 miles an hour and keep it up. The trolley and present third-rail systems cannot be depended upon for long distances. Their motors are likely to burn out any minutes. With my system I can run a train any distance in any kind of weather, without a hitch or breakdown, 80 to 200 miles an hour with perfect safety. By my system if a wheel broke or a rail broke the cars would stay exactly in position on the track. They could no do otherwise. They could not jump the track at any speed. It would be impossible to run my cars off the end of a track into a river where a bridge is open. My car would stop itself even if the leverman were asleep.

I know this whole system to be a success, because I have tried it for two years. During that time millionaires have tried to get control of my system, but I would not let them, because I preferred to protect my own and small stockholders' investments.

Charles T. Yerkes offered me $100,000 if I would throw my invention on the scrap pile and forget it. He did not want to be compelled to change his old cable system.

Tom Johnson of Cleveland offered to furnish $200,000 for my patent rights for over eighty miles an hour.

Wall street capitalists have made five different attempts to gain control over the Leffler Electric System, and Wall Street generaly knows a good thing when it sees it. I could not afford to let these big moneyed interests get control. I preferred to go to the small investors, to the people who want to make small but safe and sure investments. I have have therefore bound myself to this company, and to every stockholder, that I will personally see to it that every man and woman who makes an investment in this company will get a square deal. This is a square deal from start to finish.

This Stock Advances to $4.90 Per Share at Midnight, Saturday, March 23d

To prove that you will get a square deal I have had the following contract printed on the back of every certificate:

> ALL OR ANY SHARES OF THE CAPITAL STOCK OF THE LEFFLER ELECTRIC SYSTEM WILL BE REDEEMED BY IT AT PAR OR FACE VALUE UP TO AND INCLUDING THE 10TH DAY OF MAY, A.D. 1922, UPON WRITTEN NOTICE PROPERLY GIVEN TO SAID COMPANY AT ITS EXECUTIVE OFFICE IN CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, IN A MANNER AND FORM AS PROVIDED BY ITS BY-LAWS, AND ADOPTED BY A MAJORITY OF THE STOCKHOLDERS OF THIS COMPANY, SO THAT ALL STOCK SO OFFERED FOR REDEMPTION, WITHIN ANY GIVEN PERIOD, MAY SHARE EQUALLY AND PROPORTIONATELY. HOWEVER, THE STOCK OF THIS COMPANY IS ONLY REDEEMABLE FROM FUNDS RECEIVED, OR TO BE RECEIVED, AS ROYALTIES FROM RAILROAD COMPANIES USING THE PATENTS OF THIS COMPANY UNDER LICENSE, AND AFTER PROPER NOTICE, AS AFORESAID, WHICH MAY BE RECEIVED FROM STOCKHOLDERS DIRECT, OR FROM SUCH OF SAID RAILROAD COMPANIES AS HAVE RECEIVED SAID STOCK IN PAYMENT FOR TRANSPORTATION, OR OTHERWISE, PROVIDED, HOWEVER, NO STOCK SHALL BE REDEEMED UNTIL AFTER MAY 10, 1909, EXCEPT AT THE OPTION OF THIS COMPANY.

THIS CONTRACT MEANS that out of the royalties paid by railroad companies using my system this company will pay you full face value for every share of stock you buy.

It means that if you bought 100 shares at the present price you would be able to get at least $1000 by turning your certificate of stock in to us, to be paid from royalty money in our treasury. I don't think you will ever want to sell, because of the enormous dividends we pay, but if you should be compelled to sell, your certificate would then be worth its full face value.

This makes it absolutely impossible for any stockholder to be frozen out of the company.

NO LURKING SCHEME IN THIS.

We have no sideshow companies or branch organizations for the purpose of fooling people, and will have none. All business is to be done or contracts to be performed by, with and for the Leffler Electric System. This company does not contract with any construction company having officers connected with this company. This means that we will not allow the company officers to let contracts to themselves under the guise of a construction company, or a company of any other kind, to defraud the stockholders.

EVERY SHARE ON THE SQUARE.

Not a dollar's worth of stock will be sold which does not represent exactly the same footing or standing that every other share or dollar represents.

The stock is FULLY PAID and NON-ASSESSABLE.

WHAT EXPERT ENGINEERS SAY.

Three of the most expert engineers have carefully examined my system, and ridden on my car, and they have written reports on what they saw and found. These engineers are John Ericson, city engineer of Chicago; Karl L. Lehmann, consulting engineer of Chicago; and F. W. Cappelton, former city engineer of Minneapolis, Minn.

They declare the system successful, simple and practical, and point out many other features wherein the Leffler System is an immense improvement over any other system now known to be in existence. Other unprejudiced and scientific experts have pronounced the system wonderfully simple and simply wonderful. The reports will be sent to any one upon request.

MY AUTOMATIC SIGNAL SERVICE.

I absolutely prevent collisions. Everywhere a car moves it sends signals ahead and behind. It is not affected by storms or any weather condition. My signal system does not require either hand or mind of man to operate it. No wires or poles are exposed where storms can blow them down or interfere with them. If through some accident one signal is broken, or otherwise put out of commission, another signal immediately takes its place. Every train dispatcher and operator on the road can go to sleep and my signals will work perfectly and safely. Even the trainmen have nothing to do with them. There is no forgetting. Every signal works automatically. When trains come together too closely, head on or from the rear, an electric bell rings vigorously in the leverman's cab.

CARS UNDER ABSOLUTE CONTROL.

It is all controlled by one lever. The leverman starts, stops and reverses with the same lever. Snow, ice, sleet, rain, grease, dirt and such substances do not affect the power or control of the car or train.

THE BUSINESS WILL BE IMMENSE

Because before long we will be putting my system on all the standard, street and interurban railways. Just think what an immense business that will be. One company alone now employs 12,000 men to make the present electric railway equipments and cars. Another firm employs nearly as many more. There are also thousands of men employed making standard locomotives and equipment. All of these will be back numbers and will have to go out of business, because the Leffler electric system will take their place and will employ thousands more.

INVESTIGATE US CAREFULLY.

Come and see this most remarkable invention of the twentieth century.

This is such an opportunity as does not come to any one once in a hundred years, to get in on the ground floor on a proposition bound to make millions. It is the next great forward step in the railroad world. It means the ultimate changing of every present steam and street railroad over to the Leffler system, not only because it can run faster, but it saves about half in operating expenses and thousands of lives.

It means faster and cheaper travel and greater profits to the railroad managers and stockholders.

I cannot describe the system fully here. I have done this in a booklet which I will send you free for the asking. If you can't take but ten shares, get the booklet and learn fully all the wondegs of the simplest, most perfect system ever devised. It will set you to wondering that some one did not think of this marvelous idea before.

> POINTS TO REMEMBER ABOUT THIS SYSTEM FOR STREET RAILWAYS.
> There are no overhead wires, no third rail, no slot in the street, no underground trolley, no obstructions in the street.
> Can be run faster, safer, easier and more comfortably than any other system known.
> It is cheaper to operate, uses a half less fuel at power house, is cleaner, surer and quicker in operation than any other.
> Cannot be stopped by sleet or snow storms, rain, ice, grease, dirt or any other similar obstructions on the track.
> It cannot produce electrolysis on water pipes or conduits in the streets, which is now such a heavy expense to cities under the trolley.
>
> It cannot interfere with any other electric wires, requires less current than other systems and develops greater power.
> It is all controlled by one lever, and is always under the most absolute control, anywhere, and under all conditions.
>
> It is noiseless, since there are no gearings, motors or other machinery to grind, squeak or rattle.
>
> There are no "burn-outs" of motors, because there are no motors to burn out.
> It is impossible for man or beast to get a shock from an electric current.

When I send you this booklet I will also send you the report of some of the ablest electrical engineers in this country, who have carefully examined the system. They fully indorse it.

The Railroad of The Future

When William J. Brayan expressed himself as being in favor of the govrenment ownership of railroads, the view was indorsed by some of his followers and even by others, irrespective of party. The reason of this support cannot be attributed so much to a confidence in the policy as to the readiness of the people to grasp at ANY REMEDY for the prevailing INEFFICIENCY OF OUR RAILROADS.

Whether Mr. Bryan's plan is expedient or whether the taking over the railroads by the government would simply open up another avenue for POLITICAL PLUNDERING and LEGISLATIVE CORRUPTION is problematical. It is certain, however, that a change is necessary and imminent. The conditions which exist today are APPALLING—the railroad facilities of the country—particularly those between Chicago and the Atlantic seaboard, are TERRIBLY INADEQUATE. Because of congestion, shipments invariably suffer delay and our commercial activities which are dependent upon transportation facilities can see NO PROGRESS UNTIL RELIEF IS FOUND.

The condition is a serious one and is known to officials and traffic managers, but the people at large, who are indirectly affected, have no idea of how the demands upon the railroads have exceeded the limit of their abilities. President James J. Hill of the Great Northern says: "THE RAILROADS ARE SIMPLY SWAMPED." In a recent letter he stated: "The railroads everywhere are taxed beyond their power. The people of the United States, therefore, are face to face with the GREATEST BUSINESS PROBLEM THAT HAS EVER THREATENED THE NATION."

Secretary of the Treasury Shaw in a recent address to the students at Harvard University said: "We have the best and largest railway system in the world, but it is not adequate. We need 70,000 MORE MILES OF TRACK, without any extension of the roads, in order to carry our freight." Harriman, the great Railroad King, says: "Within the last seven years the railroad traffic of the United States HAS DOUBLED." Statistics show that during this time, when the demand has increased so rapidly, the percentage of incraese in trackage has been the smallest for thirty years and in 1906 by far the SMALLEST OF ANY SINGLE YEAR.

From what source and in what way may we expect relief from this deplorable state of affairs? Surely not from the moneyed powers behind the great railroad systems of the present. They are WELL SATISFIED with a condition which insures a permanent volume of business exceeding the full capacity of their lines, and it is but the nature of humans to feel so. That business is stagnated MATTERS LITTLE to them, so long as THEIR INTERESTS are NOT AFFECTED. But some action, looking to a betterment of the situation, must be taken, AND THAT SOON, or our commercial and industrial development will be seriously hampered for YEARS TO COME.

The organizers of the Chicago-New York Electric Air Line Railroad seem to have the most rational solution of the problem yet advanced. Not only is it a solution of the problem of railroad control, but it is being applied where it will be of the GREATEST GOOD to the commercial interests of the nation. Their plan is to have THE PEOPLE build and operate a railroad—a DIRECT LINE between Chicago and New York. There is NO PREFERRED STOCK—there are NO MORTGAGE BONDS and all of the shares will be in the hands of THE PEOPLE. The plutocratic money kings are to have no part in the enterprise. It is simply a great PARTNERSHIP—the largest investors will profit according TO THEIR HOLDINGS, the same as the laboring man who owns A SINGLE SHARE.

The progress already made has demonstrated that the plan is a feasible one and that all the capital necessary can be raised in this way. Because of the tremendous amount of traffic between these great centers, the railroad is certain of being an INSTANTANEOUS SUCCESS. And instead of its profit going to swell the fortunes of the multi-millionaires, they will provide A COMPETENCE for thousands of present-day WAGE-EARNERS.

The great arteries of commerce should belong to the people and this method promises better facilities and service and fairer treatment of the public than either the present system or GOVERNMENT CONTROL.

Unprecedented Demand Quickly Exhausts Limited Allotments

The work of construction on the Chicago-New York Electric Air Line R. R. was begun when the first shovel of earth was turned at a point near La Porte, Indiana, September 1st of last year. Since that time construction gangs have been engaged in grading the roadbed, many miles of which are now completed. On Saturday, February 2nd, with appropriate ceremonies, the first spike was driven at La Porte, Ind., by President Jonathan D. Price, of the construction company.

Progress of the Work

Surveys have been made, much of the right of way has been secured, hundreds of carloads of material—railroad ties, steel rails, etc.—are already delivered along the line of the first division and contracts for steel bridge material and construction machinery have been awarded. As soon as spring opens hundreds of extra men will be added to our present forces and the Air Line route will thereafter present scenes of tremendous activity, and great strides in the progress of building will be made during the coming open season.

Our entire construction forces have been engaged on the division between Chicago and La Porte, Ind., since last September, and by so centralizing our efforts, we have made wonderfully rapid progress. Instead of scattering our construction gangs over the entire 750 miles between Chicago and New York, we are bending all our energies to complete the first division, because each division is to be a paying railroad in itself, to say nothing of the principal source of income—the enormous through traffic.

Our first division will draw from eleven thriving cities and towns, including the new and wonderful city of Gary, now being built by the United States Steel Corporation, which will soon contain over 100,000 people. Within three months cars will be running out of La Porte, Ind., and will be used to deliver construction material to the points where it is needed. This will greatly facilitate progress. It is now safe to predict that within one year our first division will be in operation.

Earning Capacity

As an indication of the success of our first division, we may cite the experience of the Aurora, Elgin and Chicago Railroad, the first long-distance third rail electric line. It has been in operation for five years, has paid big dividends from the very start and has made fortunes for its stockholders. It is fifty-seven miles long, every train is filled to its fullest capacity, they attain a speed of ninety miles an hour, and no serious accidents have ever occurred on its line. The operating expenses are but 56 per cent. of its gross earnings and it has yielded greater returns on the capital invested than any electric project ever floated.

There never has been a time since the first earth was turned for the construction of the Chicago-New York Electric Air Line R. R. that our stock has not been worth par—$100 a share. In order to stimulate public interest and overcome any lack of confidence that existed before building operations were actually commenced, we adopted the method of offering limited allotments of stock at prices much below its actual value. Now that the practicability of both the enterprise and our plan of financiering it are demonstrated, and building operations have so far advanced, all scepticism is fast disappearing. The public confidence is gained. The people have been educated in the promising features of the proposition. From the work already done they have learned that we are in earnest about building this railroad, and we have also shown them that its earning possibilities are almost boundless.

Opportunity of a Lifetime

A life-time of regret has been the experience of those who neglected the opportunity of investing in Bell Telephone Stock. Another project of hardly less significance and which will make as many and as great fortunes is before the American people today. And just as surely as history repeats itself in all else, there will be people who will allow this chance to pass. Do not be one of them. Today throughout the country there are thousands of people in every walk of life who will make fortunes out of the great profits that the Chicago-New York Electric Air Line will yield. Be one of them.

The people who invested in telephone stock made a wild speculation—it was a hazardous venture to put money in a project whose only promise was of success was found in the untried theory of one man. The element of speculation is eliminated from this proposition. Every feature upon which its success is dependent has been tried and proven.

Only a limited amount to be sold at this price. You must act promptly. Call or write today for prospectus, map and full particulars.

Safe Investment

Railroads offer the safest and most remunerative investments and the urgent need of this one is demonstrated in a thousand ways—a need infinitely greater than that met by the first transcontinental lines. These railroads by building up communities created business for themselves. A volume of business exceeding the capacity of any existing line awaits the completion of the Chicago-New York Electric Air Line, to say nothing of the business it will develop by reason of the saving to the traveling public of money and time, and of the increased comfort it will afford.

It is to be the only direct line between the country's greatest centers of population—161 miles shorter than the shortest now in operation, and the trip will be made in ten hours.

Because of the volume of business which is assured, and because of the saving in the cost of building, motive power, and maintainance, we have no hesitation in saying that the Chicago-New York Electric Air Line offers the greatest investment opportunity of modern times.

The City Beautiful

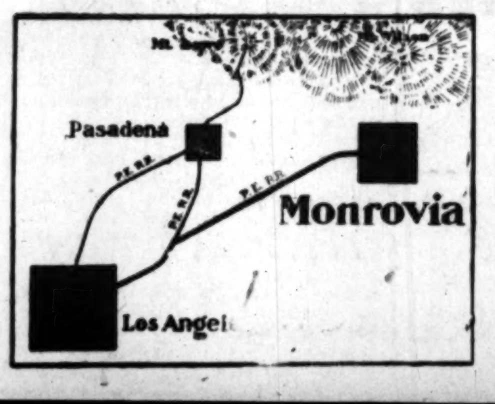
Neither Up nor Down, but in the Middle

Everybody is deserting low lands where malaria and fogs abound.

But if one locates too high on the mountains. the inaccessibility and the terrific damage from storm water make life equally burdensome.

Monrovia is situated exactly right.

That's why it has outstripped its neighbors and grown into a flourishing wealthy residence city.



Monrovia lies superbly on picturesque foothills. The drainage and soil are such that instantly after the heaviest rain the streets and yards of the city become dry enough to walk on without overshoes.

Monrovia is the center gem with the little villages of Sierra Madre and Duarte on either side.

Monrovia's location is ideal, the climate is perfect and there is every convenience such as gas, electricity, telephones, municipal water, banks, clubs, grammar and high school, library, newspapers, etc.

Monrovia is just a comfortable distance from Los Angeles---a beautiful refreshing ride for the business man.

ONE of the numerous between-season rumors with which we are always regaled until definite fashions are at hand is that this spring will see the end of the face veil for the time being. This is, of course, quite an absurdity. [illegible] women have too chronic an objection to unkempt [illegible] and realize too keenly how much a veil con[illegible] to a well-groomed appearance ever to dis[illegible] with it.

It does point probably to a revival of the draped [illegible], of which already many are seen in Paris, where [illegible] Parisiennes have gone quite mad over the Hading way of veil wearing.

The Hading veil is a distinct revival, but is as much a favor now as when it was first introduced [illegible] years ago by the popular actress. It is, by the way, quite a different thing from the floating [illegible] scarf with which we are painfully familiar in this country. It is a very dignified and artistic [illegible] of lace, put on with a consummate sense of [illegible] is becoming.

The long lace scarfs that form the Hading veil are [illegible] only to the "grande toilette" of the matron, [illegible] worn on no other occasion even by her, and [illegible] young girl not at all. For traveling and or[illegible] use, when drapery would appear quite dowdy, [illegible] lace veil, closely tied about the face, is sub[illegible].

[illegible] the long lace veils, as seems in best taste, matched the hat, but now contrasting colors [illegible] is often seen. A large, dark blue hat, with [illegible] of paradise, for instance, was draped with [illegible] lace veil. A seal brown hat had a veil [illegible] gray, while with gray, green and black [illegible] lace, which is universally becoming, goes [illegible] well.

[illegible] how gracefully the long drapery of the Hading [illegible] is arranged is clearly shown in this latest picture [illegible] charming French woman.

[illegible] the lace veil proper, drapery of chiffon, [illegible] embroidered net will play a conspicuous [illegible] the season's hats. Streamers and ties of [illegible] velvet will be no more popular than one [illegible] dainty scarfs twisted around a "dressy" hat [illegible] from it in soft, graceful folds.

[illegible] white hat, trimmed with masses of roses, is [illegible] distinction by the long, straight fold of [illegible] net scarf caught around the crown [illegible] in straight folds almost to the waist in [illegible].

[illegible] chip hat, trimmed with chiffon and white [illegible] made very charming with two long ends of [illegible] finished with an accordion-pleated ruffle, [illegible] a frilled beading.

[illegible] or black tulle or maline lends itself to [illegible] drapery—very becoming to a fresh, young [illegible] the undertrimming ends in one long [illegible] falling over the left shoulder and finished [illegible] chou. Again, it may be twisted round [illegible] in the back and brought round under [illegible] fashion with a chou beneath the left ear. [illegible] pretty worn over the hat and tied in [illegible] bow with long ends. Tulle veils are [illegible] costly luxury, as they are very perish[illegible] be always absolutely fresh and un[illegible] well.

Most interesting, by the way, is all the new veiling. The lace veils are lovelier—and more expensive—than ever. Several charming real lace ones in white have exquisite borders of rose point. One princesse lace veil has tall, graceful flowers in appliqued braids to form a broad band at the bottom.

The black chantilly lace veils, with fine dots and deep, floral bands, are exceedingly popular either for drapery or to be worn loosely over the face.

A much-admired novelty in face veils has a single thread mesh, with close, fine dots in a contrasting color. Then there are tan meshes with brown dots, London smoke with light gray, pink or blue with black.

Most of the meshes of the new veils are fine, and dots are more moderate in size than usual. One becoming style has a very fine diamond mesh, with an almost invisible dot, nothing more, indeed, than a thickening of the threads where they cross. Sometimes the mesh is double, with a close embroidered dot, while a small-meshed maline veil is covered closely with tiny velvet points.

One of the most stylish of these face veils has a large, open diamond mesh of real silk thread, with big velvet spots. As it costs $5 a yard, however, it will scarcely be of general popularity. Much cheaper, but equally stylish, is a plain black mesh, with tiny chenille dots and a large, conventionalized four-petaled flower scattered through it. This veil is also seen in white. Another good-looking veil has a double diamond mesh, with a fine filet work in each corner of the diamonds.

As for the long chiffon veils, their variety is infinite. They are seen in every color, with light gray, London smoke and champagne color leading favorites. These veils are made up and measure three yards long. One very stylish veil in brown has a broad hemstitched hem and above it a two-inch box pleat hemstitched through the middle.

Some of the shorter chiffon veils, one and one-half yards long, are hemstitched, and have large velvet dots quite far apart. These dots are usually of a contrasting color, as gray with black velvet dots, tan with brown, and blue or pink with black. A white chiffon veil, with small white velvet pin dots, is extremely popular.

The most practical automobile veil is square. It is of chiffon cloth, one and one-half yards square, and hemmed all around. It comes in every color, but the light tan, gray, lavender and a warm red brown are specially lovely. This veil is put entirely over the hat, with the edges even all around, and is pinned firmly at the back of the neck.

Among the novelties in long veils is a pink silk tissue, with a two-inch hem and a pin-point thread dot in white. Another is a lace veil, in either black, cream or a deep shade of blue that is almost an Alice blue, with a broad border of embroidered flowers and foliage in silver thread. A mousseline veil that comes in many colors has a border of shadow embroidery in a deeper tone of silk, with small, self-colored silk dots.

Whether draped or worn over the face, the veil will this season, as ever before, be one of the most important accessories of a woman's toilet.

What Does It Cost You To Dress, Girls

LAST week I talked to you girls of the proportion in which you spend your money and asked for reports from those who had devised simple and practical methods of keeping accounts.

Today I wish to ask another question along the same line, although it is perhaps a little more explicit; it is this, What do you girls spend on your clothes?

This question, perhaps, sounds a little to you like the problem of the man who inquired how much it cost to build a house. Each girl, or, at least, each group of girls, spends a different amount, and the sum is gauged, as a rule, by the amount she can afford. Still, each of you has some plan of outlay for her wardrobe, and it is on this that I am seeking information.

This is a matter about which I have often wondered. When I see girls who cannot be receiving large incomes dressed in silk waists, showy furs and feathered hats, I wonder how they can afford it. I wonder, too—being a practical woman—about the quality and state of their underwear. Is it coarse and ugly? Is it entirely out of keeping with the fine garments that show? Do these girls wear heavy enough underclothing in winter, or do they trust to pride to keep them warm? Are their shoes stout enough? Do they protect their feet with overshoes in wet weather? Or do they stint themselves in every way and go without what they actually need in order to make a show on the outside?

Years ago I read a little English book that impressed me greatly, because it revealed to me a state of society which to me, an American child, seemed most peculiar. It told of a little girl who taught in a mission Sunday school in England, and spoke of how the girls in her class were reproved by the older teachers for wearing feathers in their hats. It was not considered suitable in "their class."

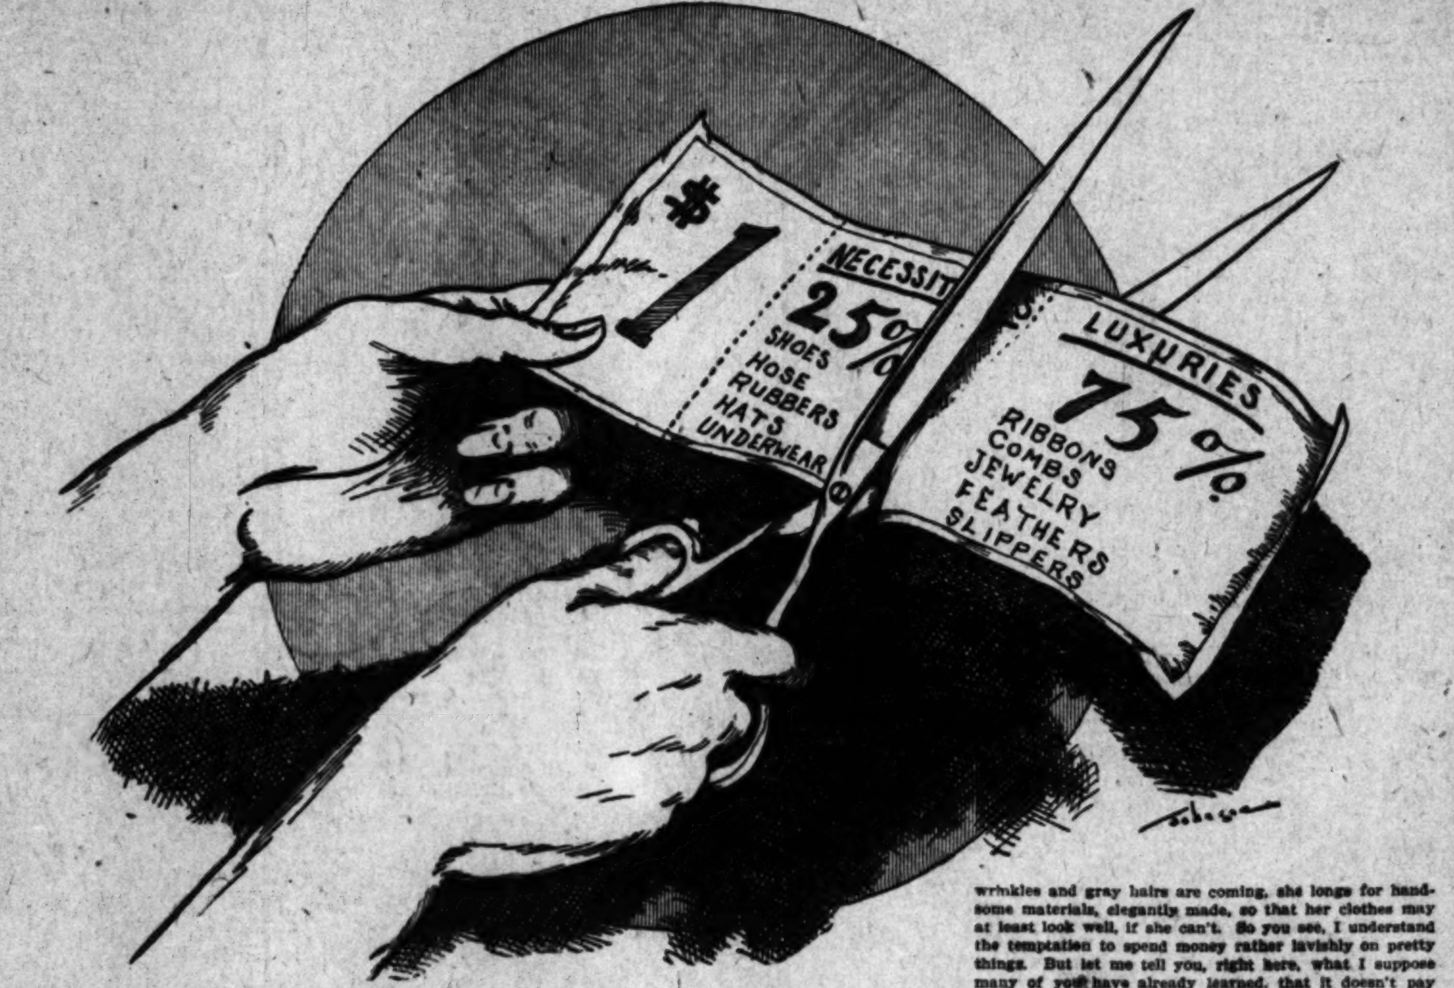
SHOULD ABHOR CHEAP FINERY

As a matter of course, every one has a right in this country to dress exactly as she pleases, in church or Sunday school, or out. But I wish sometimes there could be a consensus of public opinion that would enable girls to feel they could dress within their means without considering that they rendered themselves noticeable by doing so. A step in the sensible direction has been taken in shops where the saleswomen all dress in black. This leaves no room for competition in costume and must simplify the work and the thought the girls have to expend upon their dress.

I am the last person in the world to wish to restrain a girl's natural and commendable desire for pretty things. But I wish there were some way in which our girls could learn that it is possible to look well without indulging in cheap finery.

That is one reason—the main reason—why I am giving you this talk today. I am anxious to know what you girls spend on your clothing and see if you cannot, by comparing views, get and give some valuable suggestions.

A while ago I read a very interesting magazine article which set me to thinking and to wishing I could put it in the hands of every one of my girls. The writer treated the subject of women and wage earning and spoke of the difficulty all have in making the supply equal the demand. He states: "The most profligate spenders of today are the houseworkers in our homes and the girls who stand behind the counter for a sum sufficient to hold body and soul in working harmony, and not always even that." He goes on: "Any one with everyday sense will see that their pay will not allow of white shoes and useless frippery, abominable because of its too evident cheapness. It will hardly permit even poor furs and pasted plumes and the endless fancy truck whose glory is ephemeral and too soon seeks the repose of the dump, when warm overshoes and healthful underwear should be the order of the day. If you will open your eyes as you walk down your thoroughfares and around your shops, you will see women dressed in a 50-cent style on a 25-cent income."



What do you think of it, girls? Do you agree with him or not? I am afraid I do. And when I say he is in the right I do not apply his remarks only to working girls, but to all women who try to make for themselves cheap imitations of costly articles.

There is just where the trouble comes in. We rail against class distinctions and say that in this country the poor woman is just as much worth while as the rich one, so far as character and judgment and real worth are concerned. And then we tumble over one another, like sheep jumping over the wall, in our endeavor to follow a fashion set by women who have thousands where we have tens—or fives, or less. Honestly, don't you think it shows a lack of independence and a certain meanness of spirit not to have the courage to dress as our means warrant, instead of making ourselves into poor and absurd copies of women with enormous revenues?

I suppose you think it is very easy for me to talk, because I am no longer a girl. Bless you, my dear children, do you suppose a woman ceases to like pretty things just because she has put on years? Don't you know that where a young girl can, if she is healthy and clean and happy, look pleasing in almost anything, the woman who is growing older ought to be well dressed, if possible? It is her duty to try to make herself attractive, and when she knows that nature is failing her and that wrinkles and gray hairs are coming, she longs for handsome materials, elegantly made, so that her clothes may at least look well, if she can't. So you see, I understand the temptation to spend money rather lavishly on pretty things. But let me tell you, right here, what I suppose many of you have already learned, that it doesn't pay to buy cheap finery. It doesn't pay, either, to spend money in following up an ephemeral fashion, something that is popular today and gone tomorrow.

Last summer I asked a woman if she meant to get herself white shoes.

"Not if I know it!" she said emphatically. "In the first place, it is a fashion which will go in a short time, and I don't mean to waste money on shoes that have to be cleaned constantly to look decent. And in the second and more important place, my feet are too big!"

Many a time afterward I wished the other women had her sense when I saw feet incased in shoes that gave me an idea of what canal boats would look like if they were painted white, or when I saw other wearers who evidently thought that because shoes were white once they would be white always and so had omitted the needed cleaning.

That is only one of many things. Here is another case in point. We have seen a great deal of la years. But do girls really think that a w

WHAT THE VARIOUS WORKERS ARE DOING AND THINKING

A Commotion in the Hive

SOME time ago I gave the girls a talk with the heading, "Should the Old Father be Shot?" My object in doing this was to arouse the girls to a clearer idea of the way in which the old fathers are neglected, slighted and made to feel themselves of so little consequence that life becomes wretched to them. By thus opening the eyes of the girls to these points, it was my hope that the fathers might have the world made better and brighter for them by their daughters.

I find, however, that many of my readers failed to understand me, and secured only the idea that I advocated the speedy and violent taking-off of the unfortunate old fathers. I therefore take this opportunity of stating that for my own part I think they ought to have the gentlest and tenderest treatment, and that I myself would feel inclined to take a gun to any one who tried to shoot any of the fathers, old or young, in whom I am personally interested. Let's make them so happy that they won't want to be shot or to depart this life in any other manner.

Below are a few of the letters I have had. Some of the bees I have stirred up had their stings with them!

"A Thousand Times No!"

Will you pardon me if I say that the picture illustrating your talk to us girls on today's page—"Shall the Old Father be Shot?"—sent a shiver down my back? But after reading the page I think you did a very good thing to thus forcibly bring up before us the truth that the fathers do need a share of our affections and attentions. I have two of the best parents ever a girl had. They work uncomplainingly day after day, and month after month, and do everything in their power to make me happy. Yes, I think the fathers are generally neglected, perhaps not wilfully so, but the hurt of being overlooked, of not being considered of enough importance to have their wishes consulted or opinions asked, is not lessened by the excuse that may be offered: "Why, I never thought of asking father—he likes anything." Why is it that such a state of things exists? Is it because the children have always been taught that they must have the best of everything, at no matter what cost of the parents' time, love or money, until the child takes it for granted that only his or her own comfort ever need be considered? Or is it because the claims of society, clubs, conventions, etc., take so much time and attention that the home is of secondary importance? Personally, I am a great home girl, and to me there is no sadder sight underneath the sun than a poor, dear grandmother and grandfather who have given the very best of their lives to their children, and then, when old age renders them feeble, makes their steps slow and tottering, their minds forgetful and not so ready to grasp a thought or give an idea; when the poor, tired hands have forgotten their cunning—when all these claims of old age have come to those whose young lives were every bit as promising and full of hopes and ambitions as are our own—then to see them set aside, just as an old, worn-out piece of furniture would be cast into the attic, with never an unselfish thought for their comforts, not an hour given up to reading to them—nothing for the old people but a mere existence, with, in many cases, a sense of their burdensomeness continually held up before them—is there in all this wide world a sight more pitiful, more heart-breaking? Oh! if I could gather all the poor, forgotten, neglected, cast-aside grandparents, and put them into a home where every comfort would be considered, I would be so happy!

Therefore, I say, No! A thousand times, No! Do not let the poor, old father be shot down like a deserter, but rather let us strive in every way to make his life more livable; to show him that we love him, to give him some interests, to make him a part of our own lives. It is my opinion that there would be better men in this world if the daughters would devote one-half the time to their fathers that they bestow on their pet dogs, fads and—young men. This is the way I look at the matter.

PUSS (Ocean Park, Cal.).

This is a long letter, but it is so admirably written, so fervent and earnest in its appeal for the "old father," that I am sure it will do good to all who read it.

Thinks the Mother is at Fault

I will admit that there are many fathers who are not attractive in their families or elsewhere; but why? Does the wife always hold the husband dear? Does she keep his place and rights in the family sacred? It is very easy to neglect father. He is at work and his hands are rough and grimy, and he may be careless about his dress or manners. Does that justify the daughters in serving tea a little early for some stylish friends; in leaving him out of the parlor games and music? Men are more sensitive than women—one little slight will hurt them. Then comes another slight, and so on until the father is entirely neglected, sits alone all evening, and the rest of the family don't think about it. He will go out among other men, and together they are unhappy.

Don't ever allow one unkind thought to go out against the fathers of the families. If they were good enough to marry and become the fathers of the children, they are good enough still, and it is the fault of the women in the family that they grow unpleasant. The women are making this world. Whether it is good or bad is our fault.

B. C. W. (Glendale, Cal.).

Fathers Should be Chums

I should like to register an opinion on the "Father Question." Here in the West, at least, most of us would look at the question "Shall we pet our fathers?" as we would at "Shall we wash our faces?"; we hadn't realized the question was up for discussion. We idolize our father, or we bring him up in the way he should go—but neglect him—never! Among the girls I know I am sure in the majority of cases the bond between the girl and her father is stronger than that between her and her mother. Perhaps it is due to the fact that the father usually lives more in her generation. He has kept up with the world; mother has let it slip away from her. It is to father that we working girls take our business worries and talk them over "man to man." We depend on father for his opinion of the men we know. We have had a taste of the world's battle, and understand his struggle better. Among the twenty or more girls I have known well enough to know how things were, only one lacks an intense love for and interest in her father—and he deserted her mother. As for examples of fathers and daughters who are "chums," comrades in work and play, I could tire you with a list of them. My own dear "Dada" has been my refuge in times of trouble from the days of broken toys to grown-up heartaches. And no one else is quite the same to share a pleasure with, whether it be a new book or a bargain in ribbons. His business fads and politics he is equally ready to share. There is nearly forty years' difference in our ages; it isn't time that counts, but love and congeniality.

But it is after a girl marries and is settled in a home of her own that she turns to mother for guidance and sympathy. Homemaking doesn't change with the passing of a generation. Then, with her husband to bring her outside interests, let her see that she doesn't neglect her old chum—father. It is father who misses his daughter when she marries nowadays. Mother, unless too great a distance separates them, is apt to feel she has just found her.

Won't you tell us, Mrs. Herrick, what the girls in general think about the matter of "shooting father"? I have often wished, after reading one of your talks, I could know what all the other girls are thinking about it.

JOYCE (Los Angeles, Cal.).

I wish "Joyce" had given me her address. Our California girls seem to feel strongly on this subject—but not a bit too strongly. With "Joyce," I would like to know how the other girls look at it.

"Fathers Ought to be Petted"

I certainly think that the fathers ought to be petted, for they work for us and help us all the time without our thinking anything about it. I think everybody who has such a good father as I have should love him a great deal

An Uncomfortable Dream

Some time ago I dreamed that I was reading our page, and I saw my name on a list of those who had done nothing to prove that they meant to "stick to their pledge." While I don't believe in signs and dreams in general, this one roused me to action, for if such a list were to be made, my name would be among them. Although I have not been in school since spring, I have very little time to devote to club work. But if you will send me the name of some young girl who is an invalid, I will try to send some interesting clippings, poems, pictures, etc.—a sort of sunshine bag.

EVELYN (Allegheny, Pa.).

If all our members who don't work for Each and All had bad dreams, what an epidemic of nightmares there would be through the land! I wish all the girls would have a dream to set them to work when they wake up!

An Interesting Description

I am staying in Bedford, Va. Perhaps the girls would like to hear a little about this town. From the main avenue one can see the "Peaks of Otter," which belong to the Blue Ridge. Parties climb to the summit to see the sunrise, and it truly is a beautiful sight. Then there are rocks on the top of the "Peak" which are so oddly formed. One is shaped like a turtle; another is called "Needle's Eye," another "Lover's Leap," and another "Table Rock." Tobacco is one of the leading products here, and two-horse wagons laden heavily with flat baskets, piled high, are a common sight just now. The farmers haul it to the warehouse, where it is sold at auction. The last Monday of every month is "Court" day, also called "Trading" day. Farmers ride into town leading horses of every color, but they are mostly a dejected and sorry-looking lot of nags. The farmers trade one with another; after the deal is closed they go to the Courthouse, where they all meet and talk on the street in groups for awhile, then return home with their purchases and tell their folks at home the latest news. Many only come to town on "Court" day. At every street crossing here there are stepping stones about a foot high and a foot and a half apart. There are many cabins still standing, and many old homes here, which make one think of the happy times before the war. The house I live in was built before the war, and there are the finest big fireplaces I ever saw. There are big rose-bushes in the yard, which bear the most beautiful roses.

I will send any girl a postal view of Virginia who will send me a late magazine or book of fiction. I am fond of reading. I am a native of Pennsylvania, and I get lonely at times. Books are the best company I have.

M. M. (Bedford, Va., formerly at Holmesburg, Pa.).

Perhaps it is partly because I am familiar with the appearance of those old Virginia towns that I think this letter so interesting. Still, I am sure others will enjoy it, and will be glad to make the exchange asked by "M. M."

Another Appeal for Reading Matter

I used to enjoy the paper so much, and the club page was the first to be read. I wrote you last winter. Since then I don't see the papers, and know not what my sisters are doing. But I would appreciate some papers most highly if any one would be so kind as to send them. And I want you to help me find the address of a member who sent me some music for exchange. It came in the bustle of moving and I have lost the address. I wrote once to the address as I remembered it, but have forgotten it all now and want to send what I have to her. I have felt awfully bad about it, but I am always so busy and worried I have little time to write. I would also like to know if there are any of the club members in Washington, D. C. I expect soon to go there, and if there are any who would lend a friendly hand it would be appreciated.

Mrs. M. C. (Rondo, Va.).

Here is another letter from Virginia that will interest our readers. I am sure the request for papers will be promptly met, and I hope that the friend who sent the music may see this and reply.

Two Letters on the Quilt Question

Will you please tell the girls who desire quilt blocks that if they will write and tell me what kind they want I will be very glad to make them one or more? I have also a few cake recipes I would be willing to give to any one who wants them. I would like to receive a few suggestions about how the Each and All quilts and sofa pillows are made, if any are willing to help me.

E. M. W. (Pascoag, R. I.).

I am desirous to have an Each and All quilt, but know nothing whatever about the pattern, or how we can get these quilt blocks. Whenever it comes to quilt sewing, I am interested and willing to exchange pieces.

M. E. S. (Whittier, Cal.).

Again, let me refer quiltmakers to the chairman of the Quilt Brigade, Mrs E. D., Fig Ranch, Hollywood, Cal.

"Her Heart's Desire"

My heart's desire is to be an expert piano player. I have had a piano for two years, but never had the chance to learn. I learned a few notes in school, but of course that isn't much help. I play by ear, and everybody tells me that it will be against me if I should ever take lessons. I am also fond of singing and reading.

I would like to exchange souvenir postals with some girl from the West. I worked at millinery for a year, but couldn't keep it up on account of my eyes. I make all my own hats and also trim them. I wish I could be of some help.

NANA J. K. (Philadelphia, Pa.).

Where are the musical girls in the chapter who will help this member to win her "heart's desire"? There is sure to be some one ready to aid.

From the Utopian Club

The Utopian Chapter of Dorchester has secured its own clubroom, and recently had a bean supper, which was a great success.

K. L. (Salem, Mass.).

It delights me to make this entry.

Cross Stitch and Stamps

A few weeks ago I saw a request made by a lady in North Dakota for cross-stitch designs. I would say that I have some designs cut from a newspaper which I intended to try, and if she could use same I would cheerfully forward them to her, provided she would return them or duplicates. Please publish this, and if she has not received the assistance she desires, this may serve her.

I would be pleased to know if the stamp collectors desire the ordinary 1 and 2 cent canceled stamps, of which I handle many each day, and can help in this way.

FABIOLA (Salem, Mass.).

I print both these offers in the hope that they may meet the eyes of those to whom they will be of service.

TWO HELPFUL POEMS

HERE are two bits of verse which will, I think, appeal to our girls. They are sent by two Philadelphia members:

THE POWER OF FAITH.

Margaret A. Richard.

O, say not of anything, dearest,
That it is too good to be true;
That though it is lovely to dream of
'Tis not for such creatures as you.

Believe in and strive for the highest—
So nourish the faith in your breast
That you, by believing and striving,
Shall win what is fairest and best.

C. H. N. (Philadelphia, Pa.)

NO RETURNING.

Remember, three things come not back:
The arrow sent upon its track—
It will not swerve, it will not stay
Its speed; it flies to wound or slay.

The spoken word, so soon forgot
By thee, but it has perished not;
In other hearts 'tis living still,
And doing work for good or ill.

And the lost opportunity
That cometh back no more to thee;
In vain thou weepest, in vain dost yearn—
Those three will nevermore return.

F. L. A. F. (Philadelphia, Pa.)

Who Can Make College Cushions?

I wish you would ask the girls—those who make college cushions—to send me suggestions along that line. I have occasion to make a few, and would like some new ideas.

I have a small collection of foreign stamps which I would be glad to exchange for postcards. I notice many of the girls are collecting them, and would gladly let them have mine.

MAE (Roxborough, Phila., Pa.).

Who can give suggestions for the college cushions?

Helping the Invalids

I have lots of spare time, and if you have the names of any shut-ins or invalids who would like to have some one write to them, I would like to write and cheer them up.

MAY D. (Watertown, Mass.).

I wish all the girls willing to give such help as this would connect themselves with one of our Invalid Help Chapters.

A Novel "Door Tender"

I can crochet, also knit mittens, and would be glad to do something for you in that line. I make a very pretty and handy "door tender" that some may like to know about. Take a large bottle and fill it with sand. Then take a black stocking, cut foot off and sew across to make a bag. Pull stocking-leg on bottle, tie around neck for waist line; then take cotton and stuff in leg to make body of waist and tie to the neck of bottle. Then stuff again to make head and tie at top of bottle. Dress it up like a colored woman, putting a bright red handkerchief on top of the head. Take black-headed pins for the eyes, sew a little red in for the mouth, and stand her down by the door to keep it open.

Would not a pillow made of blue with gold bees all around it and a web in the centre with the words "Busy bees improve each shining hour" be very pretty? I am thinking of making one as an Each and All pillow.

Mrs. E. B. H. (Waltham, Mass.).

The name "door tender" was new to me, but I think the idea excellent, and much better than the brick one often sees used in country houses for holding doors open in hot weather.

A Musical Girl

I would like a correspondent from the South. I am studying music and am also taking harmony lessons. I am 14.

PROUD (Lowell, Mass.).

Which of our musical Southern girls will write to this member?

A Modest "Star"

"I cannot do much," said a little star,
"To make this dark world bright.
My silvery beams cannot pierce far
Into the darkness of night.
But I am a part of God's plan,
So I will do the best that I can."

I compare myself to the "little star." I know I cannot do much to help the girls along, but I will do the best I can.

BERTHA (Philadelphia, Pa.).

You know it is all the single stars working together, "Each and All," that make the brightness.

Who Wishes to Exchange?

Will you kindly insert my name in the paper when convenient to you, to exchange foreign stamps, studies in water colors, battenberg patterns and crochet patterns?

B. M. B. (Allentown, Pa.).

Many are the girls interested in each of these subjects. I hope some of them will send for "B. M. B.'s" address.

Two Letters That Belong Together

When I asked for addresses before, several of them were telephone operators, and I tried to form a chapter; but only succeeded in obtaining one member, so the club was not a success.

CATHERINE B. C. (Philadelphia, Pa.).

I would like to join the Telephone Chapter, as I am an operator. I do not work at it now, as I have to keep house, but if I ever have to work again, I will be a "Hello" girl.

Mrs. N. K. (Redondo, Cal.).

Here is at least one member for "Catherine B. C.'s" chapter. Won't each of you try to get another, and won't the telephone girls already in Each and All help to make that chapter big and busy?

Wishes to Correspond in French

I take a great interest in French, although I don't know much about the language, as I studied it only two years at a High School. I attended High School three years, but was unable to finish. It was quite a blow, for I like to study.

M. E. G. (Farmington Falls, Me.).

We have girls who correspond in French and are able to help this member. Which one of them wishes the chance to do it?

Fritz and the Purse of Gold

WHAT was the matter with Fritz? Suddenly something ailed him, but no one seemed to be able just what it was.

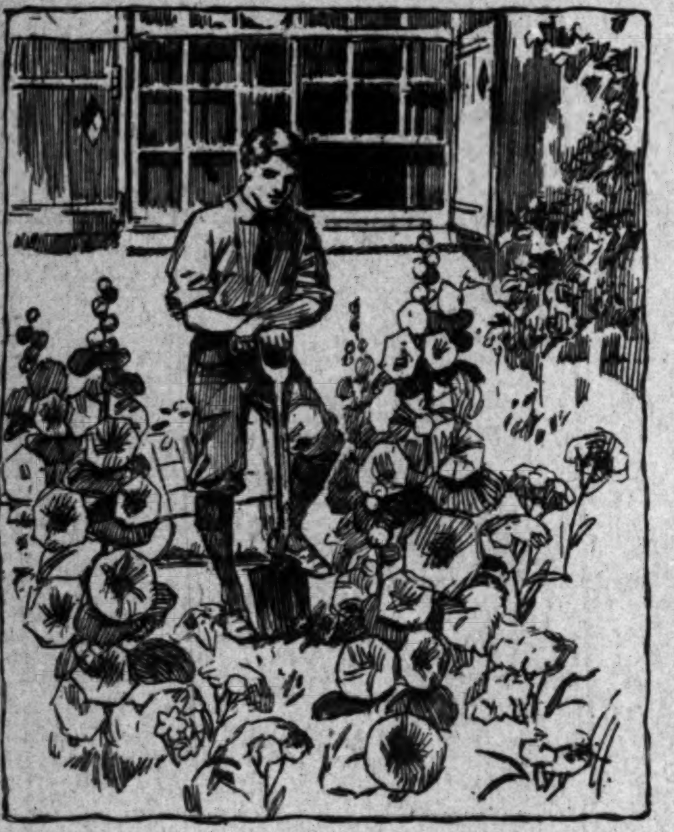
The charm taking beautiful care of the orchard, and not even one is injured or allowed to die, or the purse of gold will remain undiscovered."



The Garden Grew Fast

They chatted on for a little while, and then the old man departed, leaving Fritz full of wonder and thought over the strange thing he had just been told and which he could not doubt, because, as every one knew, the schoolmaster always told the truth.

His sleep was very restless that night. He tossed and turned and thought:

"Where can it be hidden? Oh, how cruel that I—a poor, sickly fellow—cannot be told the exact spot! For I believe I should not mind digging one hole or maybe two holes. But to dig all over the place! Impossible!"

FRITZ BEGINS HIS SEARCH

The more he thought about it, however, the more he longed for the purse of gold, and the less he wanted some one else who could and would dig to find it. Suppose there were others who already knew of its existence. Suppose they were greedily waiting for him to die so that they might begin to dig!

Full of wrath and jealousy, he could scarcely wait for daybreak, and, when it dawned, up he sprang, found an old spade, mended it and picking out a remote corner of the garden began to dig.

He dug deep and carefully, and crumbled up every spadeful of soil so that the purse of gold might not escape his eye. And, mindful of the charm which the old man had related, he got out his mother's seed bags and planted a variety of seeds in carefully laid out beds.

"Ugh! my back does ache and my legs are stiff and sore!" he groaned as he stopped work to prepare breakfast. "But even if I die from overwork, I shall keep on. No one else is going to get that purse of gold if I can prevent it."

How good his breakfast tasted. The black bread and the water! Why, it was the best loaf the baker had ever baked, thought he. Then he went out and resumed his work, and gradually, before he knew it, all the ache and stiffness wore off, and he became so interested in planting that at times he actually forgot that his original and only interest had been in the purse of gold.

As the days went by his delight in watching the tender, green shoots grow into wonderful, productive plants became unbounded. All he had done was to dig and plant, water and tend. Then sun, wind and rain had done their share in helping him. And now, behold the wondrous result! The garden grew so fast, that almost before his back was turned on the latest dug and planted bed, lo! the little leaves peeped up out of the ground, and seemed to say, "Good morning, good Fritz, we have come up from those little brown seeds you hid in the soil!"

Pretty soon the neighbors began to gather in groups and discuss the latest wonder—Fritz, once so weak and helpless, was carrying baskets full of garden stuff to market!

"Why, he's as rosy and healthy as any one now!" exclaimed one. "Evidently he has recovered from that mysterious disease that he had. I wonder what it was?"

The schoolmaster came and hung over the fence one day, and looked carefully at Fritz's garden and orchard.

"A fine crop of cabbages, Fritz," he remarked, "found the purse, eh?"

AFTER TWO YEARS

"No," answered Fritz, who was busy with his hoe. "No, not yet, sir. Fact is, I've been too busy to look for it lately. I've worked the garden from one end to the other; so I suppose it is in the orchard. But I shall not have time to hunt for it there until next spring at the earliest."

"Oh, well, it will keep," said the old man. "How are you feeling these days, Fritz?"

"Feeling? Oh! fine, thank you. Really, I haven't had time to think of my health."

No one, indeed, by this time, boasted of a better appetite or sounder sleep than Fritz enjoyed. Every day was busier and happier than the day before, the crops outdid themselves in bountifulness and quality, and Fritz found himself possessed of more money than he needed to spend, so he put it in bank and kept his bank book in a corner of the old family desk.

Time slipped by until it was the end of the second summer, and one day the old schoolmaster came for another visit to his old pupil. He noted the beautiful appearance of the garden and orchard, the finely cultivated vines over the porch and the borders of bright flowers, and he thought:

"Aha! Fritz is doing so well that he is getting ready for a bride."

THE SCHOOLMASTER AGAIN

He entered the house without knocking, and found Fritz seated at his desk, containing money he had just received from a sale of fruit.

"Ah, you have found it!" exclaimed the old man.

"Found what?"

"Why, the purse of gold!"

"O—oh!" and then Fritz smiled. "Why, sure enough—the purse of gold. I had forgotten it. Oh, I long ago quit looking for it, sir. I have already earned more gold than the purse contains, I am sure. So I'll let the next fellow hunt for it, if he wants to. I'm too busy myself."

Looking at his bright eyes, glowing cheeks, straight, strong back and clean, powerful legs, the old man laughed aloud, and Fritz, from pure sympathy, joined in with his own loud laughter.

"What's it all about, sir?" he asked.

"Well," returned the old man, "I promised you one purse of gold, but I see I should have promised a hundred. For see what you have accomplished!"

Fritz stared, light dawned upon his mind, and he shook his finger at the old man, half accusingly.

"Then you were only jesting?"

The old man's face sobered.

"No, Fritz, what I said was true. You have made it true. If you had not, some one coming after you would have."

Fritz understood, and took the schoolmaster's hand in his own warm one, with a look of great gratitude and affection. He, at least, now knew what the old, mysterious disease had been from which the schoolmaster had helped him to recover.

Mouse Stops Train

ON THE Italian railways an electrical apparatus, upon the departure of a train from any station, rings six strokes upon a gong in the next station. The station master at Capri, hearing three strokes when there should have been six, immediately came to the conclusion that there was something wrong on the line, and ordered up the electric signals of warning. The train, which was by this time under full headway, came to a dead stop.

Then began a transfer of telegraphic messages. The passengers were anxious to know what was the matter. They waited while the messages went back and forth. The inquiry established the fact that everything was right on the line, and the train was ordered forward after considerable delay.

The station master about this time thought it might be well to look into his gong, and there he found, stuck fast between the cogs of the electrical apparatus, a mouse.

The unhappy animal happened to be in the interior of the clock when it "struck one," and down he attempted to run, but was caught between the murderous wheels. His little body was big enough to stop the whole apparatus, and consequently the train as well.

Beautiful Things

BEAUTIFUL faces are those that wear,
It matters little if dark or fair,
Whole-souled honesty written there.

Beautiful eyes are those that show,
Like crystal panes where hearth-fires glow,
Beautiful thoughts that burn below.

Beautiful lips are those whose words
Leap from the heart like songs of birds,
Yet whose utterance prudence girds.

Beautiful hands are those that do
Work that is earnest, brave and true
Moment by moment the long day through.

Beautiful feet are those that go
On kindly errands to and fro
Down humblest ways if God wills it so.

Beautiful shoulders are those that bear
The needful burdens of homely care
With patient grace and daily prayer.

Beautiful lives are those that bless,
Silent rivers of happiness
Whose hidden fountains but few may guess.

Ted

I HAVE a little brindle dog,
Seal-brown from tail to head.
His name I guess is Theodore,
But I just call him Ted.

He's only eight months old today—
I guess he's just a pup;
Pa says he won't be larger
When he is all grown up.

He plays around about the house,
As good as he can be.
He don't seem like a little dog,
He's just like folks to me.

And when it is my bedtime,
Ma opens up the bed;
Then I nestle down real cozy
And just make room Ted.

And oh, how nice we cuddle!
He doesn't fuss or bite,
Just nestles closely up to me
And lies there still all night.

We love each other dearly,
My little Ted and me.
We're just good chums together,
And always hope to be.

—Maxine Anna Buck, in Our Dumb Animals.

Thread and Eggshell.

Some interesting and effective little tricks may be performed with the aid of thread that has previously been soaked in salt and water. This renders the ash of the thread, when burned, sufficiently strong to support a light weight, such as an empty eggshell, provided there is no vibration in the article to which the thread is attached.

Having suspended an egg by a prepared thread, a match can be applied and the thread burnt right through without the egg falling to the ground.

Wanted for Ornament.

My little brother, aged 4 years, who was visiting his grandparents, was fond of sugar. One morning at breakfast he repeatedly asked for more sugar to put on his oatmeal. One of his aunts said, "You don't need any more sugar." Willie replied, "Oh, I only want it for an ornament."

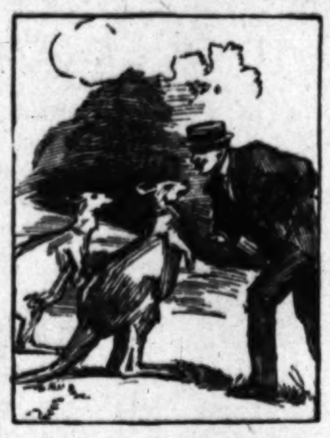
Kangaroos as Pets

FOR some time past there has been a great desire to be original in one's pets.

Dogs and cats are as popular as ever, of course, but people have taken a fancy to other animals as well, lizards, prairie dogs, and even rarer animals, such as emus and young alligators.

And now the kangaroo craze has taken hold, ever since the beautiful Countess of Warwick started it. She has a very fine specimen at Warwick Castle.

Any one who has a little pasture land available can keep a kangaroo, and it will be found both gentle and teachable. Some years ago we heard a good deal about the "boxing" kangaroo, and people thought then the kangaroo was difficult to train, but it really is as easy to train as a dog, after it gets over its shyness.



AS EASY TO TRAIN AS DOGS

Jolly Games to Play

FOLLOWING are some tiptop games for indoors. It is a little early yet for outdoor play—especially in the case of quite young children:

Red Cap and Blue Cap.

The players seat themselves in a circle to represent tailors at work on a piece of cloth—a handkerchief or a duster will answer the purpose.

A leader or foreman is chosen, and every one of the company is named in turn Red Cap, Blue Cap, Black Cap, Yellow Cap, Brown Cap, etc. The leader then takes the piece of cloth and pretends to examine the work which is supposed to have been done by the workman.

He is supposed to discover a bad stitch, and asks: "Who did it, Blue Cap?"

The latter immediately answers: "Not I, sir."

"Who then, sir?"

"Yellow Cap, sir."

Yellow Cap must then answer at once in the same manner and name another workman. Any one who fails to answer to his name pays a forfeit.

If carried on in a brisk manner, this game will cause endless amusement.

Initials.

A list of the names of some celebrated persons should be prepared beforehand in this way.

The name is written at the left of the paper, and on the same line, to the right, a characterization of two or more words is written suggestive of the name it follows, and beginning with its initials in regular order. For example:

Abraham Lincoln	Absolutely Loyal
Robert L. Stevenson	Rare Loving Spirit
William Shakespeare	Worth Studying
Wm. M. Thackeray	Wit; Much Tenderness
Edgar Allan Poe	Extravagant and Peculiar
David Livingston	Delayed Long
Richard Steele	Rare Scapegrace
Louis Agassiz	Loved Animals
H. B. Stowe	Her Books Sold
Mark Twain	Makes Travesties
H. M. Stanley	He Made Search
Louisa M. Alcott	Left Many Admirers
Christopher Columbus	Conquering Cruiser
Ralph W. Emerson	Really Worth Emulating
Wm. E. Gladstone	Who's England's Glory?
Mary Stuart	Many Schemes
Charles Reade	Clever Romancer
Oliver W. Holmes	Oh, What Humor!
Thomas Carlyle	Terribly Caustic
Charles Dickens	Cherished Deservedly

The lines are then cut across so as to leave one name and its accompanying sentence on each slip. When the guests have arrived and are seated around the room, the host or leader reads the short, descriptive phrases aloud, one at a time, and the person who first guesses the character referred to receives the slip.

At the end of the game a prize is given to the player who has won the most slips.—The Book of a Hundred Games.

The Blind Man's Wand.

This is another way of playing Blind Man's Buff, and is thought by many to be an improvement on that game.

The player who is blindfolded stands in the centre of the room with a long paper wand, which can be made of a newspaper folded up lengthways, and tied at each end with string. The other players then join hands and stand around him in a circle.

Some one then plays a merry tune on the piano, and the players dance round and round the blind man, until suddenly the music stops; the blind man then takes the opportunity of lowering his wand upon one of the circle, and the player upon whom it has fallen has to take hold of it.

The blind man then makes a noise, such as, for instance, the barking of a dog, a street cry, or anything he thinks will cause the player he has caught to betray himself, as the captive must imitate whatever noise the blind man likes to make.

Should the blind man detect who holds the stick, the one who is caught has to be blind man; if not, the game goes on until he succeeds.

MARCH BRINGS BREEZES SHARP AND CHILL, SHAKES THE DANCING DAFFODIL

THE stormy March is come at last,
With wind, and cloud, and changing skies;
I hear the rushing of the blast
That through the snowy valley flies.

Ah, passing few are they who speak,
Wild, stormy month, in praise of thee;
Yet, though thy winds are loud and bleak,
Thou art a welcome month to me.

Oldest New Yorker

JUST listen to this. The oldest living thing in New York is a great big tortoise; he is 306 years old; his name is Buster and he weighs 237 pounds. He is very gentle, and eats from the hands of his keepers. A gentleman who lived in Honolulu many years ago told me the big, old turtles used to walk about the streets there and eat the scraps of food people would throw to them. They were so large that the little children used to climb up on their backs and ride about. How queer it would look to us to see turtles roaming about the streets, and how very funny it would seem to ride on one!—The Circle.

A Play Powwow

ONE of the most delightful of "dress-up" parties is a jolly play powwow.

You can have friends of all ages participate, and it will be sure to be very informal.

Issue your invitations on sheets of birch bark, using Indian characters as decorations. You can even word the entire invitation in Indian characters and send each guest a "key" on a separate slip of paper, so that they may have all the fun of deciphering the invitation.

For instance, the date is indicated by the proper quarter of the moon (for which you may consult an almanac); the hour by symbols of that time of day; a wigwam represents the meeting place; a pipe of peace indicates the character of the meeting (for peace, not war); and a picture of a corncake will give a clue to the character of the refreshments.

Make it clear to all that they are expected to come in Indian costume.

The costume is easily devised. Take heavy brown linen, some turkey-red cotton, bright beads and several bright quills and secure from somewhere a very gay blanket.

With these materials you will have no difficulty preparing a make-up that will be both very effective and a good disguise. Take your choice of the characters of an old squaw or young Pocahontas, an old chief or a young brave.

The hostess has wigwams, tripods and kettles to set up. And for refreshments she should try to have Indian foods—cornmeal cakes, Indian pudding and other dishes made of corn (maize).

It will add to the interest of your powwow if you allow it to be known at the time invitations are issued that prizes will be given the guests whose costumes are voted to be the best.

Real Cinderella

THOSE who love the old story of Cinderella will be interested to know that she was a real person, but not, as many suppose, a German or English girl of a few centuries ago. She lived in Egypt at least 2000 years ago, and her real name was Rhodome.

One day, when she was bathing in the Nile, an eagle carried off one of her shoes, which she had left on the river bank. The eagle dropped the shoe, which was of fur—not of glass, as the legend has it—right at the foot of the King, who was staying at Memphis. He was so surprised at the small size of the shoe thus literally flung at his feet that he sent a messenger to discover the owner of such tiny feet.

The messenger succeeded in finding the owner of the shoe, and Rhodome was brought to Memphis to become the queen of King Psammetichus of Egypt.

Can you give the answer? (A word of five letters.)

Truthful Tommy.

"Tommy," said a father to his son, "have you been at those six peaches I put in the cupboard?"

"Father," said Tommy, looking into his eyes, "I have not touched one."

"Then how is it your mother found five peach stones in your bedroom, and there is only one peach left on the plate?"

"That," said Tommy, as he dashed wildly for the door, "is the one I didn't touch."—Tit-Bits.

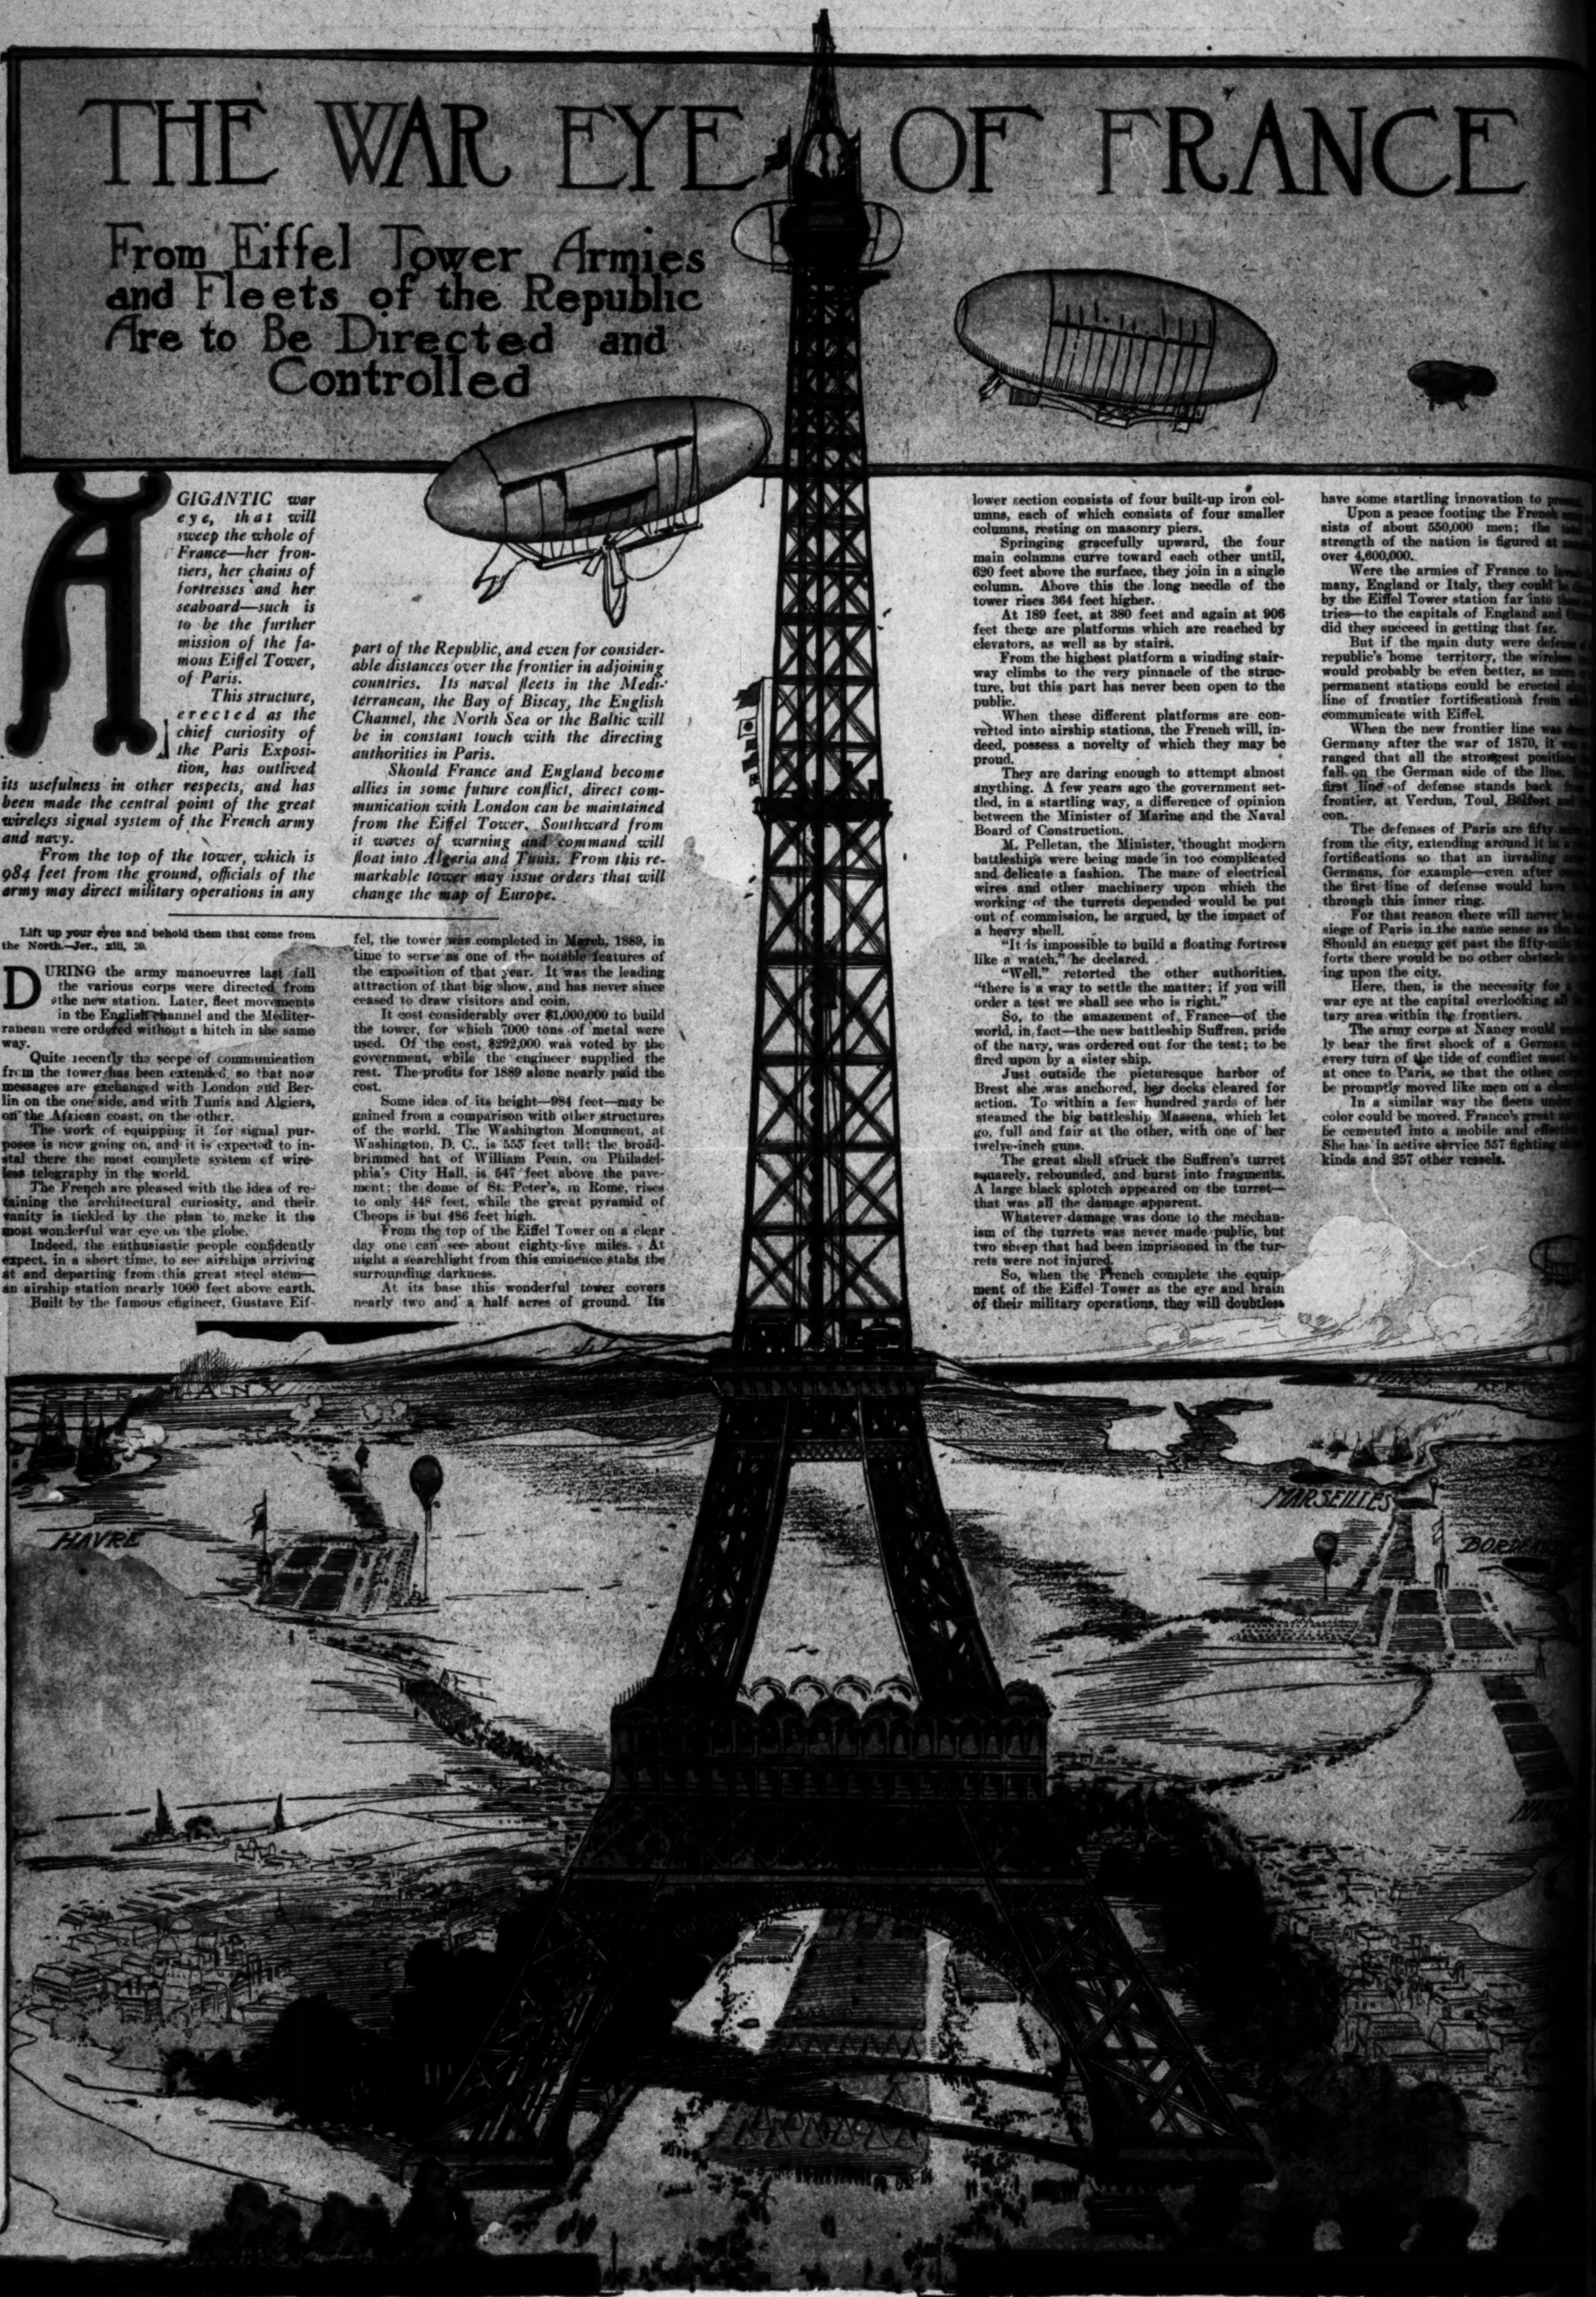
Fish That Can Walk.

The mud-skipper is one of the queerest fishes alive. It really is a fish and lives in the water, but it can climb out on to the shore and crawl. It likes to clamber up on to roots of trees and perch there. Another funny thing about it is that it breathes with its tail! The skin there is very thin, and the fish breathes through it quite easily.

THE WAR EYE OF FRANCE

From Eiffel Tower Armies and Fleets of the Republic Are to Be Directed and Controlled



A GIGANTIC war eye, that will sweep the whole of France—her frontiers, her chains of fortresses and her seaboard—such is to be the further mission of the famous Eiffel Tower, of Paris.

This structure, erected as the chief curiosity of the Paris Exposition, has outlived its usefulness in other respects, and has been made the central point of the great wireless signal system of the French army and navy.

From the top of the tower, which is 984 feet from the ground, officials of the army may direct military operations in any part of the Republic, and even for considerable distances over the frontier in adjoining countries. Its naval fleets in the Mediterranean, the Bay of Biscay, the English Channel, the North Sea or the Baltic will be in constant touch with the directing authorities in Paris.

Should France and England become allies in some future conflict, direct communication with London can be maintained from the Eiffel Tower. Southward from it waves of warning and command will float into Algeria and Tunis. From this remarkable tower may issue orders that will change the map of Europe.

Lift up your eyes and behold them that come from the North.—Jer., xiii, 20.

DURING the army manoeuvres last fall the various corps were directed from the new station. Later, fleet movements in the English channel and the Mediterranean were ordered without a hitch in the same way.

Quite recently the scope of communication from the tower has been extended, so that now messages are exchanged with London and Berlin on the one side, and with Tunis and Algiers, on the African coast, on the other.

The work of equipping it for signal purposes is now going on, and it is expected to instal there the most complete system of wireless telegraphy in the world.

The French are pleased with the idea of retaining the architectural curiosity, and their vanity is tickled by the plan to make it the most wonderful war eye on the globe.

Indeed, the enthusiastic people confidently expect, in a short time, to see airships arriving at and departing from this great steel stem—an airship station nearly 1000 feet above earth.

Built by the famous engineer, Gustave Eiffel, the tower was completed in March, 1889, in time to serve as one of the notable features of the exposition of that year. It was the leading attraction of that big show, and has never since ceased to draw visitors and coin.

It cost considerably over $1,000,000 to build the tower, for which 7000 tons of metal were used. Of the cost, $292,000 was voted by the government, while the engineer supplied the rest. The profits for 1889 alone nearly paid the cost.

Some idea of its height—984 feet—may be gained from a comparison with other structures of the world. The Washington Monument, at Washington, D. C., is 555 feet tall; the broad-brimmed hat of William Penn, on Philadelphia's City Hall, is 547 feet above the pavement; the dome of St. Peter's, in Rome, rises to only 448 feet, while the great pyramid of Cheops is but 486 feet high.

From the top of the Eiffel Tower on a clear day one can see about eighty-five miles. At night a searchlight from this eminence stabs the surrounding darkness.

At its base this wonderful tower covers nearly two and a half acres of ground. Its lower section consists of four built-up iron columns, each of which consists of four smaller columns, resting on masonry piers.

Springing gracefully upward, the four main columns curve toward each other until, 620 feet above the surface, they join in a single column. Above this the long needle of the tower rises 364 feet higher.

At 189 feet, at 380 feet and again at 906 feet there are platforms which are reached by elevators, as well as by stairs.

From the highest platform a winding stairway climbs to the very pinnacle of the structure, but this part has never been open to the public.

When these different platforms are converted into airship stations, the French will, indeed, possess a novelty of which they may be proud.

They are daring enough to attempt almost anything. A few years ago the government settled, in a startling way, a difference of opinion between the Minister of Marine and the Naval Board of Construction.

M. Pelletan, the Minister, thought modern battleships were being made in too complicated and delicate a fashion. The maze of electrical wires and other machinery upon which the working of the turrets depended would be put out of commission, he argued, by the impact of a heavy shell.

"It is impossible to build a floating fortress like a watch," he declared.

"Well," retorted the other authorities, "there is a way to settle the matter; if you will order a test we shall see who is right."

So, to the amazement of France—of the world, in fact—the new battleship Suffren, pride of the navy, was ordered out for the test; to be fired upon by a sister ship.

Just outside the picturesque harbor of Brest she was anchored, her decks cleared for action. To within a few hundred yards of her steamed the big battleship Massena, which let go, full and fair at the other, with one of her twelve-inch guns.

The great shell struck the Suffren's turret squarely, rebounded, and burst into fragments. A large black splotch appeared on the turret—that was all the damage apparent.

Whatever damage was done to the mechanism of the turrets was never made public, but two sheep that had been imprisoned in the turrets were not injured.

So, when the French complete the equipment of the Eiffel Tower as the eye and brain of their military operations, they will doubtless have some startling innovation to pres

Some Matters of Especial Interest to the Women.

HE MAN OR THE MACHINE.

HOW WILL CUNNINGHAM OUTRAGED THE PROPRIETIES.

ECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

All we women adore impudence—im- udence of the right kind, and from he right kind of person, I mean—so, hen Will Cunningham, as we after- ard found him to be named, came oward us from the down-stream side f the parapet of the bridge on which e were resting, after a ten-mile spin, oth Mary and I felt a thrill of de- ightfully outraged propriety.

A handsome, clean-cut looking fel- w he was, who obviously intended to peak to us, without a trace of em- arrassment, and, at the same time, ithout a sign of over self-confi- ence.

"I beg your pardon," he said, rais- ng his cap, "but do either of you adies happen to have a pet char- y?"

Mary is a great believer in Dr. Bar- ardo, and said so, adding: "But why o you ask?"

"Well," Mr. Cunningham said, "the ellow on the other side of the bridge ill owe me a sovereign in a few min- tes; now I want to give it to some eserving object, but as I'm rather eak on deserving objects, I thought, erhaps, you might be able to help me ut, if only for the sake of charity. t's awfully good of you not to mind oing so. You fancy Bernardo, eh? What's his special line?"

Mary was in the midst of a sub- cription list at that very time, and ecame deeply intent in making a onvert to her pet charity. I was quite een on it, too, so that for some min- tes the conversation was very ani- ated. Presently, Mr. Cunningham, who had been glancing at his watch or some moments past, said: "Well, t sounds all right, but I should like o hear more of it. I'll just get the oney, so the other fellow needn't ait any longer. Back in half a min- te," he added, as he crossed the ridge.

We saw the strange young man umble in his pockets, and count out oney into "our stranger's" hand. He ounted his machine, grinning rather heepishly in our direction as he rode ff.

"Do you mind coppers?" Mr. Cun- ingham asked, as he returned. "Pret- y nearly cleaned the poor beggar out, fancy. Shouldn't make rash bets, hough, should he? And now about Barnardo. What happens to the lads fter he gets them out to Canada?"

And Mary and I told him. He was o deeply interested, that he forgot o hand over the money at once. He ept jingling it in his hand, and at ast thoughtlessly slipped it into his ocket.

From the discussion of charities we aturally drifted on to the discussion f charitable people, when we found hat we had many mutual friends in Langham, so that, when Mary sud- enly discovered that we should have o hurry home, or be late for dinner, t seemed not at all out of the common hat Mr. Cunningham should accom- any us on the way.

"I wonder, Miss Agnes," he re- marked presently, "how it is that we ave never met before, for—it's incon- eivable, isn't it?—we've never been properly introduced."

"No," said I, with as much severity s I could assume at a moment's no- ice, after having been talking to him, s though to an old friend, for more han half an hour. "And perhaps ou'd better——"

"Introduce myself," said he, which e immediately proceeded to do, hough that was not at all what I was bout to suggest. Cunningham's ny name—Will Cunningham, Col. Cunningham's my father. You know im, don't you?"

Of course we knew him very well ndeed. He lived on the other side of angham, but Dad and he were great riends.

"I've only just got back from Aus- ralia," he continued, "which ac- ounts, perhaps, for my country man- ers, and speaking to you without— r—being—er—but you don't mind uch, do you?—er—now."

As it turned out we didn't mind, nd he seemed such a nice fellow that don't believe we should have minded uch, even if—but there——.

"May I come and take you for a run omorrow afternoon, Miss Mary?" he sked, as we reached our gate. "May Miss Agnes? I'm at a loose end hese days, and should be awfully lad if—er—"

"Well, really," said Mary, hesitat- ngly.

"Right you are," he replied. "What me will suit you best? Three o'clock? apital."

He had opened the gate for us, and ad said good-by, when Mary remem- ered the subscription. She didn't uite like to ask for it straight out, so he said:

"Oh, Mr. Cunningham! Do tell us efore you go what was the bet about the bridge?"

"My word!" he exclaimed, rather asively, I thought, diving his hand to his pocket. "That was a near ave! Nearly went off with your vereign! Near as a toucher, didn't ? Here it is."

"Thank you," said Mary. "But"— rsistently—"how did you win it?"

"Well—er—" he replied, as a faint nge of color showed under his onzed skin, "er—the fellow betted at you—er—wouldn't talk to me— —for five minutes if I spoke to you ithout—er—"

"What frightful impudence!" I cried, oroughly shocked at the glaring propriety of the whole thing.

"Wasn't it?" cried he. "I thought at the time, but—er—we made him t up, didn't we? Cost him a month's cket money, did that little bit of eek! Know better next time, won't ? Well, well, you want to be off— od night. Three o'clock tomorrow— od-by."

As Mary and I dressed for dinner e agreed that he was dreadfully im- rtinent—and—that we liked him ry much—very much indeed.

The following afternoon, after a de- htful ride, our good opinion was nfirmed; but when he came in to tea d made himself thoroughly agree- le to the Mater and Dad, we were t, perhaps, so loud in our praises— t we thought.

From that time hardly a day passed thout his coming to the house, even hen the weather was too bad for rid- g, and before long—I grew to be ry fond of him, and so did Mary— ry fond of him indeed.

He liked us, too, very much, though could never be sure which he liked better. He seemed very happy hen Mary and he had to lag behind mend a puncture in her back tire; t then he enjoyed himself immensely hen he and I lost Mary for quite a ng time, in the labyrinth of lanes ound Langham.

One afternoon, when we were resting on the bridge where he had first met us, he astonished us by suddenly remarking:

"I've a great secret to tell you girls. I'm going to be married!"

We were surprised, I can tell you, and very much fluttered, too, for really we both love—were very—liked him, ever so much, and we had had no idea that there had been anybody—er—else.

"Yes," he repeated, "I'm going to get married. And," he continued impressively, "I mean to make the bridesmaid a present of the very best bicycle that money can buy."

I wanted a new machine terribly, and so did Mary for the matter of that—but I always more impulsive than she, and I blurted out:

"Oh, that will be lovely."

"You really think so?" he asked, turning toward me, with rather, a queer look on his face, as he repeated, "You really think so?"

"hy, yes," I replied with conviction, and then, as the possible significance of his question occurred to me, added, rather lamely. "Of course—er—a capital present."

He rode home that evening with Mary, and I found it hard for me to see the road sometimes for the tears that would come into my eyes, though I was truly glad for Mary's happiness and pride when she showed me the engagement ring before we went to bed that night. Diamond and sapphires.

THE WIFE BULLY.

The Question of How She Should Be Suppressed from a Woman's Viewpoint.

[Manchester (Eng.) Chronicle:] Only one thing is almost as bad as a bullied wife—and that's a bullied husband!

What miserable derelicts they are! And, generally speaking, it's the wives who take all and give nothing, who "boss the show" to such a specially inhuman extent.

Observe a woman with a little money of her own and you'll find her deferring with courteously affectionate politeness, to her husband on most subjects where his opinion isn't of any value.

It is always on her mind that by not taking advantage of nature's fundamental law—viz., that the man be responsible for his wife's food, roof, clothes, and every etcetera—she is conferring a species of benefit upon the individual she has married; and directly a decently-bred person feels that a benefit is being conferred, the delightful pastime of bullying becomes impossible.

To confer favors is to close our lips. But the woman who confers nothing but herself, her dressmaker's bills, and her empty pockets has no feelings of delicacy to restrain her from bullying the patient victim from whose pocket all blessings flow, and for that reason it is that bullying wives are particularly to be found among the middle and lower middle classes.

Wives placed on a little higher social scale (or professional money-earning women) are more or less independent, therefore they don't feel it necessary to assert themselves every five minutes in order to emphasize the triumph of a subjected husband.

In fact, I know a couple at this moment whose case is representative—except that in this instance the "Mrs." has all the money, and the "Mr." none, barring what he earns by the practice which she bought him.

But is he bullied just because he would be powerless to resent it if he were? Not a bit of it! In fact, quite the contrary. His wife makes a point of appealing to him on every subject; and to one who knows, there is something pathetic in hearing her make such remarks as: "I want to coax Harry to take me to Monte in the spring," or, "I'm teasing Harry to stand me new sables," or, "I want another motor, but Harry says he can't run to it"—when cheques to settle these luxuries would be drawn from her bank, or from the capital she has put into his!

But to take a reverse example, I must quote the case of another pair.

The man is a big, good fellow; he comes of a noble foreign family, and in order to wed the penniless daughter of an English peer gives up home, friends, country, and brilliant prospects.

But instead of appreciating all these sacrifices which have been made for love's sweet sake, this little minx (who never paid more than 1s. 11d. for gloves in her maiden days) nags and bullies, dictates, and commands till her husband positively refrains from even expressing an opinion regarding the weather.

One evening when we went over to their house for a quiet game of cards, the following sentences formed a sort of undercurrent running through her other remarks.

"Pip"—she calls him "Pip," which is short for some name of many syllables—"do pull the screen across the door, I'm so cold. I've told you to always draw it, and you always forget! . . . Pip, do turn down the gas stove; the room's getting insufferably hot! I never knew such a man for roasting people out! . . . Go up and get my shawl, please. No, no not the grey one—you know I never wear that—the pink one! No, I can't say where it is; somewhere upstairs, I suppose. . . . Do pass Mrs. Wentworth-James the chocolates. You are the very worst and most inattentive host I ever saw! . . . Oh, don't drop matches on the carpet! . . . Where's the programme of last night's concert? You don't know? My dear Pip, do you ever know anything you're wanted to know?" and so on. "Well if you want to go out"—this when the poor, cowed giant suggested coming part of the way home with us—"you mustn't go farther than the end of the road! I want you in to put up the cards—you know the girls have gone to bed! Mind, I shall expect you back in four minutes!"

And surely enough when we got to the end of the road Pip, who had so desperately enjoyed being able to make a few uninterrupted remarks, came to a halt.

"Oh, come a little farther," I said, maliciously longing to thwart the curly-haired bully at home.

"No, no, no; I—I must get back—I must!" he cried in a panic of terror—and though I persuaded quite vehemently, the fear of wife overcame the politeness to guest.

Like a shot he bolted, and through the stillness of the night we could hear his big feet running hard, so that the prescribed four minutes should not be overlapped!

And this instance is only one of many.

The wmorld is full of usually portionless wives who won't allow their husbands liberty, individuality, music halls, sport, pipes, male pals or any of those little luxuries which only serve to make a man more than ever appreciate the joys of home life with the "one little girl in the world."

But the wife-bullying goes on, and on, and on, till contemptuous friends fall away, invitations cease to arrive, servants leave before "their month is up," and the young man becomes old before he has any right to be middle aged!

Oh, husbands of England, I call upon you to rise up and make a stand against this course of feminine despotism. Don't let it continue another day. Gently and firmly inform madame that you have had enough, and that until the system entirely ceases dress money will be conspicuous by its lessened proportions, guests will not be entertained, nor will invitations be accepted, because you don't intend to be made a fool of any longer.

Begin this at once—tomorrow morning (Sunday is a bad day to commence,) and you'll find by Saturday there is a change in the marital atmosphere. The wife-bully must be squashed. She is a curse to society, and the spoiler of good men's lives. She detracts from the public value of her personal possession (the husband,) and she fully evidences her own ill-breeding. Down with her.

Let her retain the sovereignty of womanhood, which demands nothing and gets all; but don't let her bully any more.

NEW YORK'S MILLINERY.

Some New Beauties Which Are a Great Delight to the Feminine World.

[Millinery Trade Review:] Spring millinery is here in all its glory, bringing in its train such a store of beauty and novelty as must surely delight the feminine world in general. Milliners are breathing a sigh of relief as the absence of the much-bent eccentricities of the past few seasons is noticed. The saleswomen will have an easier time this spring, and the world of women will find itself in more becoming but none the less modish headgear.

The mushroom brim is notably prevalent among the new models, and brims in general have a tendency to droop. Although there is no lack of the lifted brim, it is never the directly upstanding sort, and most usually it droops again after being lifted.

Crowns are in every variety. The draped sorts and the low, broad styles in various unusual shapes are most in evidence. Draped stray crowns are much used, the braid being sewn in a sort of tam or hood shape and then draped, usually being caught in some fashion against the crown. The straight Gainsborough crown is little used in the early models, nor does the dome crown appear in any appreciable number, though the rounded edge is shown on many crowns.

The crown is not an absolute necessity, however, and many models show the plateau used with no pretence of a crown. Others show flower crowns, either closely set in a regular crown shape, or simply a mass of naturally arranged flowers.

There is a wealth of novelty straws this season in addition to the well-known favorites so long in use. Leghorn is evidently to be even more popular than last year; Panama is much shown in the more expensive hats; Milan, hemp and Jap braids are in good standing; hair braid, the most essentially summery of them all, is again to the front and pyroxylin is likewise well favored. The Italian tape braid is shown in exquisite quality; in addition there are any number of fancy straws, whose treatment, rather than origin are of importance.

Silk and satin are used in combination with straw in some very modish creations, and though somewhat heavy in effect, are still very smart. However, while summery fabrics are readily accepted for winter wear, the reversal of the order is not so pleasing, except in the matter of plumes and wings, which are now equally the property of summer and winter season.

Ribbons are still used in quantities, though not quite so lavishly as last spring, but the loads of flowers and plumes could scarcely be weightier. The ribbons used are chiefly of the faille and messaline variety, although the novelty printed sorts are likewise used. Velvet ribbons are especially well favored and are much used for streamers.

Flowers never offered a more attractive medium of trimming. Not only roses, which are in every size and color, and the violets, always popular, but almost every flower that suggests itself to mind is in the milliner's assortment. Morning glories in muslin or in velvet are simply exquisite; wistaria in its delicate colorings makes a beautiful addition; pansies are in all the richness and beauty that is so peculiarly their own; forget-me-nots, lilacs, field flowers in all their multitudinous variety, and beside these are the wonderful grapes in every color, cherries and grasses.

Plumes were never more extensively used, and not only are the usual plumes and tips in order, but the fancy-made ostrich in boa and willow ends, and also odd little ruchings are in endless variety. Wings are possessed of all the beauty of the natural sort, but are in such wonderful suppleness, shapes and sizes, that none could suppose them anything but "made," even though they are so skillfully put together that the feat seems impossible of accomplishment.

The novelties in the feather line are in almost endless succession. Argus quills lined with marabout, curiously "burned out;" coque feathers, that have a wonderful fragility and daintiness of appearance, though quite durable; coque and marabout combinations in many sorts, birds both natural and made, and quills, are in every conceivable style.

Ornaments take a conspicuous place this season, variously shaped buckles in every sort, from the simple cut steel to those which are really triumphs of the jewelers' art, being most conspicuous. The large novelty pins are much used and they likewise come in many different materials and designs.

Perhaps the most predominant feature in the spring's showing is the drooping effect in which the trimming is arranged in the back. It is not at all uncommon for the mass of flowers, or feathers to reach nearly or quite to the shoulders, and long streamers of ribbons are much used.

Scarfs and long veils are also notably prominent, and are very dressy and becoming. Ribbon and chiffon frequently are joined in a scarf, while the long chiffon or brussels lace veils form a very effective garniture. Chantilly lace combines very prettily with chiffon and occasionally spangled veils are seen. Plaited chiffon or ribbon frequently forms the border, a border of some sort being used on almost all of these draperies, which usually shroud the crown and then fall gracefully from the back of the hat.

She Always Had Good Servants.

I know a very sweet, beautiful old lady, who says she has always had good servants, and she does not understand all this talk about their deterioration. Although she keeps half a dozen, there are seldom any changes. She never takes any great pains to look up their references, yet she usually gets good, honest people and keeps them.

People who are so fortunate as to have the friendship of this charming woman do not wonder that she always has good servants. She is so good to them, so kind and considerate, that they seldom want to leave her. They like the sunshine, and they thrive in her sunny nature. When they are sick, she is always looking after their comfort. They all know that she takes a real, motherly interest in their welfare, aside from the mere work she can get out of them. She enters into their personal lives, shares their sorrows and their joys.

Many a capable, well-meaning servant has never been able to make a success, because employed by an incapable housewife, who, without tact or sense, has vitiated her efforts. Not every well-intentioned person has strength of mind and will power enough to dominate an unfortunate environment. Many get discouraged and tired of trying to do well, and succumb to indifference.

I believe the great servant question can only be solved through the kindness of employers. I believe absolute unselfishness will settle everything. All strikes, all dissensions and differences will be settled by the application of the Golden Rule.—[O. S. Marden in Success Magazine.

FORECAST OF FASHIONS.

An Outline of Some Interesting Novelties of the Coming Season.

The following items, giving an idea of some of the interesting novelties of the season, are gleaned from Dress:

EMBROIDERED PARASOLS—Completing the list of accessories to the toilette, for matron and maid alike, parasols embroidered, and made of the same material to match the frock, are to be the fad of the season. Natural color floral designs will appear in embroidery upon some of the thin white linen slips, for it is in this adjustable manner that the various covers will be used—the season's trend being that no note of discord may be even suggested in the color scheme means much this year, embracing the smallest details of the attire.

FOOTWEAR—A complete departure from previous styles of colored colonial ties are those of bronze or patent leather with a strap buckling across the base of the tongue. These are to be worn with the pale tinted summer gowns, as the white canvas or the colored suede have become too popular. Tan leather will be more worn than for years for the afternoon; in fact, they are the whim of the season. Bronze or black silk stockings are worn in the latest hosiery, clocked in groups, between embroidered stripes of same convention.

BOUDOIR DRESSING—A fad has arrived and seized upon the feminine fancy, which is to have negligées, tea-gowns, the coffee matinées and accompanying petticoats, the same tint as the boudoir color scheme. For instance, should pink roses be the wall paper design, then all these dainty silk or mull garments are of the same rosy hue, and so on through the whole gamut of floral colors that can be matched in textiles.

PETTICOATS—Parisiennes are favoring the trig little hand-embroidered white petticoats to wear with walking costumes, and with the advent of spring these very cleanly garments will entirely supplant those of silk. For street wear, a firm cambric is used, with flounces and underruffle embroidered in a fancy scalloped edge, a few simple sprays above. For the lingeries frocks, the petticoats are the most wonderful creations of lace and fine hand work.

FICHUS—Fichus are newer than berthas both for débutante and matron, and with the cape yokes and cape sleeves will dominate the styles for frocks of light materials for summer wear, being either of lace or elaborately trimmed with lace. An early importation of very sheer hand-embroidered fichus, show them almost in cape depth with long stole ends to be knotted at the corsage. As yet they are only to be had in whrite.

NEW TABLE APPOINTMENTS—A gorgeous silver centerpiece for formal entertainments comes with a raised plateau, in an irregular oval shape, the border showing a wonderfully executed hand-wrought design. This border touches the table at various points, and the finish is that known as French gray. The deep fruit dish of unusual proportions corresponds to the plateau and is in the same charming irregular oval shape, the design elaborated to cover the much larger surface, but not losing its graceful lines. Four two-branch candelabra can be fixed to the bowl, the sockets concealed in the design, so a totally new effect is gained for table decoration when lighted, and the bowl and plateau can also be used separately.

PIERCED SILVER CENTERPIECES—A flat silver mat effect, with the pierced border, showing lovely design of scrolled floral vines, and the middle part etched in an English pattern, is raised slightly above the table level by an under rim. It is to be used in place of a lace centerpiece on a highly-polished tea table.

GIRDLES—In evening gowns it is to be particularly noticed that not only has the very high girdle been dispensed with, but that the bolero effects which were ubiquitous a short time ago, have given away to a draped effect, the fullness caught crosswise in soft little folds that are scarcely more than wrinkles.

BRAIDING ON GOWNS—Both pique and duck are to constitute the smart little coat and skirt suits, suitable for informal occasions, and braiding in fine soutache is the newest ornamentation. An occasional inserting of a heavy lace, such as Irish crochet and crochet lace buttons, contribute towards the general effect.

SUMMER EVENING GOWNS—These summer party dresses are creations of almost ethereal beauty; for them misty laces are combined with lace, net, or some other gossamer-like material, calculated to produce the most diaphanous exterior; and for the younger set, net, trimmed with ruffles of chiffon weight ribbon in somber effect, or else with rows of tiny flowers caught by baby ribbon rosettes at intervals, are particularly fancied.

COLORS COMBINED WITH WHITE—As a boon to the woman to whom white, alone, is not becoming, comes the news that finally hand-tucked bands and medallions of colored batiste are being inserted in the white lingerie frocks between outlining rows and scrolls of lace. Any tint fancy dictates can be used, the more vivid shades but sparingly, of course, but lace must be at either edge or otherwise a harsh line ensues at the joinings, the mesh of the lace necessary to soften the contrast between even a pastel hue and the pure white of the batiste or dotted mull which are the two favorite materials for these gowns.

The Way to a Curry.

As a curry is one of the most delightful of supper possibilities, the following recipe obtained in the Bengal Presidency by Edward Spencer, author of "Cakes and Ale," ought to be accepted as one of the most important additions to the maiden's private cookery book:

"Pound and mix one tablespoonful of coriander seed, one tablespoonful of poppy seed, a salt-spoonful of tumeric, half a salt-spoonful of cumin seed, a pinch of ground cinnamon, a ditto of ground nutmeg, a small lump of ginger, and one salt-spoonful of salt. Mix this with butter, add two sliced onions, and fry till lightly browned. Add the material to be curried, and pour in the milk of a cocoanut. Simmer for twenty minutes, and add some lime juice."—[Bohemian.

Dickey's Plot.

SHOWING THAT ALL'S FAIR IN LOVE AND WAR.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

Dickey Fleming, the everywhere-present, the always-with-something-to-say-for-himself, had raised his tones slightly above the whisper that became a conspirator, because the darkness and the shrubbery concealed him, arch traitor that he was.

"But suppose she doesn't like it?" whispered the other figure.

"Oh, she'll be sure to—likes him amazingly—and he's been hard hit from the first day. It would be a match, anyhow, sooner or later. I'm just going to help it on a bit. When a man gets to be 30 he's too delicate about his love-making to suit me."

"But suppose she should be angry?" insisted the other voice again. "I am sure it would make me perfectly furious if I were in her place, and if I were ever to find it out."

"She'll never know," said Dickey, readily. "He'd just go to her, you know, saying that I sent him to plead my cause—and the old chap can talk pretty well when he gets strung out. Then Jeanie'll give him a hint—'Why don't you speak for yourself, John?'—you know, and the next thing they'll come out, arm in arm and smiling like one o'clock, and Rembert will break the horrible news to me that he has unintentionally supplanted me in the affections of my beloved. Of course, it's my cue to look wretched for a day or two, but I'll gradually recover, and begin to look up and take notice when you're around——"

Fan broke into a hysterical giggle, crying: "Oh, Dickey, you are so original! I always said you were intended for a comedian."

Dickey struck a dramatic attitude, right foot advanced, hand on heart, after which they went in, laughing.

Miss Garner, the queen of the house party, was very gay that evening, and several of the disaffected, who had inquired why she should have the distinction of sovereignty in anybody's house party, were beginning to see why. True, she was 24, but here eyes were really remarkable when she was animated. True, she was not wealthy, was little more than dependent, and decidedly the poorest of Mrs. Arnaud's guests, but her voice in speaking was enchanting, and when she sang every one remained in the room. True, her mouth was large, but then her teeth!

In short, that evening Miss Garner was amusing and entertaining as many of the house party as could get near enough, when she chanced to glance up and saw Dickey Fleming leaning against the wall with his arms folded, gazing at her with hungry eyes. The moment his eyes met hers Dickey sighed, and dropped his gaze to the floor with such a look of agony that the unconscious Miss Garner turned to her hostess, and said, hurriedly: "Upon my word, Mrs. Arnaud, I am afraid something serious is the matter with Dickey Fleming."

Dickey had no trouble in making his meaning clear to Mr. Rembert, whom he sought out early the next morning. The man's dark face colored, and the hand that held a book clasped it until the fingers whitened under the pressure. That he was keeping a strong hold on himself was evident, for a mere casual onlooker might almost have been deceived into thinking him very composed.

"And you think you love this young lady?" he asked. He had swung around in the revolving chair so that his face was toward the window, and Dickey was left to solace himself with a view of one ear and the back of a well-formed head.

"Oh, sure!" said Dickey, with ready enthusiasm.

"Then why don't you tell her this yourself?" asked the elder man, coldly.

"Oh, I've tried over and over!" said Dickely, rattling a ruler on the table. "When it comes to the point I'm struck dumb, you know—couldn't say a word to save me. Besides, I know she'll listen to you—the women all do. And say, anything you can throw in, you know, about my good qualities——"

The other whirled suddenly around in the revolving chair, and looked Dickey in the face. "By the way," he said, dryly, "what are your good qualities?"

Dickey's furtive grin took on an embarrassed look. "Well, you know, I wouldn't like to speak about that," he said, with becoming modesty. "You just think it over—anything right gorgeous you can throw in I'll take it as a favor. Just make it a 'beaut,' will you, and I'll try to live up to it. Ta-ta, now; I leave you to think up your little 'spiel.'" And Dickey went out, happily unconscious of the look that followed him.

Mr. Rembert was not visible to those who were wondering and complaining at his absence until several hours had passed, and scarcely had he made his appearance when it was known that he and Miss Garner had walked away down toward the bank of the pretty lake that shone silver-smooth in the valley, girt about with a fringe of beeches. Whereupon Dickey hugged himself with grinning delight, and Fan confided to a few choice spirits that Dickey had planned the greatest scheme, the outcome of which was to be that Miss Jeanie Garner would come back from the walk engaged to Mr. Rembert. The entire house fluttered with the news.

When they came strolling back, nobody did anything, because no one was really certain. True, he was very pale, but he was talking quietly, and was carrying her parasol; and as for her, the broad-brimmed hat shaded her face and she had slipped through the hall and away before any one could see her. Dickey's face, red and smiling, appeared for a moment at the front parlor door, and Rembert followed him in, too intent on the business he had in hand to heed a subtle flutter of skirts beyond the portieres.

"Well?" said Dickey. He concealed a grin behind his hand, and tried to look modestly expectant.

"Well," repeated Mr. Rembert, brusquely. "I have accomplished the very unpleasant office you asked me to undertake for you. And the young lady assures me——" He paused, and Dickey had a brief temptation to execute a jig or any other rapid step which would relieve his feelings. "She assures me," continued Mr. Rembert, deliberately, "that she feels honored by your love, and that she accepts your offer."

Dickey's jaw dropped and he groped aimlessly with one hand. When he recovered, Mr. Rembert had gone, and there was an echo in the back parlor as though a door had just slammed. He was alone in a huge, blank world which was all one vast mistake. When he recovered again, Miss Garner was sweeping gracefully down upon him. She held out both hands, and smiled as she came.

"You dear old Dickey," she cried, "why didn't you tell me long ago? And why didn't you tell me yourself, you silly boy?"

She was close to him—her hair touched his cheek as she bent toward him. Dickey was shaking as with a violent ague.

"You are trembling with the suspense, you poor fellow!" She said, caressing his hand. "Come, let's tell the others—of course I should want everyone to know. And we'll not have a long engagement, dearest, will we?"

She opened the door, and Dickey was led forth as a lamb to the slaughter. It seemed to him that not a member of Mrs. Arnaud's house party was more than fifteen feet from the door. Everywhere that he turned were eyes—amazed eyes, amused eyes. And after the congratulations, which were profuse beyond necessity, Homeric laughter went trailing off down the corridors and into the grounds and about the place until the very lake echoed with it. Fannie Deering turned her back upon him when he tried to speak to her, and had gone silently upstairs.

Miss Garner was rioting in the pleasure of her new possession. She walked with him in the avenue; she sat with him on the lawn to watch the sunset; she kept him by her all the evening in the parlors.

When Dickey escaped to his own room at last, and had put bolt and bar between himself and a too-hilarious world, he shed tears of bitter repentance. It did not occur to him that there was anything to do but stand by the bargain he had made. The queen of the house party was his—alas, his fatal attractiveness had been his ruin, for he had been for two long weeks busily constructing a future for himself, through every nook and corner of which moved a little girl called Fan.

And Fan was an heiress. It was so easy to love Fan. And she would never forgive him. She would not even wait for him until death or some unforeseen calamity should set him free. Perhaps she would even marry the hated Rembert, the too-eloquent Rembert, who had had a hand in his undoing.

For some weary days thereafter Dickey was led about and shown off by his finacée, manfully trying to look as little miserable as possible, even in a dim way to make love. That he did it badly he knew, and it did not help him in the least to see her pause and look at him with interest at such times. It was a telegram that borke the spell and proved the signal for the breaking up of the house party. Miss Garner read it at the breakfast table, and twisted the yellow slip thoughtfully.

"Too bad," she said, with regret, "I suppose I must go. It's my lawyer, you know. How tiresome. Dickey, will you drive me down to catch the 12:30 train?"

There were exclamations of sorrow on all sides, and one cried out "Oh, well, if you are going, I think I shall leave in the morning."

In a few moments Mrs. Arnald knew her house party would be flitting before another day has closed, but she smiled. It had been a great success.

Dickey's nerves thrilled a little as he gathered up the reins. They were all crowded around her and could not let her go. How popular she was, after all—and how stunning. At least it was something that this splendid creature was going to be his wife, and she had been unable to resist him. Dickey sat up a little straighter and gave the bay thoroughbreds a flick that they instantly resented by nearly pulling his arms from the sockets. They were less than half a mile from the station before he had them under control again. Then he glanced sideways at the face under the slanting hat brim. It was all over with Fan, and he might as well make the best of it. He put his arm around her.

"I wouuldn't do that, Dickey, dear, if I were you," she said, sweetly, restoring the arm with decision to its proper place.

"I'd like to know why?" said Dickey, much injured. "What's the use of being so stand-offish with a fellow when we're engaged?"

"Because we're not engaged, Dickey," she said, with a charming smile. "Becauts it's all off and you are going back to that little Deering girl and be a good boy all the rest of your natural life. There is the station, Dickey—and drive carefully now."

Dickey was still gasping when she fluttered up the platform beside him. Not engaged?"

"But what do you mean?" he cried. "Aren't we engaged?"

"No, we're not engaged, my son," she said, with a little motherly air. "You know you talk so loud when you are plotting, Dickey—and the truth is, I was in the summer house that night you made it up."

Dickey shrunk visibly. His smart outing suit became suddenly a misfit. He pressed his hand to his forehead. "But Rembert," he groaned. "Good heaven's he'll never get over it."

Miss Garner laughed. "He's going up on the same train with me. It's four hours from here home, and if I can't manage a little thing like that in four hours I don't deserve to succeed."

She had gone into the car, and was leaning from a window "Oh, Dickey," she called, sweetly, "I forgot to tell you that Mr. Rembert was in the summer house, too."

And Dickey leaned against the red wall of an unsympathetic railroad station and wept.

Girl Steeplejack.

A girl 17 years of age has accomplished the extraordinary feat of ascending a church spire 260 feet high in the teeth of a gale of wind.

W. Larkins, the steeplejack of Bow, had undertaken to ascend the spire of All Saints', Hereford, the highest in the West of England, on Wednesday. Miss Elsie Heins of West Dene, Whitecross-road, Hereford, the daughter of one of the church wardens, volunteered to accompany him.

The ascent was made by means of a steeplejack's cradle. In spite of the force of the wind and of the swaying of the cradle, the girl, Mr. Larkins says, was remarkably cool all through the perilous ascent and descent. Needless to say, the spire had never been ascended before by any except male climbers.

Wednesday was market-day, and a great crowd watched in thrilling suspense the ascent of the swaying cradle. Traffic was entirely blocked by the crowd, every member of which stood stockstill until the girl had gained the summit, descended again, and reached the ground safe and unharmed.—[London Mail.

FASHION NOTES.

Low shoes in brown leather with white duck tops and white ribbon ties promise to be popular.

Turndown linen collars and cuffs with very narrow fluted frills in white or color finishing the edges are popular.

Embroidery insertions and bands, exquisitely embroidered by hand, may be bought by the yard; and often motifs to match are provided.

Belts of heavy satin finished elastic, with plain gold buckles are made in almost all of the modish hues and are especially good in the dark blues—colors never attractive in leather.

Cuff and collar sets of natural hued linen, hand embroidered in brown, are among the dress accessories which may be bought ready for wear and will be a very attractive finish for coats of brown or natural tone linen.

Beautiful new mohairs in browns, greens or grays mixed with white, are shown in expensive qualities of remarkable softness and will make most desirable costumes for traveling and other hard ware.

Chiffon taffeta in fine black stripes on a white ground is woven with a five-inch border of exquisite Persian design and colorings on each edge, the border being separated from the body of the silk by a heavy line of black satin.

GENTLEMEN; If you will send us, on or before March 1st, a good, strong article endorsing the Murray system, we shall be pleased to publish the same (free of charge) as an editorial, as we are convinced that you have a really meritorious invention, and we are willing to endorse it in the very strongest possible manner.

You are under no obligation whatever to purchase any copies of the paper containing the article, as we do not sell our columns either for the purpose of advertising or for the sale of papers, but when we hear of a good invention or device that will be useful and beneficial to shipping or marine interests we make it a point to offer the free use of our reading columns for such purpose, but upon no consideration do we publish articles for pay. Yours very truly,

FROM LOS ANGELES SUNDAY TIMES, SUNDAY, AUGUST 5, 1906.

SOMETHING ENTIRELY NEW IN PLANS FOR COAST DEFENSE.

"TO LOS ANGELES belongs the credit of an invention which, in the opinion of leading engineers experienced in harbor construction work completely solves the problem of providing harbors of refuge, railway terminal points, lighthouses, etc., at places that now cannot be utilized for such purposes. Military and naval men who have visited Los Angeles and inspected the Murray inventions have declared that the system renders attack from the sea by fleets impossible. When these steady, floating fortresses come into general use, once more the defense will have gained superiority over the attack. The multiplication of warships will be unnecessary, and the enormous annual charges of maintaining a big fleet thereby reduced. All these considerations just further serve to show how far-reaching and widely ramifying are the results likely to flow from this important invention.

The invention is based upon two fundamental laws of nature, long since known, but now for the first time applied to practical purpose for solving the difficulty of providing steady floating marine structures. The first law is that the depth to which wave action descends is comparatively shallow; at most it does not reach below fifteen feet even in the severe storms, while five or six feet is the limit of the disturbance in ordinary heavy weather. In other words, the tossing and heaving of the billows is only on the surface of the ocean; at a few feet below the surface the waters are motionless. Currents may be flowing through this body of water, just like rivers. But these in no way affect the question directly involved, which is that when sufficient depth is attained the factor of wave disturbance is entirely eliminated.

The second law is that with increasing depth the water increases in density; that is to say, its weight, and consequently its grip on any submerged body, becomes steadily greater and greater, until at fifty or sixty feet the pressure is enormous. It is for this reason that submarine boats, divers' helmets and other things that are intended to be sent down to considerable depths have to be constructed of great strength, so as not to collapse under the immense weight of the superimposed waters."

Literal translation from La Revue, 1st January, 1907. (12 Avenue De L'Opera, Paris.)

SCIENCE AND INVENTIONS.

FLOATING STRUCTURES.

"To construct floating lighthouses, floating forts, breakwaters in the open sea, without solid foundations, such is the problem which a California engineer of Los Angeles, William Murray, seems to have solved. His constructions are intended to resist all the perturbations which are produced on the surface of the ocean. It might seem at first sight that not only are these results impossible to attain, but that they are in contradiction to what has been admitted up to the present in oceanography. However, Mr. Murray has triumphed over the difficulties simply by submerging his floating structures to a depth where the waters are absolutely stable and are not subjected to any action by the oscillation of the ocean surface. It is sufficient to understand the efficacy of the operation by recalling that the action of the billows on the superstructure is annulled by the resistance of the deeply submerged portion of the floating structure. The deeper this submersion, the greater the resistance, for the increase of depth itself increases the weight of the water, with the result that the lower structure suspended in this medium becomes more and more immobile. This theory is supported by numerous demonstrations. Mr. Murray has very simply made the application of it. His invention has very great importance, as well for maritime commerce as for the defense of ports and seacoasts. There are few harbors where it is possible to execute all the desirable works, the waters being too deep to permit the placing of piles, and the cost of such works being too onerous. Thanks to the Murray system, it would be possible to construct floating quays in the open seas, where ships might without inconvenience discharge their cargoes. And these quays rise or fall, according to the tide. Lastly, we would also be able to erect lighthouses in the most dangerous waters, where it has been impossible up to the present to build them, and even we could choose a location far enough away from the shore to protect a ship from the dangers of the coast."

NATIONAL MAGAZINE.

DECEMBER, 1906.

"If the Naval Committee of the Senate and House of Representatives could see and hear the story as I heard it on that hot September morning, there would be less concern in reference to the naval appropriation for battleships, and a keener grasp of the necessity of building up ocean and sea-coast coaling stations, lighthouses and coast defences, and providing for the increase of our merchant marine, thus exploiting the world's commerce and opening up new avenues of trade and new markets, by letting the light of this great invention illumine the highways of the deep seas."—Joe Mitchell Chapple.

THE LITERARY DIGEST.

DECEMBER, 1906.

"Floating Breakwaters are not affected by the motion of the waves. It makes artificial harbors possible where old-style breakwaters are impracticable, and at a fraction of the cost of present harbor works.

It is conceded that shore batteries are now inefficient for the defense of cities and harbors against attack by modern battleships; but the Murray floating fortresses can be placed far enough off-shore—say, three or four miles—to form a perfect screen of defense that no fleet can approach with impunity. These forts will expose only a small target surface above water; and this will not only be proof against the most modern guns, but the sloping face will cause any striking shells to glance off with comparative harmlessness. Within will be mounted the biggest guns, and the annular revolving platform will give these every direction and great rapidity of fire."

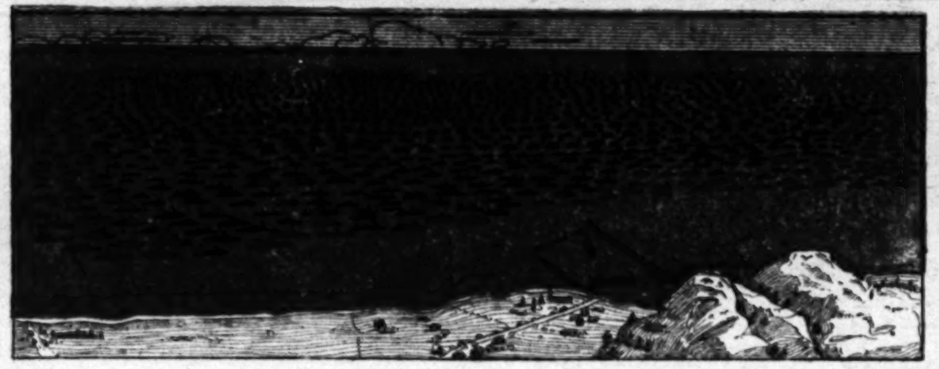
The Murray Marine Lighthouse Will Not Only Save Millions of Property



One year's toll of the sea: 1038 ships wrecked in 1905. Wrecks such as that of the "Sirio" are mere nine days' wonders, although some by reason of their terror appeal more to the popular imagination than others. It is only by such graphic presentation as this that we realize how vast a fleet the ocean engulfs year by year. In 1905, the "Bureau Veritas" tells us, 389 steamships and 649 sailing vessels were lost—a total of 1038.—[From the "Illustrated London News."

A $100,000 PRIZE STORY

... BY ...

Willard Packard Hatch

DURING the week beginning February 17, 1907, there was presented to the Government of the United States as represented by its President, Theodore Roosevelt, and its leading Senators and Congressmen, an invention destined to revolutionize the marine commerce of the world; to overturn all prevalent ideas of coast defence, and to render effective and certain the heretofore useless and unstable system of lighthouses which has rendered so little security to the fog-blinded and storm-driven ships that sought our ports.

The pictures and drawings which give in detail the finished plans of the inventor, make it almost impossible to realize that this gigantic invention is the work of the brain of one man. Yet, as is true of every successful discovery, the basic principle first brought to practical use by the astute mind of William Edward Murray, the Los Angeles inventor, is as simple when explained as are the A B C's of a child's primer to the grasp of a matured intelligence.

Once more the crown of success is bestowed upon work that lasted throughout the years; that proceeded despite the hardship, privation and disbelief; that flourished in an attic on a crust of bread and like Antaeus rose with renewed strength and vigor each time its physical strength seemed cast irretrievably to earth. The humble Scotchman's invention has been granted a patent by the official patent department of seventeen of the civilized nations of the globe. Leaders in the ranks of the civil engineers who have accomplished notable undertakings in engineering construction, have pronounced both the basic idea and its many varied applications to be founded upon certain laws of mechanics and to be absolutely sure of success. They do homage to the brilliant mind that applied a heretofore neglected law of nature to the solving of a world question, and William Edward Murray is raised from the ranks of those who labored in the dust of accomplishment to the platform where sit the selected few who have grasped the results of their completed toil.

In explaining Mr. Murray's invention more in detail, it will be necessary to insert brief excerpts from the leading magazines of the day which will also show the universal appreciation of Mr. Murray's idea, to be followed by a short summary of the uses to which the invention can be put; the world-wide financial importance of such usage and of its paramount importance to the individual investors in the United States.

The American Shipbuilder, that most conservative organ of national marine affairs, writes:

"For centuries the ingenuity of man has been taxed to provide stable foundations for lighthouses in exposed conditions on sea coasts. Millions have been expended and hundreds of lives lost on what have proved failures and where the skill of man has after disheartening and costly experiments triumphed, there was almost always a feeling of insecurity left behind. At this time an entirely new idea has been brought forth which gives promise of one of the grandest triumphs of engineering skill, which is destined to entirely do away with all previous failures and give to the world a new, novel and yet very simple invention, that shall be enduring as metal can make it and make outlying marine structures safe, reliable, and at the same time comparatively inexpensive.

"We refer to the Murray Marine Steady-Floating Steel Structures, the work of W. E. Murray, of Los Angeles, California, which he has patented, and which has the highest endorsement of some of the very best engineering talent of this country, among them James D. Schuyler, Hydraulic Engineer, and Vice-President of the American Society of Civil Engineers.

"He says in a report upon Mr. Murray's patent and models:

" 'The principles involved in securing steadiness of flotation in marine structures to a degree amounting to practical immobility, as they have been developed by Mr. Murray, are of such simplicity as to carry entire conviction of their correctness and the practicability of their application to constructions necessary to commerce. The entire idea of anchoring a buoyant steel structure of large size in deep water, and providing it with a broad flat base and a wide projecting flange, so deeply submerged below the plane of maximum surface disturbance as to be unmoved by wave action, is one not only novel but extremely valuable in its breadth of application. Like very many of the greatest inventions of the age, it is remarkable for its extreme simplicity, and is a striking illustration of the fact that the inventive genius of man is capable of circumventing, if it cannot control, the most powerful forces of nature. To undertake to hold a buoyant structure in deep water, practically immobile, buffeting the waves and tempests of ocean as though it were resting on an island of the exact size of its base, is a bold conception, but the principles on which the idea is based are apparently sound and susceptible to practical demonstration.'

"F. C. Finkle, an eminent consulting engineer, after a careful and critical examination of the Murray system, writes:

" 'The uses for which the Murray system is peculiarly adapted are coast commerce, coast defence, navigation and marine habitations. Under the first caption we may mention breakwaters, wharves, lighthouse stations, docks, bridges, pier foundations, railway terminals in harbors. Under the second caption, floating fortresses, submerged torpedo stations, etc. Under the third, coaling stations, wrecking platforms, machine shops, supply stations, wireless telegraph stations, etc. Fourth, hotels, bath houses, hospitals, sanitariums, prisons, quarantine stations, etc. Mr. Finkle heartily endorses the Murray system.' "

The space is too limited to give excerpts from every magazine that has heartily praised Mr. Murray's invention. It will be enough to say that the National Magazine of December, 1906; La Revue of January 1, 1907; Literary Digest of December, 1906; James Gordon Bennett's Paris Edition of New York Herald of Oct. 17, 1906; San Francisco Chronicle of December 25, 1906; the Los Angeles Times of August 5, 1906, and the Technical Magazine of December 25, 1906, will all be found to contain articles in regard to the Murray Marine Steady Floating Steel Structures Company, and each and every article is ever more enthusiastic than the American Shipbuilder in its approval.

Murray Marine Steady-Floating Steel Structures will make it possible for harbors to be established at any point along the coast where there is sufficient depth, no matter how barren or how unpromising they have been because of lack of natural adaptability for harborage purposes.

When the concept of busy cities humming with industry, in contradistinction to the present state of affairs, is brought home to the mind of the most ignorant reader, the story is told once and for all, and when it is further proven that the great cities thus established in addition to the already grownup marts such as Seattle, San Francisco, San Diego, Baltimore, Boston and New York, can be, and will be forever effectually protected from the onset of an attacking enemy, the argument is driven home and clinched for eternity.

Statistics show that there are in the United States at the present time, 150 patents each of which is paying to its shareholders more than one million dollars annually. Among these are the United States Steel Corporation with its gross yearly earnings of $560,000,000 and its yearly income of $129,000,000, and its record mark for the payment of dividends in one year of $67,000,000.

One hundred dollars invested in Bell Telephone Company stock when it was at the stage at which the Murray Marine Steady-Floating Steel Structures Company stock is now, has received already profits of $200,000 and is worth on the market today a like amount. The total dividends have exceeded $66,000,000 and it is a notable fact that of its 12,500 stockholders over one-third are women.

One thousand dollars invested in the Singer Manufacturing Company stock when that stock came upon the market would be worth over $100,000 today and would have received stock dividends amounting to as high as 200 per cent. a year.

The American Locomotive Company earns $33,000,000 yearly.

The capital stock of the International Harvester Company is worth $130,000,000 today.

One hundred dollars' worth of stock of the Mergenthaler Linotype Company at its inception has received in dividends the enormous sum of $127,000 in seven years.

The Edison Illuminating Company has paid its shareholders 600 per cent. on their original investment.

The sale of machines and supplies of the Remington Typewriter Company has exceeded $100,000.

The Dunlop Tire Company in the short space of two years paid 30 times the original capital in dividends.

One thousand dollars of Western Union Telegraph Company stock, bought when that popular security first came upon the market, has earned 150 times the original investment, or $150,000, in dividends.

The Murray Marine Steady-Floating Steel Structures Company possesses every element necessary for a financial success which will outrun the very best of the inventions previously mentioned.

If any person will bring to our notice an industrial stock which will pay a larger per cent. of profit on the original investment, than $1000 invested in Murray Marine Steady-Floating Steel Structures Company stock at its present price of $5.00 a share, which is equal to half of the par value, we will guarantee to purchase 10,000 shares of such stock for such individual and will, in addition, buy from 10,000 to 100,000 shares of the same stock for ourselves.

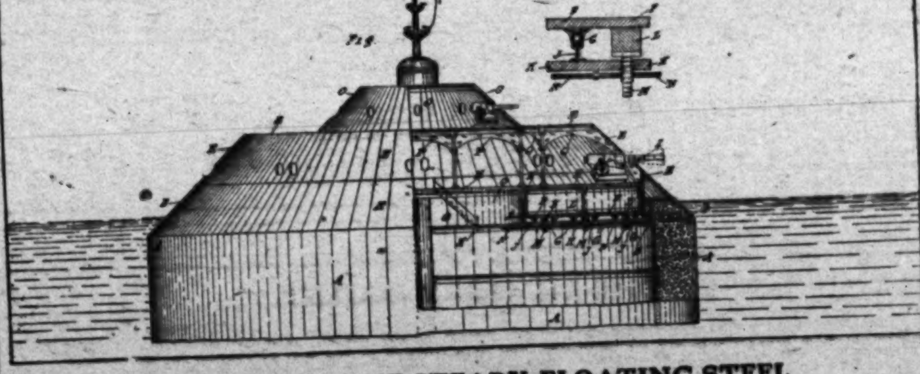
Murray Marine Steady-Floating Steel Structures Company stock will be the most profitable industrial investment of the next twenty-five years. It will outrank its most important predecessor and will outlive the production of any yet undiscovered invention because of the fact that its application is world-wide, its use is of universal necessity and it is based upon one of the earth's most elemental principles.

The great need of the twentieth century is money, and it has become a well understood and thoroughly proven fact that no great fortune was ever completed upon the savings which it is possible to make from a salary; no sum of money lying in a bank and drawing the regular banking rate of interest has ever made a fortune for its conservative owner.

The Murray Marine Steady-Floating Steel Structures invention is to be presented before the Court of St. James, it will be submitted to the inspection of the Mikado of Japan, the Emperor of Germany, President of France and to the Czar of All Russia; and its speedy adoption by the different governments of the world is already an assured fact. It remains to be seen whether or not the old adage that a prophet is without honor in his own country still holds good, or if the intelligence of this most enlightened age has increased sufficiently to grasp in its beginning, and adopt at once, an invention born and reared in its own home.

A hundred dollars invested in Bell Telephone Company stock has received $200,000 of the profits. A thousand dollars invested in the Singer Sewing Machine Company stock is worth $100,000 today. A thousand dollars' worth of Western Union Telegraph Company's stock has earned $150,000 at the present time. We prophesy that $1000 worth of Murray Marine Steady-Floating Steel Structures Company stock will, in a less time, pay more than $200,000 profit to the investor at the present price of $5.00 a share. We consider that there is no security of any class or description, no stock founded upon any invention, business or mine, that offers today one quota of the opportunity for tremendous profits that is offered by the Murray Marine Steady-Floating Steel Structures Company, nor is any stock today upon the market so certain of success, so absolutely hedged against loss of money invested, as is this wonderful security.

We will not say, in the hackneyed phrases of old-time promoters, that on such and such a day and at such and such an hour, stock will rise to such and such a price, but we will most emphatically say that as the money invested in Murray Marine Steady-Floating Steel Structures Company stock builds up the defenses which it is meant to construct, and as the governments of the world provide funds for the employment of this all-important invention, the Murray Marine Steady Floating Steel Structures Company stock will soar upward from its present price until it has reached a point far beyond the grasp of any who might be able to purchase at the initial price of $5.00 a share.



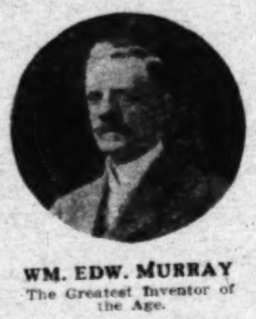
MURRAY MARINE STEADY-FLOATING STEEL FORTRESS

An impregnable coast defense; marvelous rapidity of fire guaranteeing peace to the world.

THE MIGHTIEST INVENTION OF THE AGE

ATTRACTING ATTENTION FROM THE GOVERNMENTS OF THE WORLD

GREAT STEEL STRUCTURES THAT REMAIN MOTIONLESS AND IMMOVABLE IN THE OCEAN WITHOUT TOUCHING BOTTOM



WM. EDW. MURRAY

The Greatest Inventor of the Age.

WAR RENDERED OBSOLETE. HARBORS BUILT ON BARREN SHORES. SHIP SALVAGE SIMPLE

The press and leading magazines of every nation of the world have been filled with accounts of the Murray Marine Steady-Floating Steel Structures. This wonderful invention seems destined to revolutionize several of the greatest industries known to man. The invention bases its usefulness upon the fact that fifteen feet and more under the level of the sea, the water is motionless, although most violent storms are raging on the surface. The great structures are built just the reverse of a ship, with wide flanges projecting on the lower side. By using the Murray patent, nations render sea attack on coast cities a thing of the past. Every railroad must adopt the invention for terminal ports and bridges. A harbor can be built on any shore. Natural harbors can be much improved. Governments must employ the Murray system for lighthouses, breakwaters, coaling depots and floating fortresses, the last of which render the coasts invulnerable.

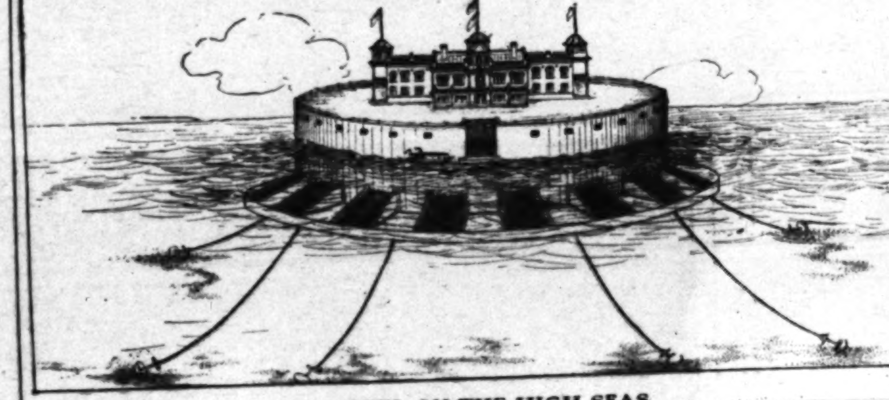
President Examines It

[FROM LOS ANGELES TIMES, FEB. 28, 1907]

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES]

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Edward Mitchell, vice-president of the "Murray Marine" Company, today had an interview with the President who listened to a statement of the principles and various applications of the invention, showed appreciation of its national importance, and promised to give the invention more attention during the more leisurely days that will follow in closing Congress. He also said that the question would be considered by naval and other departments interested.

Mitchell has already interviewed Taft, Secretary of War; Metcalf, Secretary of the Navy; Gen. McKenzie, chief of Military engineers; Col. Hogdes of the Engineer Corps; Admiral Mason, chief of Ordinance Department; H. H. Rousseau, chief of Bureau of Yards and Docks; Naval Constructor Zahm, Admiral Reiter, chairman of Lighthouse Board; Commander Caperton, lighthouse inspector, and other leading officials in administrative departments that deal with marine affairs.



HOTEL ON THE HIGH SEAS

The Murray Marine offers a vast variety of uses—hotels, hospitals, etc., etc., with immense money-making possibilities.

WHAT VARIOUS NOTED ENGINEERS SAY OF THIS MARVELOUS INVENTION

MUSIC AND THE STAGE.

The notable event of the week has been the remarkable jointure of diverse forces in order that the grand opera may have a fit place in which to present masterpieces to the local public.

Unquestionably, this is the first time such a thing has ever happened in this city—and it will probably be many a long day before it happens again.

As recounted in The Times, managers Berry, Behymer, Ferris and Russell have made splendid sacrifices in order that a union might come about.

Mr. Ferris took his fine company out for ten days, accepting actually $23 less than his mere salary list. Mr. Behymer gave up the management. Mr. Berry assumed obligations that leave him but little margin for profit, and Mr. Russell, like Mr. Ferris, abandoned hope of large gains for a guarantee of current expenses.

Now that the thing is done, and the opera ensconced for its final week in the splendid building which is a true home for great music, the final burden of responsibility rests with the public.

It is to be hoped, indeed, that the public will support this venture. The Times has no interest in making money for any of these people, but observers of conditions realize keenly that the success or failure of the engagement means much for the future of the best music in Southern California for several years to come. If it is successful, Mr. Russell promises to return with his splendid company next year, giving us two weeks at least—possibly three or four. If it is not successful, he will not come, and the only possibility of good opera will then remain with one of those occasional, contemptuous visitations of the Metropolitan Company of New York, which, like the old-fashioned circus, comes in with a sneer, and holds up prices to the very top notch.

Then, too, failure at the Auditorium, after this colossal effort to please theater-goers, would have a mighty disheartening effect upon local managers, and the proposer of future grand opera would probably receive a swift metaphorical kick for his pains.

The caliber of Mr. Russell's aggregation has already been proven. It may be said that Los Angeles is now enjoying grand opera upon a musical and dramatic scale which is equaled only in New York City.

Music lovers are surely indebted to Messrs. Ferris and Behymer for their courtesy and consideration. Will the debt be forgotten?

John Considine, the new backer of the company, also deserves a high degree of commendation, for, although he has no local interest in direct attachment, he worked as arbitrator on the matter for many hours, leaving the Auditorium offices only when his name was finally attached to the papers of agreement.

THE WEEK'S BILL.

There will be no performance of the company at the Auditorium today. Tomorrow night "Il Trovatore" will be heard, with Mme. Nordica and Mme. Conti-Borlinetto and Mm. Alemanni, Galperni and Perini. Tuesday night, "Lucia," with Miss Nielsen and Mm. Constantino and Fornari; Wednesday matinée, "Carmen," with Mlle. Dereyne and Mlle. Tarquini and Mm. Martin and Segurola; Wednesday night, "Faust," with Mme. Nordica, Mme. Monti-Baldini and Mm. Alemanni, Galperni and Segurola; Thursday, "La Boheme;" Friday night, "Pagliacci" and "Cavalleria," with Mm. Martin, Alemanni, Galperni and Mlles. Tarquini, Dereyne and Colombati; Saturday afternoon, "Don Pasquale," with Miss Nielsen, and as a finale, a repetition of "Gioconda" on Saturday evening.

In dramatic circles, the novelty of the week will be furnished by George Barnum's testimonial performance, to be given at the Belasco Theater on Tuesday afternoon.

As diverse a line of dramatic and musical attractions as has ever been seen in this city will be given those who attend. To illustrate: Mr. Barnum himself will appear in a vaudeville sketch by George Ade, newly written, and directed by the humorist himself; Ferullo will bring his band of fifty men for three numbers; Alice Nielsen will sing some English songs, Henry Russell accompanying her at the piano.

Mr. Barnum is in no position to ask alms of the public, as far as financial stress is concerned, for he can command any reasonable salary he might name to the dictators of the stage world. But he is going away, perhaps never to be seen in stock work here again, and his friends and admirers wish to express their appreciation of his hard work during the two years he has been here, and his positive genius for stage direction.

It may be said safely that no stock productions ever given in this city have approached so near perfection of technical detail as those Mr. Barnum has made us.

In addition he has given us personal histrionic characterizations of the rarest value. He has been truly the "first actor" of Los Angeles. Many of his works have been so excellent that they have been unappreciated—notably his terribly lifelike portraiture in that grim and unpleasant play, "Business is Business."

Mr. Barnum's greatest production, "The Admirable Crichton," was a financial failure. It was undoubtedly the finest thing of its sort ever seen in Los Angeles. There's the tragedy of art.

The fifth concert of the Symphony Orchestra's season will take place on Friday afternoon at the Mason Operahouse. The opening number will be Schubert's "Manfred" overtures, and the symphony is Sinding's, in D.

One of the dainty bits of ensemble work will be the Glasounow serenade.

Last season Director Hamilton received many requests for Lalo's "Symphony Espagnol," violin solo, and, remembering the wishes of the symphony admirers he has selected as his soloist Herr Arnold Krause, who will render this delightful composition with orchestral accompaniment.

After the opera at the Palm Garden comes Ferullo. The young Italian director is making preparations to take up his series of concerts again, and will present a series of fine classical programmes.

Much vain talk was indulged in about his return to Venice. Manager Limouze says that he has no intention of relinquishing his scheme here, and Ferullo avows his wish to stay in Los Angeles.

Admirers of Vessella, at Long Beach, will be glad to hear that the municipality has just signed a contract with him for another year at the Auditorium there.

Vessella has worked tremendously to build up his band, and to establish it on a plane of combined artistic and material success, and so deserves such encouragement.

THE DRAMATIC WEEK.

The newest offering in the dramatic field here will be "Zira," Margaret Anglin's success of last year, which is to be staged at the Belasco Theater tomorrow night.

Lillian Albertson will appear in the Anglin role. The play is located in South Africa during the Boer war, and in London, immediately following the war. Hester Trent, the heroine, is a social outcast who seeks redemption by acting as a nurse in the British forces. Ruth Wilding, a young woman who is on her way to visit relatives in London, is killed, and Hester seizes her passport, papers and name. In London she wins the affection of the relative with whom she stays, and in the midst of her success the supposedly dead Ruth returns, having recovered. The big scene between the genuine Ruth and the impostor is one of the strongest situations that has come to the American stage for many years.

Eleanor Carey, a new member of the company, will make her first appearance here tomorrow night.

"Hearts Courageous" will be the offering of the Burbank Theater company for the week commencing this afternoon. This will be the introduction of the play to stock work, and a big production is promised.

Miss Van Buren will have the principal part. The story concerns the love of Anne Tillotson for a young French Marquis who has been entrusted with important documents pledging American patriots the support of France in the struggle with England. How she aids her lover in his enterprice and the stirring incidents that ensue enlist deep attention.

"Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," who was with us last year, will return tomorrow night, for a week at the Mason Operahouse.

Madge Carr Cooke still impersonates Mrs. Wiggs, and Edith Taliaferro is still lending her undeniable talents to the depiction of Lovey Mary.

Sullivan and Considine, who have leased the People's Theater, on Main street, announce that it will be opened as a vaudeville house next Tuesday evening.

The new proprietors are remodeling the interior in a thorough manner. The management has been given to Al G. Flournoy.

Matinées will be daily, while the evening performances will be from 8 to 11 p.m.

Lee Harrison, who heads the Orpheum programme for the week commencing tomorrow evening, was formerly principal comedian with Rogers brothers, and as such is well known from Coast to Coast. "Songs and Stores from Life" is the title of his act.

The Orpheum cat show, under the management of Claire Beasy, is one of the most amusing acts of its kind ever offered by this management. Dorothy Kenton, the banjo girl, will give a musical act. The three Mitchells are colored comedians.

The holdovers are Cameron and Flanagan, Allan Shaw, the four Rianos and Charles E. Evans.

"Human Hearts," "an emotional drama" by Hal Reid, is announced for the current bill of the Grand Operahouse.

Matters of News.

The Orpheus Club benefit to aid the Y.M.C.A. building fund will take place Thursday evening at Simpson Auditorium, with J. P. Dupuy directing and Mr. Strobridge at the piano.

The organization will be assisted by the Woman's Choral Club of Pasadena, Miss Marie Jones and Robert Granger.

Marcel Katz, tenor, will give his first local concert at Gamut Auditorium tomorrow evening. Mr. Katz will be assisted by Natorp Blumenthal, violinist; Franz Robert Leischner, pianist, and Mrs. M. Hermion Robertson, accompanist.

On Friday evening the Woman's Lyric Club will be heard in concert at Simpson Auditorium, J. B. Poulin directing. Mrs. Robert Smith, soprano, will be the principal soloist. A fine programme of varied numbers will be given.

Vessella has prepared two good programmes for Long Beach today, and his soloist at the afternoon recital will be Mme. Ester Adaberto.

Mme. Adaberto will sing, as a principal number, the famous "Suicido," from "Gioconda."

News Notes.

Lena Ashwell has been obliged to cancel her tour on account of illness.

Frank Pixley and Gustav Luders have signed contracts to deliver another opera to Klaw & Erlanger by August 1 of this year.

George Bernard Shaw wrote the prologue which was spoken by Mr. and Mrs. Cyril Maude at the opening of the Playhouse, their new London theater.

A new play which Mme. Rejane will shortly produce at her Paris theater, is called "London-Paris-New York," and will deal with phases of life in each of the three cities.

Mme. Lillian Nordica has received the deeds of her old family homestead at Farmington, Me., and will renovate the house, to use it as a sort of museum of her treasures.

David Belasco is said to be at work on a new play for David Warfield, in which the noted character actor will open the new Stuyvesant theater in New York next September.

Nance O'Neill, who came near being the Clara Morris of the present generation, possessing the temperament but lacking management and opportunity under proper auspices, has signed a vaudeville contract.

There is a regular Schumann "boom" in Paris. The French, who waited so long before appreciating that composer, now seem in a hurry to make up for lost time. The conductors vie with one another in presenting his masterworks.

Heinrich Conried's condition has improved rapidly in the last few days, and his physicians assure the opera director that it will be only a few weeks now until he will be able to go to his desk fully restored to health.

Mme. Nellie Melba has received a new decoration from Queen Alexandra of England. It is the Order of Art, Music and Literature, and is in the form of the Royal Crown, with monogram in diamonds and amethysts, surrounded with a double line of brilliants.

Lee Shubert said last week that when his firm takes possession of Daly's Theater, New York, May 1, it will make many improvements in the building, redecorating and refurnishing it completely. This historic playhouse will [illegible] next season.

Mrs. Leslie Carter claims, it is reported, that she was the business partner of David Belasco in all the latter's enterprises, and as a reconciliation between the two now seems impossible a suit for $250,000 is on the tapis. Edward Lauterbach, the well-known New York lawyer, is Mrs. Carter's attorney in the case.

De Wolf Hopper, now on the road in "Wang" and "Happyland," is to open the Messrs. Shuberts' new Mary Anderson Theater in Louisville, Ky., March 30. An effort is now being made to have the actress for whom the theater was named come from England to be present at the dedication in the city where she made her stage début.

Gabriel d'Annunzio, the Italian playwright, will come to New York in March to attend at the Lyric Theater the opening performance of his play, "The Daughter of Jorio." When Mr. Sothern and Miss Marlowe decided to postpone the play's production from the fourth to the seventh week of their engagement, they cabled an invitation to the author. His acceptance was received yesterday.

Many prominent theatrical managers are preparing to raise a testimonial fund for Mrs. McKee Rankin, for many years a well-known actress, and who is now very ill at Mont Kisco from Bright's disease. Mrs. Rankin's last important engagement was with Miss Clara Bloodgood three seasons ago in "The Girl With the Green Eyes." Her friends hope by subscription to raise a substantial sum to aid the actress.

Under the direction of Frank Lea Short the Yale University Association will make a production in the spring of Ibsen's "The Pretenders." Two performances of the play will be given in Hartford, two in New Haven and at least two in New York, when the Yale alumnae will be a large factor in the production of the drama. How much better this is than performing the truck that usually is offered in college theatricals.

Nat Goodwin is soon to appear in "Little Dorritt," a dramatization by Franz von Schönthan, the well-known German playwright, of Charles Dickens's novel. Mrs. H. C. De Mille has just concluded arrangements with Mr. Goodwin regarding its production. Mr. Goodwin will play old Dorritt. The play will be tried out on the road during the spring, and will open in New York in September.

Sibelius, Finland's greatest composer, is coming to the front in Berlin. Weingartner conducted his first symphony at a recent concert and Frau Ida Ekman devoted a whole recital to his songs. Otto Lessmann, the editor of the Allgemeine Musik-Zeitung, was deeply impressed by the symphony, which he characterizes as a tragedy in four acts. He finds that rare thing, individuality, in this music. Frau Ekman was called upon to repeat a number of the Sibelius songs. In these there is, besides the charm of individuality, a local color, melodic and harmonic, which brings into music new national traits. Mrs. Newmarch's pamphlet on Sibelius has already been translated into German.

FLORENCIO CONSTANTINO.
The great tenor of the San Carlo opera company is really the star of the aggregation, for tenors of genuine artistic value are the rarest things in operaland. Constantino is probably Caruso's only real equal in artistic effect in this country. He was born in the city of Balboa, on the north coast of Spain, the son of an eminent Spanish engineer. His early career was spent in the navy—the training of which shows to superb advantage in "Gioconda," in which he has a mariner's role. He is here at present on leave of absence only from the Royal Opera of Madrid, at which he is first tenor.

MRS. MADGE CARR COOKE.
Mrs. Cooke made the biggest success of her career in portraying quaint, lovable "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch." She is not unfamiliar to Los Angeles theater-goers in this role, and will be seen again in the part at the Mason, this week.

MRS. ROBERT SMITH.
As Ethel Fults, Mrs. Smith was noted for the beauty and clarity of her girlish soprano voice. Since her marriage she has been heard in concert a number of times, and will appear again as soloist for the Lyric Club, this week.

Art and Artists.

BY ANTONY E. ANDERSON.

"I Scarcely Grieve, O Nature!"

I scarcely grieve, O Nature! at the lot
That pent my life within a city's bounds,
And shut me from thy sweetest sights and sounds.
Perhaps I had not learned, if some lone cot
Had nursed a dreamy childhood, what the mart
Taught me amid its turmoil; so my youth
Had missed full many a stern but wholesome truth.
Here, too, O Nature! in this haunt of Art,
Thy power is on me, and I own thy thrall.
There is no unimpressive spot on earth!
The beauty of the stars is over all,
And Day and Darkness visit every hearth.
Clouds do not scorn us: yonder factory's smoke
Looked like a golden mist when morning broke.

TWILIGHT, BY MARION KAVANAUGH WACHTEL, is one of the twenty-five beautiful water-color landscapes of Southern California that this artist will show in Anderson's gallery, Chicago, beginning with the 15th of this month. Mrs. Wachtel handles the difficult medium of water-colors with remarkable breadth and freedom.

Beginnings of Art Education.

Philip Gilbert Hamerton declares, in one of his illuminating books, that the artist is the man of perfect balance, physically and mentally. His hand executes what his eye sees, with unerring precision and fidelity.

If Mr. Hamerton's dictum is true, it follows that every worker in the world may be, nay, ought to be, an artist, and it matters very little whether he guides a plow or wields a brush.

Again, if Mr. Hamerton's opinion carries weight—and as he has devoted all his life to the study of art and artists, it certainly must—the man who is to reach this ideal state of perfect balance cannot begin his training for it a moment too early.

This is why the wisest of our public school instructors have worked so zealously, of late years, to bring art and its thousand and one applications into the everyday life of their pupils. This is why they have finally succeeded in making drawing and design a part of the regular school curriculum.

I visited the Los Angeles High School a few days ago, and found, to my pleased astonishment, that it has an art department whose course includes drawing and painting from still-life objects and outdoors, as well as from draped models, original design, prospective and mechanical drawing, and that in September there will be classes in clay modeling. There are four study rooms, but in September, when the new building is completed, there will be six. Four well-trained and competent teachers are in charge, yet this number will be augmented next year.

When we consider that there are 1600 pupils in the high school, and that all must take up drawing for the first five months after entering, we realize that the instructors have their hands full. After five months, however, the classes dwindle, for then the study of drawing, design and modeling is optional.

I am glad to add that the number who take the art course for the full four years is not small. Of those who take up architectural design, many will find their work of practical benefit in business life later on; others, who intend to pursue a college course, will have won credits for all work actually accomplished.

The classes in design are encouraged to execute their own ideas on brass, wood blocks and textile fabrics. I saw some lamp shades, a few curtains and one or two book covers that were both eminently useful and truly artistic.

There can be no doubt that the projected classes in modeling will become immensely popular, for the young men and women of the high school are still lingering on the borderland of that halcyon period when mud pies are an unmixed pleasure. And when mud pies can be made into shapes so artistic that they help to decorate a ceiling, they are undoubtedly worth while.

The work of the life sketch class interested me greatly. It showed that the students appreciated the value of action in the figure and character in the face. The studies, however briefly done, were made with observation and understanding.

The pupils of the school have already purchased, with money raised by 5 and 10-cent collections, several excellent landscapes by Los Angeles painters of reputation, and it is their intention to buy such a picture every year. The graduating classes have donated plaster statuettes from famous Greek marbles, and the class of 1907 will give a life-size cast of the disc-thrower. All these noble objects of art are scattered through the schoolrooms, with large photographs of famous paintings. They teach daily, though subtly and imperceptibly, a lesson in that truth which is beauty. Four years of reiteration will have their effect. The graduates of the Los Angeles and Polytechnic High Schools will be intelligent lovers of art.

Art in our public schools is not a fad but a tested necessity, because art, in its best and truest sense, is not an accessory to expanding life, but one of its vital principles.

When every artisan is also an artist, you have a community of men and women whose intellects and bodies are trained to a perfect balance. Such a community will never tolerate, even for a day, the many discords of our present urban civilization. In fact, harmony will attend it without stress or effort.

A Newly-found Murillo.

Some weeks ago a picture was sold at auction in Geneva for a few cents, resold by a dealer for $10, and then discovered by the private person who bought it, or, to be accurate, by experts on his behalf, after cleaning, to be a genuine Murillo, bearing the painter's signature, with the date.

A correspondence which has been in progress in the Geneva Press during the past fortnight gives to the story an interesting sequel, and a moral. It appears from this correspondence that the original owner of the picture, who had died, left his family of six persons in poor circumstances, and that the sale of his collection was virtually all that they had to depend upon. Prior to the sale, the Murillo, among several other paintings, was submitted to the judgment of an art expert in Geneva, and he pronounced it to be of no value, either on its merits or by reason of its origin.

These poor people have now to feel their poverty embittered by the knowledge that they were misled into sacrificing for a few cents property worth as many thousands of dollars, which would have maintained them almost in affluence. Besides the question as to the legal responsibility for a mistaken judgment, such as was given in this case, there seems to arise a very obvious reflection: Pin not your faith to a single expert.

ART NOTES.

The only exhibition now open is that of the Painters' Club at Ford Smith's. However, Leonard Lester promises us one at Gould's on the 15th, and Mrs. M. Evarts, the flower painter, will have one at Steckel's some time this month.

Hobart Bosworth, who has bought a charming bungalow on East Avenue 41, and who will, therefore, remain with us, has decided to postpone his exhibition of landscapes till the 13th of May, when he will show twenty-seven pictures, all recent work, done in Arizona. This week Mr. Bosworth will lecture before the Friday Morning Club on "An Actor's View of His Art."

Both Julia Bracken Wendt and Marion Cavenaugh Wachtel have gone to Chicago, the one to execute some commissions in sculpture, the other to oversee the exhibition of her own and her husband's pictures. William Wendt has also sent his landscapes to Chicago, to O'Brien's. The Windy City will, therefore, have three exhibitions of the work of Los Angeles painters at one and the same time. Who says we have not art in the West?

The usual monthly meeting of the Palette Club was held on Tuesday afternoon at the School of Art and Design, when a goodly number of sketches on "Street Scenes in California" were shown. The subject for the next meeting is "California Characteristics." On this occasion the club will invite their friends to an "artistic and musical evening." The best sketches of the year will be hung on the walls.

A LOS ANGELES GIRL IN BERLIN.

Up to the time of my arrival in Berlin I had the good fortune to be with a party, but at the station here I had to leave them and strike out for myself. Following the advice of many friends I went directly to the Woman's Club. I think it would be hard to find a better plan for a girl coming here alone.

At the club, I was not only received with the greatest cordiality and kindness, but was given most practical aid in regard to addresses and advice as to arrangements. This latter is most important, as one has to be careful about details. Many are the tales I have heard of disputes with pension keepers and it seems to be a very uncomfortable and disagreeable state of affairs if nothing more serious.

I had purchased a pocket map of the city and studied it before I started out, but found it necessary to keep it continually with me, as the street system is very confusing. Many of the streets are blessed with two or three names and all run crisscross in almost any direction, so it is easy to get completely turned around. Room hunting in Berlin is right down hard work. In the first place it is difficult to find the houses as the numbers are not conveniently arranged, as with us. The odd and even numbers are on the same side of the street, one to each house, as a consequence it is largely guess work where to find a given number. Fortunately a majority of the streets are short.

The stair climbing becomes very tiresome also, as there are few elevators, except in the more expensive houses, and most of the pensions are on the fourth and fifth floors. This is considered more desirable on account of the better light, Berlin being situated so far north makes that an important factor—but it is somewhat disgusting after a long climb to find that no music students would be taken or that the music rooms were all full. I imagine that for other students it would not be so difficult; but one who is here for musical work finds many obstacles and has to be exceedingly careful to have it thoroughly understood how many hours and what hours they will be allowed to practice, or they many have trouble later.

Most of the American students live in what is known as the American section, the part of the city just south of the Thiergarten and west of Potsdamerstrasse. It is advisable to be within walking distance of town and although the section is well supplied with street cars, they are so exasperating slow that it is a great advantage to be near the underground and elevated. The trains make quick time and the station is convenient to most of the places to which one wishes to go often, the shopping district, Bechstein, Beethoven Saal, and the Philharmonic (the new Mozarts Saal,) where so many of the finest concerts are to be given this winter, is right in the middle of the American section.

The prices for board are rather high, $27.50 and up; the average, including light and heat, which are often a separate account, is $30 or $35. The light is gas or lamps, the heat usually briquettes burned in porcelain stoves. In a few of the more expensive places they serve five meals a day, but in the majority only three, a movable breakfast of coffee or chocolate and rolls, dinner at 2 and a light supper at 7 or 8.

There are any number of fine English and American pensions where the cooking and arrangements are practically American; but to get the real German life and the language it is necessary to be in a German house.

Many of the students, especially the young men, have rooms and take their dinners out. I have been told that it can be done very comfortably here and is quite a little cheaper. It is, however, not to be recommended for every one. I have met students living that way who are not using their time or strength to the best advantage.

As soon as I was settled in my pension I began to look for a piano; the rents are very reasonable, ranging from $3 to $4 per month (carting and tuning extra,) for a fairly good upright, to $7.50 for a fine Bechstein Grand. There are, of course, all makes and styles to be secured.

The choice of piano teachers is bewildering. Most of the famous instructors come to Berlin some time, at least for a few years. I had several in view when I came and made an effort to meet as many students as possible to talk with them about their work and teachers. The chief objection in my mind to many of the greatest artists was that they have such large classes and do so much concertizing that they have neither time nor attention for their pupils. Of course, they have subteachers and take some of their class with them in the summer. Many find this very satisfactory, but I felt the need of steady hard work, and decided on one I had in mind when I came here, Alberto Jonas, as being one of the great men with whom I could get the line and amount of work I desired.

Most of the best piano teachers charge from $7 to $10 an hour. The highest price for harmony is $3.75, but fine instructors are plentiful, and very good ones can be secured for perhaps half of that sum.

I am studying vocal with Fraulein Frienmeyer, who is one of the best instructors and is a German-American.

There are several very fine teachers here, but nothing like the choice there is in other lines, and one hears comparatively little real good singing. Of course, there is the opera the year around, but the operahouse is small for a city of this size, which makes it difficult to get places and I understand is neither so good nor so cheap as in Dresden.

It is wonderful, the amount of work one can do in this atmosphere. The artists, teachers, students, concerts, all go to make up a life very rich, full and broadening.

MEN AND THINGS OVER THE SEAS.

Twice Pronounced Dead.

Francois Leclue, an old non-commissioned officer of Angouleme, has had the curious experience of having been twice pronounced dead. In 1878 he had actually been placed in the coffin and borne to the cemetery where he revived at the moment the grave digger began to shovel earth on the coffin. Recently, again he was pronounced dead after an attack of syncope, but revived the day preceding that appointed for his funeral.

Afghans Must Stay at Home.

A Calcutta dispatch announces that as a result of a notice that all servants of the state were free to make the pilgrimage to Mecca and that leave of absence would be granted to every one applying, applications have been so numerous that the orders have been held for the time being in abeyance.

The transaction of the public business at Kabul would have been interfered with if all of the applications had been granted. The preparations for the ameer's journey to India, including the hire of 2000 camels, for his train have been completed.

Cog Road Up the Matterhorn.

Two Zurich engineers, Messrs. Gallier and Imfeld, are to build a cogwheel railroad from Zermatt to the Matterhorn hut, and from the hut to the summit of the Matterhorn by a tunnel about 2550 yards in length.

Within thirty yards of the summit the station and a number of rooms will be cut out of the solid rock. The rooms will include a special chamber filled with compressed oxygen for tourists suffering from mountain sickness.

The return ticket will cost $10 and the journey up will take one and one-half hours at the most. Operations are to be started next summer.

Johnny's Story of the Cow.

Johnny was asked to write about the cow. He wrote:

"A cow is an animal with four legs on the under side. The tail is longer than the legs, but it is not used for the same purpose. The cow kills flies with her tail. A cow is bigger than a calf, but not so big as an elephant. She is made small so she can go in the barn door when no one is looking. Some cows is black, and some hook. A dog was hooked once. She tossed the dog that worried the cat that killed the rat. Black cows give white milk. A lot of cows together produce condensed milk.—[Exchange.

French Poet's Son a Ticket Puncher.

GEORGES VERLAINE AN ENIGMA OF HEREDITY—HIS FATHER TO HAVE A STATUE IN LUXEMBOURG GARDENS.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

PARIS, Feb. 23.—Travelers by the Paris Metropolitan Railway, who go down the steps at Willier's station to take the train toward the opera and the bourse, would probably be mightily interested to learn that the quiet, methodical official with the spare figure and slight mustache, who punches their tickets before admitting them to the platform and who closes the barrier inexorably as the trains, every three minutes, rush up, is the son of Paul Verlaine, one of the best-known Parisian poets. Students of the enigma of heredity would find food for reflection in this sharp contrast between the sire, who sang lyrics of sweetness and light, and his only son, a humble toiler in the sunless recesses of the earth.

It was only quite recently, indeed, at a gathering of the poet's friends and admirers before his tomb in Batignolles Cemetery, to commemorate the tenth anniversary of his death, that the fact became known that Paul Verlaine had a son. Paul Verlaine was the type of the Paris Bohemian, and his half century of existence was spent within the precincts of the Latin quarter. He was the son of a captain of engineers and as a young man held a minor appointment at the Hotel de Ville. It was about this time—when he was 24 years of age—that he married. But Paul Verlaine's Bohemian instincts were too strong for him. After a brief wedded career of two years, during which period his son, Georges, was born, a divorce was agreed upon. Verlaine resigned his appointment and bade adieu to the domestic virtues. For the remainder of his days he earned a precarious livelihood by his pen. He was one of the most familiar figures at the Café Procope, once famous as the resort of artists and literary men who remained faithful to the old traditions of the quartier Latin. No cicerone worthy of the name would ever allow a stranger to depart without first showing him Verlaine, the poet.

GEORGES VERLAINE, SON OF THE POET.

Mme. Verlaine soon married a civil engineer and young Georges, who had been given over into his mother's keeping, received a good education at the Lycée Janson. Thence he was taken for a year to England. This period was spent in a Brighton boarding-house and M. Georges Verlaine can express himself tolerably well in our vernacular.

During boyhood Georges Verlaine had never seen his father. When he was grown up and was performing his military service letters began to pass between them and it was arranged that as soon as his period of service had elapsed, Georges should join his father. Unfortunately the poet's death put an end to these projects for the future.

Georges Verlaine was now alone in the world. A Deputy, a fervent admirer of the father, made the son his private secretary for a time. Another secretaryship followed, but Verlaine, who, unlike his father, had bourgeois tastes, and longed to settle down, was anxious to find a permanent appointment, however modest. A friend's influence procured him an employment on the Metropolitan Railway. He is now a "surveillant de quai" or platform inspector, and his highest ambition is to end his days as a chef de station.

Yet Verlaine has inherited something of his father's literary leanings in that he is a devourer of books. Every leisure moment is spent in reading. He has even tried his hand at poetry, but merely, as he says, for his own amusement.

In considering two careers so utterly unlike as those of the two Verlaines, one is tempted to wonder whether, if the son had grown up by his father's side, the result would not have been otherwise. And yet how rare it is, especially in art and literature, to find the son following in the footsteps of his father and continuing his fame! Instances such as that of the two Alexandre Dumas, father and son, or of Horace Vernet, son of Carle and grandson of Joseph Vernet, are extremely uncommon. It seems, indeed, that the very greatness of the father often deters the son from entering the lists. Racine's son did so and but for the burden of his name might have been illustrious. It would be hard to quote two great actors, father and son. Rachel had two sons, the one became a consul, the other a naval officer. Mme. Granier's son is on 'change. Gounod's son is a painter, Sardou's son an architect and the son of that slashing journalist, Henri Rochefort, is an electrical engineer. Victor Hugo's father was a general, so was the father of the elder Dumas. There had never been a poet in Lamartine's family. So it is. The wind bloweth where it listeth and the divine afflatus descends on whom it will and seems to mock the laws of heredity and atavism.

It is quite astonishing what a number of sons of distinguished or wealthy men may be found among railway employés. Many a traveler could tell of the uniformed official or liveried attendant whom he has come across in the sleeping or the restaurant car and whose father was a noted millionaire.

Paul Verlaine, the Bohemian poet of the Latin quarter, will have his statue in the Luxembourg Gardens and a square or a street will bear his name. Georges, his son, will have reached the consummation of his hopes if one day he is entitled to write on his card: "Monsieur Georges Verlaine, chef de station."

AMONG MEN OF ACTION.

"It is interesting to note that the life insurance companies have never been mentioned in connection with the disaster at San Francisco," said John E. Watterson, an insurance man of New York, who is a guest at the Van Nuys. "The fire insurance companies have been listed as the only losers. In fact the life insurance companies during the first few days following the fire were more disturbed than the fire companies. Two days after the affair, when the list of dead was still mentioned in the ten-thousand figure, the three largest life insurance companies in New York forwarded $10,000,000 cash to San Francisco to meet hurried calls. This was subsequently found to have been greatly in excess of what was needed. It follows, however, that had there been 10,000 people killed in the disaster the life insurance companies would have been greatly embarrassed. While the insurance upon a moderate class of building may run to $5000, the insurance upon the business men who occupied the office buildings of San Francisco would, in many cases, reach $50,000 per man. It was amusing to see the speed with which the life insurance companies called in loans and thus threw Wall street into a panic. The concerns believed that there had been a terrific loss of life chiefly among the wealthy class. If this had been the case, some concerns would have been compelled to go out of business."

"There seems to be a craze abroad that the trunks of the traveler should have some distinguishing mark upon its exterior," said H. S. Thomas, an extensive trunk manufacturer of St. Louis. "This idea has resulted in the most weird and wonderful markings ever seen on a trunk. The haste of the American people is really the cause of the craze. When a traveler drops into the station for his trunk and there is a mountain of baggage piled high he impatiently wants to select his own out of the melange, and be able to say positively that it is his. The use of the old-fashioned check is too slow. There may be a dozen trunks of the same make in the pile and all must be looked over if the check system is relied upon.

"The other day I was watching a mountain of trunks being distributed and some of them were striped with colors. Others had one color painted over half and a different striking color over the other half. This, however, has become common. One peculiar feature I noticed at the time, and that was the lettering on a trunk. The first initial was conventional black, as was the third letter, but the middle initial was a screaming scarlet color. This combination stood out prominently, and the general coloring of the trunk was unchanged.

"In hand baggage the public is looking always for some distinguishable mark. The size and shape of the hand bag has been determined upon almost finally, but the little peculiarities that are requested are almost beyond limit."

Frederick A. Wann, traffic manager for the Salt Lake road, who is now on his way to Chicago from Los Angeles to attend the meeting of the Transcontinental Freight Traffic Association, is a pleasant and democratic railroad official with a problem ahead of him—securing for the Salt Lake its proper share of the traffic agreements, which as a connecting line with the East, he believes it is entitled to. At a meeting in Chicago this week he will be heard from. In connection with this trip to Chicago there was an amusing incident day before yesterday when Wann sent a friend to the Santa Fé offices to get his tickets, for the Salt Lake is tied up by washouts in Meadow Valley. The friend made a request for tickets, and presented a check in payment.

"We don't receive checks," remarked the ticket seller, as he turned scornfully away from the little slip which was in payment for a whole compartment.

"But the check is perfectly good," argued the purchaser of the aforesaid compartment.

The clerk condescended to remark, "How do I know?"

"Well just look at the signature," was the answer.

The clerk did so and nearly had a fit. The quick way in which Wann was accommodated with a compartment—and it was the last one on the Overland Limited, too—was a record-breaking feat.

MEN OF THE HOUR.

[From the New York Commercial.]

Ambassador Bryce is telling people he meets in Washington—and quite likely he told it to President Roosevelt on Monday at the White House—that the best "tip" he has had as to the way to get ahead of the United States was given him at the banquet tendered him by the Society of the Pilgrims in London on the eve of his departure.

By way of preface he explains he was so deeply moved by the warmth of feeling manifest at the function that "I abandoned my usual professorial style and spoke my mind." After the affair was over a member of the American colony grasped him heartily by the hand and said: "Talk in that way, Mr. Bryce, when you get to the United States, and you'll 'make good.'"

"I'll take that for my diplomatic base," replied the Ambassador, "and I thank you for the hint. In Washington my motto will be: 'Make good,' whatever else you make."

If the accounts of his first interview with Mr. Roosevelt are accurate, Mr. Bryce has both feet on his base.

There is not the slightest question that Richard Mansfield is the foremost of American actors. Primacy is granted him by all of us except, possibly, the clever theatrical reviewer who signs his copy "Alan Dale," and who does not resemble that interesting figure any more closely than a hawk does a hand-saw. Mr. Mansfield may, or may not, be held by all his admirers in the light in which he is seen by William Winter; but his genius, his aloofness, his high standards, his courage and his superb indifference to criticism are qualities that excite admiration even when they invite censure.

"Peer Gynt" gives him an extraordinary opportunity because Ibsen's creature is a man of the Mansfield type. The hero of the play and the foremost of American actors are chips from the same block. Gynt would have interpreted the roles to which Mansfield is attracted; Mansfield in the circumstances of the play would have behaved about as Gynt behaved.

What is the overmastering trait of Gynt? It is that he lives a heroic dream life and deludes himself with Engagement Announced.

The engagement of Miss Warine Bradford and George E. Lockwood was announced Thursday at an informal luncheon given by Miss Bradford's sister, Miss Lillian Bradford, to a few of her close girl friends at her home No. 1711 Arapahoe street.

The house was prettily decked for the occasion. The parlors and hall were gay with red hearts and the dining-room was graced with purple violets and ribbon. Lavender ribbon was draped from the chandelier, and just underneath rested a great basket of fragrant violets. Strands of violet ribbon connected the places with the basket, and after a dainty repast, each guest drew therefrom a bunch of the blue-eyed blossoms.

The secret of the engagement was revealed in an unique fashion, the place cards having walnuts tied to them, and in the walnuts were two red hearts united with the names of the engaged couples thereon. The bride-to-be is a daughter of the late Mrs. Addie Bradford. Her fiance is a son of Charles R. Lockwood of Brighton avenue, and is connected with the Los Angeles Abstract Company.

Both of the young people are well known here, having lived in Los Angeles since they were very young, the pretty romance being the outcome of a school boy and girl friendship. The wedding will take place in a few months and will be very quiet on account of the recent death of the bride's mother.

MISS WARINE BRADFORD, whose engagement is announced today.

Dinner and Cards.

Mrs. William H. Fuller of West Thirtieth street gave a dinner Friday evening at which covers were laid for eight. The dining-room was decked in vivid scarlet, carnations being utilized, while in the drawing room were daffodils and soft green ferns, the library showing motifs of pink and white. The guests were Mrs. H. L. Cutter, Mme. Marian C. Wilson, Mrs. W. T. L. Stafford, Dr. Helen O. Anderson, Miss Frances Nichols and Miss Beatrice Cutter.

Home Wedding.

A pretty wedding was solemnized Tuesday evening at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. John E. Hartell of No. 1139 West Seventh street, when their son, William Hartell and Miss Edithe Elrod were united in marriage. Rev. R. H. Walker performed the ceremony and the wedding marches were played by H. Harding. The bride was attired in an exquisite gown of cream net over cream taffeta silk. The young couple have gone on a short wedding tour and upon their return will make their home in Otis, Cal.

Engagement Surprise.

An announcement which will cause a flutter of surprise among the many friends of the young couple is that of the engagement of Miss Edna Dickinson, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. D. K. Dickinson of No. 1008 Beacon street, and Starr A. Warson of Long Beach, recently of Seattle, the wedding to take place April 10.

Miss Dickinson has been prominent in the young people's work in Christ Church since coming here with her parents a year or so ago, and has also been known for her marked musical ability and girlish grace and charm. Mr. Warson is a rising young merchant of Long Beach.

A dainty repast in Christopher's followed the matinée, the table being decked in the sorority colors of white and green.

Hollywood Dance.

Mr. and Mrs. Gregory Ames of Prospect avenue in Hollywood will entertain tomorrow evening with a dance to a number of their young friends.

Coming Wedding.

A popular young musician and musical lecturer in whom many Los Angeles people are deeply interested, Miss Helen Parcels, will be married Tuesday evening to Edwin G. Voight of this city, a director and stockholder in the California Furniture Company.

The wedding will be simple, but marked with all the appealing beauty that rare music and artistic taste can furnish. It will be solemnized at the home of Miss Parcels and her mother, Mrs. Mary Parcels, at No. 1308 Linwood avenue, Rev. W. R. Lloyd conducting the nuptial ceremony.

The marriage will take place at 7 o'clock in the presence of relatives and later a reception to friends will be held from 8 to 10 p.m. Instead of a wedding march, the bridal music from "Lohengrin" will be sung by a quartette including Tom Karl, Mrs. Katherine Kimball Forest and Mrs. Mary J. Shallert. Mrs. Forest and Tom Karl will render solos of appropriate themes.

The young couple will live in Los Angeles and will be at home the first and third Thursdays after April 1, at No. 1308 Linwood avenue.

Palm Sunday Wedding.

A romance begun under the sunny skies of Santa Barbara, and involving two well-known young people, will find its consummation on Palm Sunday at the Church of the Angels in Garvanza, when the marriage of Miss Elizabeth Syle and Arthur E. Madison of Santa Barbara is solemnized.

Miss Syle is the daughter of the late Louis B. Syle, who held a high place in American literature. He occupied the chair of English in the State University at Berkeley for years, and at the same time became well known as dramatic critic for two of the prominent San Francisco dailies, also conducting a school of drama at the university. Since his death three years ago his daughter has to a certain extent followed in his footsteps and has won a place for herself in newspaper circles in San Francisco. With her mother, Mrs. Edith Syle, she has been resting for the past year in Santa Barbara and there met Mr. Madison, who is superintendent and manager for the Home Telephone Company there.

Miss Syle is a girl of high-bred grace and rare charm and beauty. She has been living in Los Angeles since the beginning of the winter and the marriage though celebrated here, will be of the greatest interest to the many friends of the family all over California.

The rector of the Church of the Angels, Rev. Milton S. Runkle, will officiate, the beautiful ceremonial of the Episcopal church being used.

Mrs. Syle will give her daughter away, but the bride will enter on the arm of J. J. Perkins of Santa Barbara. Miss Anne Madison, sister of the prospective bridegroom, will be the maid of honor, and Miss Mollie Perkins, also of Santa Barbara, will act as bridesmaid. Charles Kenyon will serve as best man.

The young couple will make their home in Santa Barbara right next door to the romantic old mission with the benison of its bells sounding from day to day.

Lenten Wedding.

One of the charming weddings of the Lenten season took place last Wednesday evening at the residence of the bride's mother, Mrs. L. M. Cary, at No. 1501 South Grand avenue, when Miss Gertrude McKenzie and Dr. Andrew Porter were united in marriage, Rev. Baker P. Lee officiating.

The home was an artistic setting for the bridal ceremony, decked in the lacy plumes of asparagus ferns and the misty beauty of pink and white almond blossoms. Just preceding the entrance of the young couple Miss Grace Whitesall sang "The Song of a Heart," and James S. Lacy played the wedding march from "Lohengrin."

The bonny, brown-eyed bride was a winsome picture in her wedding gown of white marquisette over white satin, trimmed with real lace. She was attended by the matron of honor, Mrs. Irma Harrison, and her maids, Miss Mabel McKenzie and Olive Taylor, in girlish gowns of white and carrying great fragrant bunches of white sweet peas.

The bridal party passed through the pink-ribboned aisles and were joined by the groom and best man, Dr. Walter Deering, and the brother of the bride, Dr. T. W. McKenzie.

A large number of relatives and friends were present. The young couple left the same evening for the North on a wedding tour. Upon their return to the city they will be at home to their friends at No. 1335 East Washington street.

Many of the new season's novelty ribbons came Wednesday—not the full spring showing, we are sorry to say, but enough to make a very interesting exhibit. The ribbon mills are so far behind on orders—especially in the fancies—that few stores have anything distinctively new to show.

Pillow Tops

Priced Ridiculously Low

When the travelers' sample lengths of upholstery fabrics are returned to the mills, at the end of the season, some merchant who can handle the entire collection usually gets them at a next-to-nothing price.

Something over five hundred pieces came to us last week—one to two-yard lengths of fabrics that cost one to fifteen dollars a yard by the bolt.

We have cut them into 24 and 27-inch squares, to be sold as pillow tops, at 25c, 50c and $1.00 each.

AT $1 EACH—24 and 27 inch squares of French and English figured silk damasks, rich moires, English Tapestries, plushes, etc. that would cost $4.50 to $15 a yard if bought in the regular way. Some of them shown in window.

AT 50c—24 and 27 inch squares of plain and fancy damasks, silk tapestries, satin brocades, fine French cretonnes, etc. that are worth $2.50 to $4 a yard.

AT 25c EACH—24 and 27 inch squares of English and French Cretonnes, cotton plushes, taffetas, tapestries, etc. worth $1 to $2.50 a yard.

Monday's early shoppers will have the richest picking in pillow tops we have EVER been able to offer.

IN THE SMOKING COMPARTMENT

BY C. S. YOST

THE train had stopped for a few minutes in the pretty little city of Abilene, Kan. There was the usual rattling roll of hurried trucks, the banging of baggage, the rushing to and fro on the platform and then the conductor cried his cheery "All aboard," the bell rang and the train with growing speed passed out of the town into the gray fields beyond.

"It is hard to believe," said the red-headed man in the corner of the smoking-compartment to nobody in particular, "that only a few years ago this town we have just passed was considered the wildest and wickedest place between the two oceans. You couldn't find a New England town that could get ahead of it now in the matter of sobriety or propriety. It's as prim and precise as a Boston spinster, and yet as full of vim and vigor as a Kentucky thoroughbred. Yet I can remember when a man took his life in his hands when he stopped off there."

"Yes, siree," echoed the patriarch next the window as he shifted his roll of fine cut to the other side of his mouth, "there was high old times in Abilene back in the seventies. For quite a while that was the end of the railroad, and nearly all the cattle from the Southwest was driven up over what got to be called the Abilene trail and shipped from there. Then when the cowboys got rid of their longhorns and was paid off they had to celebrate. You bet your boots there was something doin' in Abilene in them days. Every man had to carry his gun handy and keep his eyes open. It was dangerous to be safe, as they used to say. If it hadn't been for men like "Wild Bill" Hickock it wouldn't a been possible to do any business at all. Why, I remember—"

"Talkin' about 'Wild Bill,'" broke in a passenger with a protuberant but well shaven jaw, "did you ever hear about the time he got cold feet?"

"Naw," snapped the patriarch, nettled at the interruption. "An' I don't believe he ever did. As I was saying, I remember —"

"I don't care whether you believe it or not," persisted the butt-in, "an' I ain't goin' to offer any papers in evidence anyhow, but they told me the story right back there in Abilene one day last summer when I had to stop over there to see about a farm I got an interest in. I expect it's 'bout as near true as most o' the yarns they tell about him."

"Well," said the man by the window, "if you've got to get it off your bosom, I can wait." And then he took in a fresh supply of fine cut.

"Everybody knows," began the jawsome traveler, who was a commission merchant from Kansas City; "everybody knows that Bill Hickock lacked a whole lot o' bein' a saint or even a shinin' light in staid society, but there never was anybody that questioned his nerve; at least not when Bill was in the neighborhood. You was on the verge o' rememberin' somethin' a while ago"—turning to the patriarch—"so I guess you recollect that Bill was pretty particular about his personal appearance. Wore high-heeled boots that fit him like the peelin' on a Missouri apple; never went without a long frock coat even in summer time, an' used enough oil on his long curly hair to keep one o' these big mogul engines in grease. But he could get his gun out and into action before a split-second watch could get ready to tick and the doctors didn't have to bother with the man he shot at. They say he could put seven bullets into a man and never make but one hole. That may be strainin' the truth a wee mite, but that's what they told me in Abilene. When they made him Town Marshal they wasn't right sure whether law an' order or the gentleman from down the trail would get it in the neck, but somethin' had to be done and they felt pretty well satisfied that Wild Bill would do somethin' an' do it quicker than anybody else in sight. As to who would be done they had to take some risks; but everybody had to take risks in Abilene in those days, an' it turned out that they made a good pick, for a beginnin' at any rate.

"Well, when the cowboys first saw the new Town Marshal they thought they were goin' to have a nice little picnic an' they planned to give him a sort o' community hair cut, each man to sever one o' Bill's long curls with a bullet and preserve the lock as a souvenir. But Bill wasn't in the souvenir business, an' after he had put so many gentlemen from Texas in the graveyard that they had to move back the fence three or four times to get 'em in, they changed their minds about the picnic an' decided that a Sunday-school would be nearer the proper caper. For a while there, Abilene was so quiet that people got to bein' absent minded about carryin' their shootin' irons down to breakfast with them, an' some folks was even reckless enough to shy around a corner without a popper. Got so humdrum and prosy that even Bill began to pine for excitement an' got to stirrin' up trouble just to get a chance to cut a few more notches. He wasn't as particular as he had been either about who was in range, and the peaceable citizens who wanted to use their hind pockets for storin' plug tobacco instead of implements of war began to wear a worried look.

"But nobody had nerve enough to suggest a change of administration to Bill, an' so he went on runnin' things just as he pleased for quite a little while. Every once in so often a new man would come in with the idea of doin' up the Town Marshal, and he went out again in a pine box after the Coroner had rendered a verdict of justifiable homicide and collected his fee from the effects of the late lamented. But one day a young fellow blew into town from back East somewhere, nobody knew exactly and nobody cared very much. He was a slender, pale-faced youngster, who didn't appear to have sand enough to look a plate o' ham an' eggs in the face. He wore clean linen collars and eye glasses, an' as if that wasn't enough to make him a target, he was always smokin' cigars that looked at least a foot long. Nobody in Abilene had ever seen such cigars, an' o' course, they attracted general attention. It wasn't a safe thing to attract general attention in those days, for it wasn't considered even a misdemeanor to shoot holes through a man's hat so long as it was just for amusement. So it wasn't surprisin' that the boys should commence poppin' away at the stranger's cigars every time he showed up in public. He had 'em knocked out of his mouth a dozen times before anybody thought it worth while to speak to him about it, an' then he just laughed an' said: 'Oh, it don't disturb me in the least, not in the least, don't you know.' When that got around they quit shootin' at him, for if it didn't disturb him there wasn't any fun in it. But all the same they didn't know what to make of him, an' they just fairly pined for a chance to throw him down. He made it worse when he commenced sayin' sarcastic things in perfect English that riles the spot shots, but yet didn't exactly give 'em any excuse for puttin' a hole through him in cold blood, an' they couldn't get him to do anything or say anything that would. He didn't spare the Town Marshal, and Bill was as sore as the rest of 'em.

"One night the stranger entered a saloon and called for a drink. This was something he'd never done before. Bill was standing at the bar, but the tenderfoot didn't seem to notice him. He just took one of his long cigars out of his pocket, smelled of it and bit off the end. Then he picked up the bottle o' whisky that the barkeeper had set out for him, filled his glass half full, an' started to raise it to his mouth when a shot was fired and the glass went to pieces in his hand. He didn't look around, but just reached over for a match, an' had got his fingers on it when 'Wild Bill' stuck the end of his gun under his nose. Then the stranger turned his head and looked at Bill with a cold we-haven't-been-introduced stare.

"'I beg pahdon,' he says.

"'You white-livered coyote,' says Bill, in his sweetest tone, 'you're goin' to beg pardon right, an' right now. I'll give you just ten seconds to get down on your little two-by-four knees and saw how sorry you are for them things you said about me.'

"'Wait just a moment, Mr. Hickock, if you please,' said the stranger, 'until I light my cigar.'

"He was so blamed cool about it an' the request was so funny that Bill was paralyzed, an' he just stood there with his gun raised while the feller calmly lit the match and held it to the end of the cigar. Then a most surprisin' thing happened. The end o' the cigar began to sizzle and sputter. The stranger took it out of his mouth and looked at it in a pained sort o' way, as if he was ashamed of it, and Bill looked at it, too, but was so astonished his paralysis got worse. I 'spose he'd clean forgotten what he'd started to do.

"Anyhow, the business end o' the cigar was turned his way, and the first thing he knew a ball o' fire shot out o' that end and struck him square between the eyes. He dropped his gun to the floor, threw his hands up to his face and opened his mouth to holler, when another ball of fire went plunk! right into the hole. Bill turned and dashed for the corner where the water bucket stood, followed by fire balls that struck all around him. It was a Roman candle, you know, that the fellow had fixed up for a cigar, 'specially for him. Everybody in the saloon was so rattled that they didn't offer to raise a hand when the stranger walked out, and by the time Bill had got his head out o' the water bucket and started on the war path, he had boarded a train an' was on his way to Kansas City. That's what they told me in Abilene, an' they do say that Hickock was so ashamed about it that he wasn't any good after that an' it wasn't long before he left town. You remember he went up into the Black Hills and some tin-horn gambler did the trick for him that he'd done for so many others.

"You were saying," he continued, as he turned to the man by the window, "that you remembered something. It's your turn now."

"I remember," said the patriarch, with a glint in his eye. "I remember seeing a jackass bray at the moon, but it wasn't in Abilene."

DON'T ARGUE ABOUT IT.

When an Employer Wants Anything Done Let Him See He Is Obeyed Promptly.

In the business of life there is one kind of man who is continually in a stew. He is the person who everlastingly wants to argue about everything. His opinion may or may not be worth something. That isn't the point. He never receives a mild suggestion or a severe "call-down" from his chief in peaceful acquescence, but he has to express his contrary opinion in the matter before he adopts the plan laid out for him.

Now, it is a well-known fact that every executive believes he knows thoroughly what he is about, and when he calls Mr. Smith or Mr. Brown into his office and says that he desires a piece of work done thus or so, if Mr. Smith or Mr. Brown are possessed of intelligence they will get at it and do it without comment or resistance, neatly and with dispatch, just as the boss suggested. This is flattering to his ability and in nine cases out of ten it will be the best way. Just because Mr. Smith or Mr. Brown may have a plan equally as good is no reason for desiring to substitute it for the boss's. Above all it is unwise to pause to criticise or analyze the scheme put forward by the chief. If it is absolutely unfeasible or can't be worked out, it is ample time to tell him so when it has been tried. But it is equally important that the subordinate should be positive that it will not work before presenting his objections. No executive likes to have his ideas proved valueless or his plans frustrated.

Above all, learn to take every order kindly, every direction quietly and earnestly, improving on them always if possible, but assuredly throwing into them all the strength of the soul in executing them. Presently the boss is brought to marvel at the astonishing ease with which his instructions are fulfilled in one quarter, while the man who is eternally finding fault and discovering air holes in every scheme offered him keeps in the rank of mediocre, ill-paid "subs."

THE RIGHTS OF STRIKERS.

A CAREFUL DEFINITION BY U. S. JUDGE QUARLES.

Men Have a Right to Work for Whom They Please, but When They Cease to Be Employed They Have no Right to Demand a Reinstatement.

In view of all the difficulties that arise in the settlement of a strike or labor disturbance because an employer believes that it is for his interest to maintain an open shop when previously he had allowed the unions to keep his establishment closed to all but union labor, a decision by United States Judge Joseph V. Quarles that defines the rights of both employers and employed becomes of interest. The decision was rendered in the case of the Allis-Chalmers Company after he had revoked a temporary injunction granted to the company. The unionists took this to mean that they could do as they pleased. They even spread the news broadcast, and intimated that Judge Quarles revoked the injunction because they "scared him" by circulating a petition to have him removed. As a matter of fact, there began a most violent series of assaults on the men who were at work in the Allis-Chalmers shops. This led Judge Quarles, after consideration of the supplemental bill and the evidence supporting it, to grant the injunction prayed for. The court said:

There are nine propositions so well established that no court in England, no court in any one of the States of this Union, and no Federal tribunal, has ever questioned them; and these propositions are conclusive so far as the legal features of this contest are concerned.

First, the defendants, who were employés of the complainant, were clearly within their lawful right when they left the employ of the complainant; whether with good cause or without cause is not for us to inquire.

Second, these defendants have the right to combine and work together in whatever lawful way they believe they may increase their earnings, shorten their hours, lessen their labors or better their conditions. It is for them to say whether they will work by the day or by the piece. They may so conclude either as individuals or as unions.

Third, the complainant has a corresponding liberty as to whom it will employ; whether its work shall be done by one system or another, and how its business shall be conducted; the non-union man has equal rights and privileges with any member of any union.

Fourth, when the defendants went out on a strike, their relations with the company were at an end; they ceased to be employés of the complainant; the places they once occupied in the shops are no longer their places, and never again can be except by mutual agreement.

Fifth. No one of the defendants can be compelled by any low or court order to do further work for complainants on any terms.

Sixth. The company cannot be constrained to employ again any or either of the defendants.

Seventh. It follows that the company has the right to employ others to take the places vacated by the striking workmen, and defendants are not entitled to be consulted as to such employment, for they have no legal concern with the matter.

Eighth. Defendants have the right to discuss or argue in a peaceable way with new employés whether they should work for the complainant. They may persuade them, if they can, but have no right to use force, threats or violence, nor to strengthen their appeal by a show of numbers. Persuasion by force of numbers amounts to intimidation. The new employés, or those seeking employment, have the absolute right to go and come as they please without fear or molestation and without being compelled to discuss or argue, unless they are pleased to do so. No man is to be insulted or harassed because he chooses to work. No man is so humble as to be beneath the consideration of the court, and no combination of men so strong as to be above the law.

Ninth. The defendants have no right, by threats of strike or other hostile methods, to interfere with the business relations subsisting between the complainant or any other foundry or establishment. Such a boycott to cripple the business of the company would be indefensible and odious in the sight of the law.

And finally:

I am going to make two suggestions, which may be taken for what they are worth:

First. I hope the impression may not go abroad that because the court had been reluctant to grant an injunction, it will be reluctant to enforce the injunction that it does grant.

Second. If peaceable picketing is to be continued—as the complainant recognizes that it may be in the form of injunction presented, why would it not be well to let those two men, for instance, who represent the union, who stand at the gate for the peaceful and honorable purpose of discussion, be recognized by some badge? Why leave it so that a poor stranger, who wants work to keep his family from starving, who goes there to apply, may mistake some thug for an honorable union man who is there for an honorable purpose? If that designation were given, some badge, some mark, so these men could recognize them as the men who had been put forward there by the union, so that they would feel safe in talking to them and not fear that they may be enticed by some thug who desires to beat them, someone perhaps for whom the union is not responsible. I think it would be a most desirable thing.

FRANCE WELCOMES WHITE.

President Fallieres will extend a welcome more than usually cordial to the new American Ambassador, Henry White. It is easy to see why. Mr. White made himself a permanent friend of the French people by his adroit services to the republic in the Moroccan affair. The French delegates to the Algeciras conference sent back glowing accounts of his tact in avoiding offense to Germany, and yet aiding France to retain the dominant influence in the Shereefian empire. No foreigner ever rendered France a greater service in a more discreet way.

All Americans are liked in Paris—though some are better liked than others, of course. The French do not understand any other nation outside the Latin circle so well as they understand the Americans. Although the Russians are their allies, they feel the force of the eternal truth that if you scratch a Russian you find a Tartar. Though they are separated by only a narrow sheet of water from Albion, and have a political entente with the London government, they never tire of declaring that no two nations so close together were ever so far apart in views of life, morals, trade, art and religion. One hears less of this than formerly, but the Frenchman is irritated, when not amused, by the superior air of John Bull. It exasperates Jacques Bonhomme to find the water between France and England described in the English atlases as the English Channel. "Who made it English?" he asks with disdain.

But the American he understands largely, and he admits that the American understands him largely. There are always more Americans in Paris in any week of the year than there are British in a month. The Americans are educating the French to like America. Mr. White will take up a burden that has been borne worthily. He is expected to do a great deal of entertaining. B.

Be Loyal to Employers.

If you work for a man, says Elbert Hubbard, in heaven's name work for him. If he pays you wages which supply you with bread and butter, work for him, speak well of him, think well of him, stand by the institution he represents.

I think if I worked for a man I would work for him. I would not work for him a part of his time, but all of his time. I would give an undivided service or none.

If put to a pinch, an ounce of loyalty is worth a pound of cleverness.

If you must vilify, condemn and eternally discourage, why, resign your position, and when you are outside, damn to your heart's content. But I pray you, so long as you are part of an institution, do not condemn it. Not that you will injure the institution, not that, but when you disparage the concern of which you are a part you disparage yourself.

An Offering of Vast Significance to Women of Thrift---Prices about 1-3 Less Than Regular

Judge a dry goods store by its silk values and you won't go far wrong. This store with no lengthy history, but with a promising future is ambitious, though we are ambitious to make each of our departments a leader. We are especially ambitious to be known as the silk store of Los Angeles, and we expect this, our first silk sale, to prove a stepping stone to great events in the future. It's rather unusual to offer silks, which are the bread and butter of the dry goods trade, for a third under value at the inception of a season that is undoubtedly going to be a season of silks, but we believe that our hope of success lies largely in doing things out of the ordinary. Every piece of silk featured in this advertisement is of standard make, dependable quality and superlative value. Some of the quantities are limited and may only last for a few hours, so early trading is advised. The sale begins Monday morning at eight o'clock and will continue while the quantity lasts.

MISS MARIE STUART.

TALLEST WOMAN SINGER.

Marie Stuart, New English Contralto, Is Six Feet and Two Inches.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Feb. 16.—It is no uncommon thing, nowadays, when a new songstress comes before the public, for more or less extravagant claims to be made regarding the height of her vocal range. It is not on this score, however, but that of physical height, that preëminence is claimed for a singer who made a successful début at Queen's Hall this week, for Miss Marie Stuart stands six feet two inches in height and is said to be the tallest woman singer in the world.

In contrast to her loftiness of figure, Miss Stuart's voice is a low contralto, and its rich and pure quality has been highly praised by the London critics. Its history is rather exceptional. In her early youth, the singer, who comes of a Wolverhampton family, displayed musical talent of a high order, but this was as a pianist. Her voice was then nothing extraordinary, and it was her intention to devote her life to the piano.

A few years ago, however, Miss Stuart suffered from an affection of the throat, for which she eventually had to undergo a surgical operation. The surgeon told her that when the throat healed she would probably find that she possessed a voice of considerable volume, but warned her against attempting to sing too soon. Miss Stuart took heed of the warning, but one day while she was playing the piano she felt impelled to sing and her friends were astonished at the quality and power of her voice. This led the young woman to study singing at the Birmingham School of Music, and she now sets out to follow in the steps of the great singers.

Miss Stuart's voice is said to be like that of Miss Clara Butt, and by a curious coincidence, she also resembles that most famous London contralto in being unusually tall. Miss Stuart is of striking appearance, having dark and handsome features and a spirited manner.

ORDINARY MEN PROVE HEROES.

NEED OF ACTION QUICKLY PROVES THE FACT.

The Germ of Heroism Lies Close to the Heart—Sympathy, the Need of Extension of Aid, Brings It Forth, Regardless of All Other Conditions.

The germ of heroism lies at the heart of every man's nature. Scratch the ordinary citizen and you find a hero says John Coleman in the Worker's Magazine. This truth is the more remarkable because the power to perform heroic deeds, upon occasion, by no means presupposes or even implies an elevated mental or moral status, the endowment of marked courage. The man who will forswear his best friends for the sake of money or ambition will lay down his life for a stranger under sway of the heoric impulse; the woman who screams at a mouse will risk not only life but love and beauty to serve her rival when the same voice calls to her. Some of the bravest deeds ever done or chronicled have surprised nobody more than the doers, who, "lifted out of themselves," have become heroes in the twinkling of an eye.

Leaving to psychologists and scientists the much discussed question of whether the sublimated self, unsuspected but latent tendencies, or a power quite outside the personality wields the unseen wand that at the wonderful moment makes of the ordinary man or woman something fine and noble and worth reverence, it is worth noting that the heroic impulse is swayed by no recognizable laws of education, social standing or altruism. The giving of the Carnegie, Weaver and other medals and rewards for heroic deeds calls renewed attention to the fact that the transforming heroic impulse glorifies alike all sorts and conditions of humanity's children. Young and old, rich and poor, vigorous and feeble, the learned and the uncultured, all receive honor in the lists of those admittedly heroic. The too often unrewarded, unrecorded heroes who go down to self-sacrificing death in the course of ordinary life and duty are drawn from equally varied ranks.

DIES TO SAVE WOMEN.

For specific examples, consider first the case of Louis Lieber, the New York chauffeur, who recently weighed his own life in the balance with the life chances of the two young women rushing toward him round a dangerous curve and pressed down their side of the scales. Not a man of good judgment, it may be deemed, perhaps not of much common sense, since he was taking a narrow cliff road at the rate of a mile a minute when fate confronted him with the "their life or mine?" problem. But a man of superb courage, beyond doubt.

It needed but a second for Lieber to decide that death is better than life under some circumstances. Steering his car straight at the face of the hill, knowing that the cruel rocks held no single chance of safety, he made a dramatic exit.

"Are the ladies safe?" were the only words he lived to utter. Yet Lieber previously had been considered quite an ordinary individual, by no means cast in heroic mold.

Such heroic deeds as this, moreover, are so numerous, so common as to attract but brief public attention. Forbes Robertson, the English actor, recently contributed to a volume entitled "The Bravest Deed I Ever Saw" his admiring account of the courageous act of an American fireman who rescued a woman from the third story window of a burning New York building under conditions of great personal danger. But scarcely a winter passes without some hero of the hook and ladder wagon coolly, almost unnoticed, facing a similar task.

HANDLES SHELL TO SAVE CREW.

Admiral Dewey in the same collection of true stories admits his inability to distinguish the superlative nobility of two of the many heroic deeds he personally has witnessed. One of them occurred in 1863, when Dewey was a midshipman on Farragut's temporary flagship, the Monongahela, then besieging Fort Hudson on the Mississippi River. A round shot from one of the heavy batteries cut the mainmast in two and fell on deck. No one knew whether or not it was a shell, since the old-time fuses were then used; there was immediate danger that it might burst and scatter gory destruction.

A brief, shocked pause and a member of the crew, strolling easily to the grim object, picked it up, threw it overboard, and returned quietly to his place. Such an incident, it may be remarked in passing, occurred at least twice during the Crimean War.

There are those who contend that deeds of sudden courage are performed on the spur of the moment, from pure impulse and therefore should be described as thoughtless rather than heroic. However this may be, the theory is invalid when applied to those examples of heroism that demand patience, continued suffering, a long wait or trial. Yet these are by no means uncommon. Every now and then, indeed, are told thrilling tales of some brave soul's slow struggle with danger or death.

SWIMS ASHORE WITH LINE.

A number of such instances came to light in connection with the severe storms that not long since swept over the United States, causing water disasters from Maine to California. Ed Jacobson, sailor on the barge Foster that went ashore during a fierce gale above the Portage Lake ship canal near Buffalo, saved six lives through quietly offering his own.

The surf ran high, the shore seemed distant. Slowly the boat pounded on toward the grim death that seemed relentlessly awaiting. No help was apparent, no salvation, no way of escape. Then Foster, taking the free end of a line in his teeth, dropped into the seething water, breasted it, now vainly, now with determined progress that seemed tortoiselike no less to the struggling swimmer than to the anxious eyes peering after him, fought, conquered, reached the land at last.

The line grimly retained during that terrific combat with wind and waves served as a means of communication with the wrecked vessel. Later the six remaining members of the crew rode safely ashore on a breeches buoy.

A lock tube of the Pennsylvania railroad tunnel, fifty feet below the surface of the earth, near the East avenue shaft in Long Island City, but a short time ago provided scene and background for the life sacrifice of three heroes who died in the effort to have their fellow workers.

These three men, George Chapman, J. Peers, and Michael Daly, were at breakfast when the compressed air in the telephone booth caused an explosion and sudden burst of flame. Fortunately, the hour being early, most of the working gang were taking the morning meal beyond reach of danger. The air pressure being about twenty pounds, several men were left in the tube as a matter of safety. These were the men who, to avert appalling disaster, ran back to put out the fire and were themselves shut out by a wall of smoke and flame. Four other heroes, among them Chapman's brother, George, tried to rescue the innocent victims, but were overcome by smoke.

Heroic deeds and examples might be multiplied indefinitely, feminine names no less than masculine appearing in great number. But where is the use of heaping proof upon conviction? Let it suffice, when pessimists decry humanity and its altruistic possibilities and capabilities, to remember how widespread and variform is the heroic impulse that leads men and women to sacrifice self for fellows, how frequent, how diversified its expression, how impressive the view of humanity thus attained.

A MONEY DRAIN.

Millions Sent to Europe Annually by the Immigrants to the United States.

Last year the enormous sum of $63,047,867 was sent from the United States to foreign countries in postoffice money orders, writes William E. Curtis from Washington, the greater part of it undoubtedly being contributions from foreign-born citizens to the support of their parents and families in the countries from which they came. There were 2,036,508 transactions, which shows an average of $21 for each money order sent. It may be assumed also that a considerable amount of it was intended to pay the passage of immigrants to this country, and that a large number of the 1,000,000 additions to our population during 1906 were brought over by that means.

During the last ten years the enormous sum of $288,721,000 has been sent from the United States to foreign countries in 14,194,481 postoffice money orders, which is an average of about $15 for each transaction. This is a tremendous drain upon the finances of the country, and as money orders are seldom used by persons of large means in regular business transactions, it is safe to say that almost the entire amount came out of the savings of the wage earners of the country. It is doubtful whether any other country could have sustained such a drain.

The increase during the ten years ending 1906 has been phenomenal. Three times as many postoffice orders were sent abroad in 1906 as in 1897, and they represented five times as much money. The following statement will show the number of orders issued each year during the last ten years and the amount of money represented by them:

	Orders Issued.	Value.
1897	944,135	$13,588,379
1898	955,344	12,259,769
1899	983,501	13,744,770
1900	1,102,067	16,749,018
1901	1,247,888	20,072,614
1902	1,311,111	22,974,473
1903	1,914,149	35,237,[illegible]
1904	2,208,844	42,550,151
1905	2,506,384	47,516,028
1906	2,036,503	63,074,867

A Parisian justice, before whom a farmer brought suit to recover damages because his horse was frightened by a motor car, has held that farmers' horses ought to be too familiar with the sight of a motor carriage to shy at one, and if the farmers had no motor cars on hand to supply the object lesson, so much the worse for the peasants, added the Solomonic magistrate.

DEMAND FOR HONEST MEN.

SHOULD COMPEL UNION AGITATORS TO RESPECT LAW.

Those Belonging to Union Organizations Should Assert Themselves and Not Leave Control of Things in the Hands of the Labor Demagogues.

The movement toward unionism in all departments of industry has had some very awkward results for the working people who have participated in the movement for their own improvement. The agitating class has come to the front much faster than the honest workman. The latter, knowing his value in the industrial world, has apparently believed that his rights and value would work out in time and allow him to come into his own. In this he is entitled to the greatest degree of respect. At the same time he is not doing the best thing possible for himself. His failure to assert himself has given the demagogue the chance and the union movement has come into disrespect. The Times has frequently pointed out this fact.

A couple of weeks ago because of the inability of the United Railroads of San Francisco to satisfy the people with the running of the street cars, a mob attacked the employés on the cars, thus giving the labor unions of that city a splendid opportunity to denounce the act and show their own respect for law and order. They did not do this. The Labor Council adopted a set of resolutoins deploring the misdirection of public indignation and requesting that hereatfer all manifestations of dissatisfaction be directed against the officials of the railroad company, thus excusing the manifestation. The Labor Council would stand better in the eyes of the outside world if it had denounced the act for what it was—the cowardly deed of a mob.

But the Labor Council goes on to say that under such circumstances the carmen ought to stand still and do nothing, making no attempt to protect the property and passengers entrusted to their care or to enforce the rules which they are paid to enforce, or object to the open violation of the city ordinances governing street car traffic. And the Labor Council not only advises carmen to take that course, but objects to allowing the companies to employ special police to do what the regular police force could not possibly do without double the number authorized by the charter—that is, give proper protection to innocent passengers occupying the cars. In other words, the Labor Council would leave San Francisco at the mercy of any mob which may take a notion to hurl paving stones at cars full of passengers.

Another significant instance of this spirit occurred in Chicago the other day at the conclusion of the trial of Cornelius Shea for conspiracy. Shea and his associates paraded the streets in a tally-ho coach, flaunting the inscription: "The Sympathetic Strike Is Legal—Shea Jury." Considering that the conclusion of the jury was simply that there was no evidence to show that Shea and his fellow defendants had conspired to injure the business of Montgomery Ward & Co., this was a very rank way of stating the outcome. But it was nothing compared to Shea's noisy assertion that "the jury decided that the streets belonged to the teamsters."

What the teamsters meant when they said that the streets "belong" to them is that they are entitled to maim, or possibly kill, people they don't like in times of industrial struggle in which they are taking part. Now the question of violence was not directly before the court at all. The conspiracy alleged was not even a conspiracy to commit violence. It was a conspiracy "to injure business," and it was decided on that basis.

It was a matter of common knowledge at the time of the strike that many crimes of violence were committed, which all formed part of a system of crime in connection with the strike. It is a pity that direct trials for these crimes did not follow and that prompt punishment was not inflicted.

If the teamsters or any other citizens believe that they have been encouraged by the jury to commit crime it is unfortunate for them, since all the more rigid methods to restrain them will be necessary in the event that they proceed to put their belief in practice.

There are enough honest, law-abiding working people in the union organizations of this country to put an end to this reign of the agitators and irresponsibles, and until they do assert themselves and demand that such evidences of hostility to the law come to an end unionism is bound to be held in far less respect than will otherwise be the case. And while this condition continues the honest, law-abiding workingmen are tarred with the same stick as is the agitator, and unionism is bound to be considered antagonistic to the law and everything that stands in the way of accomplishing any wild scheme the agitators in charge may attempt. Can the honest workingmen of this country afford this?

BITS OF VERSE.

"I Mused on Death."

I mused on death and immortality;
I sought to peer beyond the gates of birth;
I raised my eyes above the din and dearth,
Where groping man with curse and misery
Toils on for naught; I sent myself to see
What lies beyond the utmost cape and firth
Of mortal bound, perchance the bourne of earth
Where souls of men abide when they are free.

I soared exulting o'er the Milky Way
And winged along the gulfs by swirl and star,
And joyed to think that, when the hours were o'er,
The now and here, the noisome night and day
I should forget—and thus with eyes afar
I missed the beggar piteous at my door.
—[Fred Lewis Pattee in Atlantic Monthly.

Unsung.

As sweet as the breath that goes
From the lips of that white rose,
As weird as the elfin lights
That glimmer of frosty nights,
As wild as the winds that tear
The curled red leaf in the air,
Is the song I have never sung.
In slumber, a hundred times
I've said the enchanted rhymes.

But ere I open my eyes
This ghost of a poem flies;
Of the interfluent strains
Not even a note remains.
I know by my pulse's beat
It was something wild and sweet,
And my heart is strangely stirred
By an unremembered word.

I strive, but I strive in vain,
To recall the lost refrain.
On some miraculous day
Perhaps it will come and stay;
In some unimagined spring
I may find my voice and sing
The song I have never sung.
—[Thomas Bailey Aldrich.

Hotel Pleasanton

Is More Than What The Name Suggests

Mr. E. R. Parmelee, who for four years was proprietor of the Gray Gables, and owner of the Rookwood at one time, has now moved into his new Hotel Pleasanton, at 1120 South Grand avenue. It is a three-story brick building, just finished, built especially for him, in fact he materially assisted the architect in the lighting and planning of the same.

He has seventy-five large rooms, aside from a dining room, seating 120; free billiard and smoking rooms, large parlors and lobbies, all finished in hardwood floors, best decorations. All the rooms are steam heated, telephones in each room, in fact everything is strictly first-class, and Mr. Parmelee wishes to announce to all his former guests that he can now accommodate them, and give them the best of service.

This is one of the few of the family and tourist hotels that is good in every way, excellent cuisine, American plan only. Mr. Parmelee makes everybody feel at home, and no doubt will shortly have a "full house."

Pigs did die before butchering day, and all men were not good. After I went to Wisconsin my boyhood was over, and looking back I who remained enlisted for ninety days, with the understanding that all should be privates. Our principal service was in Tennessee. Later I raised a company, was elected captain, and went to the frontier to watch the Indians, and there I shot buffalo and antelopes. I have always loved the prairies and the mountains—the wilds where I can fish and hunt big game. My father sent me Sharswood's 'Blackstone,' and, shut away from the world by snow and storms, I learned it almost by heart in self-defense.

"Nowadays lawyers don't study 'Blackstone'?"

BLACKSTONE AND SMITH.

"I know his 'Commentaries' are not used in some of our best law schools, but he wrote a classic with which every educated man should be familiar. A lawyer can't read too much in the literature of his profession. Certainly he should be familiar with the Old Testament. Several years ago some one sent me Smith's 'Analysis of the Bible.' The author had made an orderly collection of all that laws of Moses, and I found chapters on parents and children, on husbands, wives, and divorces, and on pledges, loans, mortgages, and usury. I am old-fashioned enough to believe that both 'Blackstone' and Smith will do any lawyer a great deal of good."

"You went to Hudson to practice law. It was a small town in the Wisconsin woods. Why did you go there?"

"My father once asked me that very same question. After I left the army I read law, was admitted to the bar, and practiced for a time in Madison. But I wanted to be alone. As I told my father, I might sit far into the night to work out a point of law, and when I developed it at the trial next day, court, bar, and the public would deny every particle of credit and give it all to him. Hudson was near the Minnesota border. Great lumbering interests were near at hand and the soil was fine for crops. I am glad I went there. At Madison I, like the rest of the lawyers, leaned on the law library for everything. At Hudson I was compelled to depend upon myself. I didn't starve, but soon had a good business. Furthermore, I never became a one-client practitioner."

"It was at Hudson that you made your reputation as a lawyer and came into relations with railways. How did your railway practice start?"

"The Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omana road wanted to cross St. Croix Lake and river. Piles had been driven and work was being done on the drawbridge, when the lumbermen at Stillwater, Minn., declaring the improvement to be an obstruction to navigation, came out in a steamboat and tried to pull down everything that had been built. At this juncture I was called into the case. I found that the railroad company had no right to build over a navigable stream. Congress hadn't authorized it, and a recent statute of Minnesota definitely prohibited it. The Stillwater people couldn't get service on any officer of the road, but I promised to have the general manager appear on the middle of the lake, where the jurisdiction of Wisconsin and Minnesota was concurrent. So the papers of injunction were served, but work on the drawbridge was pushed right along. I filed a petition in the State courts of Minnesota to have the case taken to the United States Court. When we got before the Federal judge the drawbridge was built. I claimed that the United States Court could not punish for contempt when the disobedience was against the orders of a State court. So the bridge stood, and in a short time the people of Stillwater were not only reconciled to the improvement, but were heartily in favor of it. I was appointed general counsel for the road at $3000 a year, but gave up the place later. I was a general lawyer, and couldn't afford to sacrifice my growing practice."

"I have head that you made immense fees in your profession."

MIND AGAINST MIND.

"Oh, I could have become rich, I fancy, but I have never been economical. Furthermore, I practiced law because I loved it and not because I wanted money. I love my profession now above everything else. Contest always attracted me, not the vulgarity of combat, but the intellectual exercise which comes when one mind is matched against another. I began to debate at college, where we had a censor who noted our style, grammar and argument. As a student I liked to work out questions and to study the other side. It was so when I became a lawyer."

Physiognomically, the John Colt Spooner of the Senate, had almost vanished. There are at least two distinct personalities in this famous man's vivid and ingenuous face. They come and go with moods, lights, shadows, and positions. The brown, prickly hair, always apparent in his photographs, was now rubbed flat upon his neck and head. Memory was traveling an almost forgotten road. Back in the briers of forgetfulness, in the twisted jungles of past struggles, triumphs, and disasters, recollections swept along in the joy of rediscovery and liberated discourse from repression and conventionality.

"I haven't talked this way in years and never to a writer, but I shall go on, trusting you to safeguard me against indelicacy. I was saying that I liked to study the other side. I recall that I had brought a long lawsuit to an end and was gathering up my papers when another case came on. Two able lawyers were suing on a note. A good man, but a little dull and slow, represented the defense. It was a small matter in dollars and cents. A reaper company had sold a note against a farmer to a third person. The lawyer for the farmer asked me to help him get the case to the jury. He said he would have no trouble after that because he could show the reaper to be worthless. I looked at the note and found that it was not only a promise to pay, but also a contract and that the title of ownership was not with the purchaser until full payment had been made. I took the ground that the note was not a negotiable paper and argued for an hour. The other side answered. I replied. In the end the court upheld me.

NULLIFIED $72,000 IN CLAIMS.

"Then I went about my business. My partner had side-whiskers, which he pulled when he was excited or perplexed. I told him what I had done. He began to walk the floor and pluck at his whiskers. 'What is the matter?' I asked. 'Matter! matter!' he cried, in his thin, complaining voice, 'we have $72,000 of those reaper notes in our safe for collection, and you have made it impossible for us ever to get another cent.' You see, I never knew much about the collecting branch of our business. However, I didn't care. I was right, and had made my point."

"How were you drawn into politics?"

"The big days at Hudson were over, and I was debating whether to move to St. Paul, Milwaukee, or Chicago. While at Nantucket for the summer Blaine was nominated for President. I had heard him make a speech and been entranced by his brilliancy as an orator. He used few gestures, but his language was so chaste and apt and his thought so clear that he enthralled me. I would have done anything for him. Returning to Wisconsin, having little to do and wanting to show my feeling for Blaine, I made campaign speeches all over the State.

"I had no thought of office. After the election in November, however, there was talk of me for the Senate. I was appalled. Clay, Webster, and other eminent men in our history came into my mind as I thought of my own incompetency. Moreover, great questions were coming up. Now my fear in the matter was perfectly natural. I didn't understand that the big things in Congress don't come at once. In public life, as elsewhere, it is not so hard once you get the hang of the barn. Members of the Legislature sent me word, the movement grew, and finally I wanted to be elected. As I told Mr. Spooner, 'I didn't sleep the night before the caucus for fear I shouldn't be nominated, and I lay awake all night after the caucus, because I had been nominated.'

"Six years later I was beaten for reelection. School legislation in Wisconsin drove the Lutherans and Catholics out of the Republican party. In 1892 I was unanimously nominated for Governor, but was defeated. Then I practiced law in Madison, had a large business, and was satisfied. I believed and hoped my political career was at an end. On the day following the election of 1896 my son came into my private office with a copy of the Milwaukee Sentinel, in which were letters from many of the members-elect of the Legislature, saying they would vote to return me to the Senate. The following issue of the Sentinel contained more letters. I had made no effort whatever to reënter public life, but the unsolicited and almost unanimous action of the Legislature pleased me, and I would have been ungrateful and freakish had I declined to be a candidate. I was nominated and elected. Every Republican voted for me.

DECLINED A RE-ELECTION.

"In July, 1900, I wrote a letter to my party in Wisconsin, in which I said that under no circumstances should I again be a candidate for the Senate. Mrs. Spooner was fatally ill, so the physicians informed me, but might live for a number of years. I decided to give my whole thought and time to her. However, her health slowly improved, whereupon my enemies asked me to foreswear the Senate once more, while my friends vigorously begged me to withdraw the letter I had written. Between the renouncers and the recanters my name was drawn into discusions and struggles in which I actually had no part and concerning which I was ignorant. I have never attempted to interfere in the legislation of Wisconsin. I did not oppose the policies of Gov. La Follette, although, I did not approve his whole scheme for primary elections, especially the clause which gives nominated candidates sole authority to fabricate Republican doctrine and embody it in a platform. Nor did I write another letter; I had gone as far as I could with dignity. Moreover, I was under fire. So in January, 1903, I was given every Republican vote in the Legislature and elected a third time to the Senate."

"What is your philosophy concerning success?"

"Define success and I shall answer. Does it lie in making money? Some think so. To my mind it is the doing of every duty, whether one is a lawyer, doctor, or shoemaker—every duty as a citizen, husband, and father. Then I would add hard, sustained, and enthusiastic work. Mathew Hale Carpenter was said to be a genius, but he was a drudge. He toiled all night, and inspiration was never more to him than a frame into which to put his finished pictures. Ask any capable blacksmith, prosperous merchant, or skilled physician to define success, and he will tell you that it is conscientious attention to the business one likes and a good memory."

"It is said you do not write your speeches, but think them out while on your feet."

NEVER WRITES HIS SPEECHES.

"I never write a speech, but I do give it much reflection and painstaking preparation. However, a set address, like a eulogy upon a dead Senator, may be put down on paper."

"How would you define public opinion?"

"I would give it two stages. The first is easily wrong. The second is almost sure to be sound, and is as near to the perfection of mortal judgment as can be obtained. The fathers created our legislative system in the knowledge of human nature. When they made the Senate the second thought of the country they knew it would be unpopular. Fresh from the campaigns of every two years, the House may be unwise and hasty. And the Senate has proved the wisdom of the fathers."

"Do any dangers menace the country?"

"None except, perhaps, the invasion of the rights given to States by the Constitution. Bills were recently before Congress to govern child labor, to tax inheritances, and to limit the capitalization of local corporations. These matters belong to the States, and it is dangerous to drag them into Congress. Many things are being suggested nowadays which are not in the interest of revenue for the country, but which are intended to be attacks upon swollen fortunes. Now what is a swollen fortune? One man may say $100,000. Another man may laugh at any limit. What surveyor in economics is to run the lines and make a map which will satisfy the common sense of the nation?"

CITY LAUGHS AT MAYOR DUNNE.

MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP IDEAS AGAIN REBUKED.

English Employed by Chicago's Head Reports on Foreign State Owned Telephone Systems, Showing Them to Be Conducted Without Ability or Success.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, March 6.—Mayor Dunne has received another stinging rebuke in his efforts to instill municipal ownership ideas into the minds of the citizens. It came in the shape of a statement by Walter Burgess, the English telephone expert, whom the Mayor had asked to investigate and report on foreign state and municipality-owned telephone systems.

When Mr. Burgess's report, which was filled with pictures of the telephone plants of Europe owned by states and municipalities, was given to the members of the local Council Committee on Gas, Oil and Electric Light, who are struggling with the Chicago telephone system, they were convulsed with laughter at the rich humor contained in it.

The telephone systems in London, Paris, Berlin, Stockholm, Glasgow and Switzerland were described, and it was the unanimous verdict of the Aldermen that if Chicago was inflicted with a telephone system like the ones in vogue in London and Paris, the citizens would arise en masse and destroy the City Hall and all of its inhabitants.

Mr. Burgess said that the service in London was so bad that sometimes one had to wait an hour for a connection; that the Postmaster-General of Great Britain held an absolute monopoly on all telephone and telegraph lines, and that the government was paid a percentage of 10 per cent. on the gross receipts, the profits to the city of London in 1906 amounting to only $48,240.

"Only 3 per cent. of the receipts were set aside for depreciation, a ridiculously small sum," said Mr. Burgess, "and if a sufficient sum had been set aside the result would have shown that the telephone lines were conducted at an enormous loss."

Pictures of the telephone system in Paris, which is owned by the government, caused the most merriment on the part of the Aldermen. Mr. Burgess was perfectly serious in his report, but his description of the situation was full of unconscious humor. He said that the Parisian telephone girls were under civil service, but that they sat and read, talked and gossiped all day and did everything but answer signals.

If a girl puts in thirty years continuous service she is entitled to a pension of $148.68. If she works for forty years, the pension is $200 per year. No girl under 18 years of age can work in a Parisian exchange.

"Paris is the laughing stock of the world in regard to telephones," said Mr. Burgess. "The citizens have a publication, which is issued every month, and is devoted solely to complaints against the telephone service."

Mr. Burgess said that in London on one occasion he called up Glasgow, Scotland, and could not get a good connection. He complained and then remained on the line half an hour and listened to the young lady in the London exchange quarrel with the girl in Glasgow about who was at fault.

"An operator in Paris cannot marry without the consent of the department, and all operators are forbidden to marry members of the police force," said Mr. Burgess. No explanation of this rule was given. Mr. Burgess said that the plant in Glasgow, Scotland, which had been referred to by Mayor Dunne as an example of splendid municipal work, was no longer a municipal enterprise, and that it had been sold to private parties at a loss of $200,000 to the city.

In Berlin and throughout Germany, he said, the telephone system is state owned and operated as a branch of the imperial postal service.

"The service," continued Mr. Burgess, "is cumbersome and slow, but is satisfactory after a connection has once been obtained. The capital investment for the whole of the telephone system was $67,513,000, and the statistics for 1903, the latest published, show: Receipts, $111,625,538; expenses, $99,149,221; surplus, $12,476,317.

"In Stockholm, also, the telephone systems are principally in the hands of the state. There is but one large private company which carries on business in Stockholm. This city has the best-developed telephone system in Europe."

An Absent-Minded Man.

"I guess I had the most absent-minded man in the world in my chair this morning," said a Seventeenth street barber yesterday. "He came in and sat down near the door to wait his turn. I yelled 'next' at him two or three times when my chair was vacant, but he was dreaming and didn't hear me. Finally I touched him on the shoulder and told him I was ready for him.

"'What do you want me to do?' he asked.

"'Why, get in the chair, if you want anything,' I replied. 'This is a barber shop.'

"'Oh, yes,' he said, and then he got into the chair. He leaned back, so I let the chair down and shaved him. He didn't have a word to say. When I finished him up he got out of the chair and took the check over to the cashier. He paid and started out. When half way through the door he stopped.

"'Say,' he said to me, 'what did you do to me?'

"'I shaved you,' I said.

"'Darn the luck,' he replied, 'I wanted a haircut.' Then he went out, scowling."—[Denver Post.

School Children's Savings Banks.

School children in Columbus, O., according to a report from that city, during the last four years, through the penny savings system, have accumulated $33,000, or over $100 apiece for the 2700 who have taken out savings bank books. The result of the system speaks for itself. It is simple in its workings and based on regular banking rules.

A child which had $100 to its account, representing the savings of four years, saved $25 annually, a little over 10 cents a day, by the school reckoning of five days a week. Many children do not have 10 cents a day to spend, or even 10 cents a week, but many do, and there are numerous ways for small boys and girls to earn odd pennies to swell a fund similar to that of the Columbus children.—[Milwaukee Sentinel.

CORDIAL WAS THE WELCOME.

Brilliant Reception to the Japanese Squadron.

Honolulu's Greeting Delights Her Visitors.

Interesting News from Mid-Pacific Territory.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

HONOLULU, Feb. 26.—Had anybody ever suspected that ill-feeling existed between the Japanese and other residents of Hawaii, it would at once have been dispelled at the reception given a few evenings ago by Consul-General Saito, the officers of the Japanese Merchants' Association and the manager of the Honolulu branch of the Yokohama Specie Bank, in honor of Admiral Tomioka and the officers of the Japanese squadron, in the reception hall of the new Japanese consulate-general. It carried the memories of many of those who attended back to the days of the last of the Kamehamehas and the court levees and military functions of that and a later time. The affair was one of the most brilliant that has been held in Honolulu for many years, the large hall being crowded with navy and army officers in full dress uniforms, with the members of the consular corps decorated with their orders, with handsomely gowned ladies and the representatives of the old aristocratic families of the city.

The occasion, too, was a historic one, being the formal opening of the Japanese Consulate-General, the only consular building owned by any foreign government in Hawaii. The hall was beautifully decorated with the flags of all nations, draped about the walls, while the Stars and Stripes and the Rising Sun were entwined in the alcove before which Consul Saito and Admiral Tomioka received the guests. Along the front of the hall the cadets from the fleet were drawn up, standing at attention throughout the reception.

There were a great number of persons present during the evening. Among these were Gov. and Mrs. Carter, Secretary A. L. C. Atkinson, the heads of the various government departments, the Federal and Territorial officials, Admiral Very and the officers of the naval station, Maj. Van Vliet and the officers of Camp McKinley, the Supreme and Circuit Court judges, the members of the various consular corps, a large number of representative Japanese and many of the leading professional and business men of the city.

ROJESTVENSKY'S CAPTOR.

Among the visiting officers of the Japanese squadron now in Honolulu is the captor of Admiral Rojestvensky, the commander of the great Baltic fleet which was destroyed by Admiral Togo in the battle of the Sea of Japan. The young officer to whom the Russian commander surrendered his sword is Sub-Lieut. Tsukamoto, who wears a special medal, pinned on his breast by his Emperor in honor of his achievement.

Lieut. Tsukamoto was one of the officers of the topedo boat destroyer Satoma. After the guns of the Japanese battleships had silenced the Russians, the Satoma pursued the Russian torpedo ... destroyer Bedovi, firing as she followed. Finding flight useless the Russians struck their colors and ran up a white flag as a token of surrender. As it was learned later this flag of defeat was a white tablecloth, now carefully preserved as a relic in the Naval Department at Tokio.

It was not known to the crew of the Satoma, that among their prisoners aboard their prize was the admiral, for whose coming the thousands in the Russian armies in the field had been hoping and watching. The young officer was rowed to the Bedovi and called upon the officer in command to hand over his sword. In the saloon he found a wounded officer, his uniform showing him to be of high rank. Inquiries brought the information that the officer was Rojestvensky, who had been wounded while fighting on board his flagship and who had been taken on board the Bedovi with orders to proceed to the nearest port of safety.

Upon Rojestvensky a formal demand of surrender was made by the Japanese lieutenant and the sword of the admiral was silently handed to him. Then he saw that everything possible for the wounded officer was done.

SHOWN EVERY COURTESY.

There is one thing to be said of the Japanese sailors who are now in port. Though they visit every part of the city by hundreds, there has not been one instance of rioting, disturbance, drunkenness or unseemly conduct on their part. In fact, the general comment is that they have been more orderly than American sailors when they get ashore. The cruisers have been thrown open to visitors of all nationalities. Special invitations were sent to members of the Legislature, tropical delicacies have been hauled to the docks by drayloads for the use of those on board the vessels. On Washington's Birthday all three of the cruisers were decorated from stem to stern and at noon they fired an official salute. The Japanese admiral and other officers reviewed the floral parade and have received every attention at the hands of American officials and American citizens, and President Roosevelt has every reason for gratification at the treatment accorded the visitors from the Orient on the only American territory which they have yet visited. More could not have been done even by his special direction.

HONOLULU'S FLOWER FEST.

Honolulu's annual floral parade was held on Washington's Birthday. The crowds that thronged the streets were delighted with the general effect of the affair and only words of commendation were heard. The automobile division was naturally the most striking feature for the opportunity of showing originality and beauty of decoration were greater than any other division afforded. Last year the Japanese automobile entry was one of the most handsome and richest of the decorated cars, but this year, had it not been for Gov. Carter's act in placing his machine at the disposal of the visiting Japanese squadron, there would have been no representative of Japan in the parade.

There was one float by the Kilohana Art League, a Temple, in which were young women representing the various forms of art, and it was the most artistic thing of the kind that has ever been shown here.

There was a most striking array of pa-u riders, an imposing cavalcade. The women rode well and handled their horses with much skill. At intervals, this division galloped, which showed the flowing pa-us, making a very effective feature of the display. The majority of the pa-u riders wore the royal yellow color of pa-u.

AS TO IMMIGRATION.

"Hawaii is a country that invites very little voluntary immigration of white races," says the annual report of the Territorial Board of Immigration. "We are isolate, transportation is expensive and the extent of the country is not great enough to attract much attention or to create any extensive immigration from Europe. Without some artificial stimulus the influx of settlers, other than Japanese, would be very small.

"Of all the nationalities of immigrants brought to this country, the Portuguese from the Azores and Madeira Islands have proved the best as citizens and laborers; they have shown themselves to be an industrious, thrifty and law-abiding element in the population.

"In the past," continues the report, "first consideration has been given to supplying the plantations with needed labor, and too little attention given to obtaining a permanent laboring population which, while independent, so far as homes and property are concerned, would be as dependent upon the prosperity of the country as their employers."

The predominance of the sugar industry is acknowledged and the necessity of importing labor largely with a view of supplying the plantations is recognized, but such labor should be domiciled. The laborer should be given a stake in the country—a home where he can be independent and not subject absolutely to the orders of another man.

In conclusion, the report gives the opinion of the board that the movement is beginning along the right lines, the population coming in is permanent and steady and, if the plantations can see their way clear to enlarge upon the domiciling plan and extend, wherever feasible, a share-planting and cultivating system, the labor problem of Hawaii is in a fair way to be solved.

Gov. Carter has asked the Legislature to make an appropriation for immigration purposes, and for the appointment of a Territorial Commissioner, thus placing the workings of the board under Territorial supervision instead of in the hands of the plantation interests, as has hitherto been the case.

NOT COMING TO COAST.

The movement of Japanese laborers to Pacific Coast ports of the United States has been absolutely stopped, the steamship companies refusing to sell tickets, and, of course, losing the large revenue formerly derived from this source. Porto Rican laborers, who recently went to the Coast owing to the higher wages offering there, are returning, as the climate has been too cold for them.

ITALY LOVES HELEN GOULD.

BESTOWED CHECKS DURING HER STAY IN FLORENCE.

Was Especially Interested in the Florentine Medical Missions, of Which an American Woman, Miss Bancroft Davis, Is One of the Leading Workers.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

FLORENCE, Feb. 19.—Helen Gould, who is touring Italy with her cousin, Miss Campbell, and her secretaries and courier, has been making the sights of the country a second consideration to her interest in the charities carried on by the Anglo-Saxon abroad. In Florence, her stay at the Grand Hotel was an occasion long to be remembered by the many who profited by her generosity. Her first interest was, of course, the Young Women's Christian Association, and her letter of introduction was from the Hon. Emily Kinnaird to Mrs. Goldstream, wife of Florence's well-known Scotch physician, who was a delegate to the last summer's Medical Convention in America.

Mrs. Goldstream, the prime mover in the Y.W.C.A. in Florence, conducted Miss Gould to the charities she visited. The Young Women's Christian Association in Florence, having been ejected from its rented premises by an order of the government, which appropriated the building for offices, is without a home, and possessed of none of the possibilities a good building gives. Miss Gould grasped the situation and presented a check, which has caused much rejoicing, though its amount is not to be told.

Florence possesses, also, a most excellent Medical Mission, conducted by Miss Roberts and a number of coworkers, among them one American, Miss Bancroft-Davis. Miss Gould, with Miss Campbell and one secretary, Miss Coutt, paid this institution a long and attentive visit, inspecting the laboratory, the operating-room and various appointments, and remaining to the afternoon service conducted by the Baptist minister, Rev. Robert Walker.

Miss Roberts's description of her work especially interested Miss Gould, one distinguishing feature of this being the use of hyperdermic injections of guaiacol for incipient consumption and of quinine and strychnine for malaria and anaemia, a form of treatment fought shy of as yet in America and England, but resulting in remarkable cures at this Mission. So interested was Miss Gould that she invited the secretary and treasurer to a visit to her hotel, discussing the work most thoroughly and emphasizing her interest by a gift which Miss Roberts designates as "very generous and handsome."

The third charity to interest her is one of the most appealing in Florence. On the Borgognissanti is an old theater now used as a Baptist church. In its rear still stands the stage and green rooms and here certain philanthropic members of the Y.W.C.A. have established a small bathing establishment, where, on every Saturday they bathe the little children of very poor women, who, being at work, have no time for such a duty. The little ones are plunged into warm baths, rubbed down and then arrayed in clean clothes washed by the Mission, while the discarded garments are kept for Monday's wash and the following Saturday's dressing.

A meal of warm soup follows the dip into Bethesda, as the ladies have humorously called their Mission. The little ones improve wonderfully in health and complexion and so touched was Miss Gould by this pretty charity that she made happy also its originator, Mlle. Juliette Fontanieu, one of the teachers in the well-known Deaconess's Schools in Florence.

A fourth philanthropy made its demand upon the sympathy and generosity of Miss Gould, "Les Amies des Pauvres," a society founded in 1896 for the purpose of giving work to poor women. The women in question receive work on certain days, take it home and make it up returning for payment. If they like they can buy the garment for the cost of the material, which plan necessarily entails a deficit of the cost of the work. Again Miss Gould made things easier for the ladies of this charity who, with all the others with whom she came in contact, were much delighted with her quiet understanding of their work and her broad spirit of sympathy with all that is being done for the unfortunate.

Commander Alexander Sharp, who has just returned from a two years' cruise on the Chattanooga, has the record of not having put an enlisted man in irons during his cruise. This is said to be unprecedented in naval records and is not only a tribute to Commander Sharp's firm belief that this form of punishment is degradation to the man undergoing it, but to the general content and happiness on his ship.

WHAT'S SAID IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Not Everybody Pleased With Capital Removal Idea.

Club Women Glad They Did Not Say "Yes" to Beer.

Political Gossip of the City of Many Sensations.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, March 4.—The efforts of an indicted political boss to avoid trial on the charge of extortion has not only shattered the reputation of the eel as the most slippery thing on earth, but has also blackened the name of a jurist. The "alcoholic atmosphere" of a certain courtroom is now common talk; and a reporter of a local paper writing of its presiding genius says: "I saw him, smelled him and touched him. I can testify that he was drunk—dangerously drunk." Caesar came, saw and beat Vercingetorix, but he never admitted that he touched him.

The plan of moving the State capital has already loosened the floodgates of sectional dissensions and before a vote of the State is taken next year the people will be heartily sick of the whole matter. Berkeley has a bad enough name already as a dry town without doubly damning it by putting the Legislature too near the deaf, dumb and blind asylum. Furthermore the Capitol building would be too far away from the powder works in case indignant taxpayers wished to get rid of a useless army of tax-eaters without invoking the tedious process of the law.

The clean-up this week was not that of the administration, but of the streets, and the figures read so well in the papers the next day that many citizens who were sick at home or had to visit their mother-in-law in the country now solemnly declare that they spent Sunday sweeping away the dirt from in front of the property of Millionaires Ruef, De Young, Phelan and Spreckels. The club ladies who blistered their hands passing out sandwiches and coffee to the workers are proudly conscious of duty done and are pleased with their refusal of Brewer Wreden's offer to substitute kegs of steam beer for the coffee.

It was no particular credit to Balboa that he discovered the Pacific, since it is so big it could not get away, and it is probable that he was a gross plagiarist, as millions of others had discovered it long before he was born. But be that as it may, there are a few misguided people in this city who wish to commemorate the alleged event by a world's fair as a sop to the memory of the deceased adventurer after whom one of our boulevards was once named but is now extinct, having been seized by some truck farmers to use for the cultivation of cabbages. Most of us are thinking that we have had troubles enough with fire and earthquake to last for years without having the burden of a world's fair thrust on us.

Curator Loomis of the Academy of Sciences in a recent talk with me told what great progress his institution had been making in the way of replacing the thousands of specimens lost in the fire. In order to insure the safety of the new collections he is planning to have them housed in a magnificent structure to be erected in the center of Golden Gate Park, where contiguous fires will trouble them not. The valuable property on Market street owned by the academy will be rented for commercial purposes and the money received therefrom used to purchase new mastodons made by nature and not by hand.

A correspondent of an Oakland paper saw some Japs saluting a countryman the other day and instantly his fertile imagination got to work on a story which he published at length that most of the little brown men here are soldiers in disguise. He is sure that there are several brigades of them ready at a signal to overcome our regular troops, seize the fortifications and by blocking the mountain passes keep help from coming to us from Washington. It reads well, but he seems to overlook the fact that if the newspapers can get fifty thousand of us out to clean the streets surely a hundred thousand would shake the saloons to clean up the Japs.

The penny arcades of late have become so numerous and meretricious that even the authorities are beginning to look into them and take some active steps for their suppression. The published proceedings of the Thaw trial have given a wonderful stimulus to the imagination of constant readers and as a consequence the business of the penny peepshows have increased greatly in the last month. There is no attempt whatsoever in the way of discrimination as to sex or age and the publicity of the indecent exhibitions would seem to indicate that immunity from arrest had been guaranteed the proprietors.

The suicide of one of our policemen because he could not pay his debts has encouraged many of his colleagues in the hope that they will get sympathy from the public in an attempt to have their salaries raised. They have petitioned the Supervisors to give them an increase of pay and in the event of a refusal they threaten to get enough signatures to a petition to submit the matter to a vote of the people. They may not have a sense of humor, but as a proof of their bravery they call attention to a duel in a saloon the other night between a policeman and a gambler in which their comrade stood up under fire and finally managed to arrest his man.

Sam Davis—not the Nevada humorist who joked himself into a fat State office—but Sam Davis, owner of one of our many fire-trap theaters, is indignant because some Celts bombarded his place of amusement and drove his actors and actresses from the stage with vegetables when they refused to cut out a racial caricature. The hostile demonstration was made when a glass of beer was offered a Mrs. McCluskey; and Davis (who is economical) thought his tormentors were angry because it was not champagne. PLUTO.

Successfully Predicted a Wreck.

The Mecklinburg Zeitung of Berlin prints a strange story from a member of the band on the German liner Prinzessin Victoria Louise, which was wrecked at Kingston, Jamaica. The bandsman tells how the disaster was predicted by a crystal gazer at New York.

An unknown man, who spoke English with a German accent, boarded the steamer while she was in New York harbor and brought 16 marks' worth of the vessel's picture postcards.

The steward expressed surprise at such a large order, and the man explained that he wanted to get mementos of a ship which would never return to her home port. Those who heard this laughed, whereupon the man produced a crystal, and after gazing against it, solemnly declared that the ship was doomed, but that the passengers and crew would be saved.

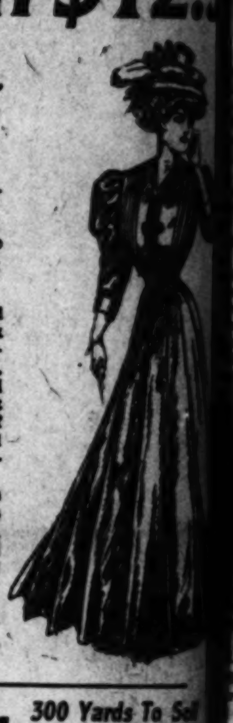
It's a sale we planned on and prepared for with all the energy and enthusiasm that backs up Broadway events and makes them different from others.

We weren't satisfied in seeing one maker and giving him an order, but our buyers made a canvass to find the very best tailors, and then we had a competitive contest and the ones that got up the most becoming and prettiest styles of the best material and tailored in the best way, won out.



Certainly they worked wonders, but even the silk wasn't good enough for certain of the suits we wanted, and we went out and picked out better silk and had that worked into suits, one of which you'll see pictured here. It's an exact reproduction.
